"Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple," by which St. John means himself. For he it was who was known unto the high priest, he whose love was so fervent as for him to go in with Jesus into the palace. This was after our Lord had interceded with the officers to let the disciples go. Ver. 8. It was when all the rest had forsaken Him, and fled. See Matth. 26. 56. It was out of desire to see the end, that St. Peter thus followed his Lord. And with this desire no doubt there was mixed up an affectionate regard for his Master. Yet whilst St. John seems to have stayed with Christ throughout, and certainly was with Him at the end; see ch. 19. 26; St. Peter we here read denied Him thrice. When the one went in with Jesus, into the palace of the high priest, the other stood at the door. When the one was standing by the Accused, the other was warming himself at the fire. When the one was at the foot of the cross, we hear not of the other at that painful post. Let us pray and strive that our love for Christ may hold out to the end, in whatever we undertake for his service. Let us not stay at the door. Let us not answer, when we are inquired of, as though we were ashamed to own the truth. And if ever we have been prevailed on so to do, or if in any way we have been overtaken in sin, least of all let us allow ourselves to enjoy at ease the fruit of our iniquity. Let us not stand with Peter at that fire, to which we have been admitted by the denial of our Lord. Let us not take to ourselves the credit we have gained by falsehood; let us not eat the bread we have earned by sabbath breaking; let us not be covered with clothes which have been purchased by fraud, extortion, or oppression.

Behold, whilst Peter stood thus at ease before the fire, Jesus was being questioned by the high priest, and buffeted by the hands of his officers. And perhaps it was what he saw or heard of his Master's sufferings, that inclined him, through cowardice, to persist in his denial. Such is the peace which "the world giveth." Ch. 14. 27. To be at ease in the midst of misery. To have no feeling for the pain which abounds around us, for the eternal wrath which is hanging over ourselves. To go on from day to day, without a thought of God, or a regard for Christ, without caring for the soul, or trembling for its salvation. To care for earth, though not for heaven; to love ourselves, though not our Lord; to be afraid of death, though not afraid of hell; to stand in awe of man, though not of God; such is the peace which "the world giveth." But whilst thus we lead a life of carelessness, thoughtlessness, and ease, the Lord who died for us suffers in our behalf. Again He hears the words of scorn. Again the blows are heaped upon his head. Again the nails pierce his hands and feet. We crucify Him afresh.

How greatly did it aggravate the sin of the apostle, that his Master, at the very moment of being denied by him, was enduring all these wrongs for his sake! How forcibly is the mention of Christ's sufferings introduced into the account of Peter's transgression! How affecting, how instructive is the contrast between the ease and negligence of the one, and the meekness and fortitude of the other! Immediately before what is here said of Jesus, Peter, we are told, stood with the servants, "and warmed himself." And immediately at the end it is repeated, "And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself." It was at that moment that "he denied it, and said, I am not." Oh, how much better had it been for him, to have been sharing the blows which were inflicted on our Lord! Oh, how much better must it ever be for us, instead of taking our pleasure with our neighbours, to be taking up our cross with Christ! Never let us be ashamed of his shame: never averse to "esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted;" but thankful to think, and forward to profess, that He was "bruised for our iniquities," and that "with his stripes we are healed." Is. 53. 4, 5.

Christ is questioned by Pilate.

28 ¹ Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto || the hall of judgment: and it was early; ² and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man?

30 They answered and said unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

32 ³ That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die.

33 ⁴ Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the king of the Jews?

34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?

35 Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done?

36 Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice.

38 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, I find in him no fault at all.

39 ⁵ But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the passover: will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

40 ⁶ Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

The Jews thought that they would be defiled by going into the judgment hall; so they led Jesus into it, and themselves stayed on the outside; and thought themselves no less qualified to eat the passover. As if there were not more of sin in accusing the innocent, than in entering into the hall of judgment! As if this stopping at the door, whilst they promoted the iniquity which was going on within, were not to strain at a gnat and to swallow a camel! See Math. 23. 24. How many are there guilty of a like mistake, in venturing up to the very threshold of offence, cherishing forbidden desires, harbouring revengeful or sullen thoughts; whilst they abstain from the act of wickedness, only out of the fear of man! Let us never try to go as nigh to sin as we suppose we safely may, but as far towards perfection as we possibly can. Let us neither enter the hall of unjust judgment, nor prefer an unjust accusation. Let us neither do the act of sin, nor sinfully desire to do it.

The Jews were not allowed by their Roman masters to inflict death on any one. And therefore they were unwilling to judge Jesus themselves, because they were resolved to judge Him worthy of death. Thus He was handed over to the judgment of the Romans. And as it was the practice of the Romans to punish malefactors, by nailing them to a cross, the saying of our Lord, that He should be lifted up, was thus exactly brought to pass. See ch. 12. 32. And by this means the entire innocence of our Lord was more thoroughly made manifest. For Pilate, acting as his judge, acknowledged that he knew nothing of the matter of accusation, and put it to Himself to accuse Himself; first asking Him, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" and then inquiring, "What hast thou done?" To this Jesus replied, that his kingdom was not of this world; observing that if it were, his followers would have been found using in his behalf the force of worldly arms. And this answer seemed to have satisfied Pilate, who after this first examination bare witness to his prisoner, "I find in him no fault at all." Which words should remind us how our Lord was a Lamb without spot, a man without sin, a perfect atonement for the sins of the whole world.

And on the other hand, it is set down against Barabbas, that he "was a robber." This shows us how thoroughly the Jews were prejudiced, how determined to put Christ to death; how glad to add this insult to his sufferings, that they preferred to save a robber's life. And what a preference was this, a robber whom they knew to be a robber, to One whose whole employment was doing good? What a preference is that which is often seen in the world, the wicked chosen and the good rejected! What a preference is ours, if ever we, in like manner, prefer evil to good, darkness to light, falsehood to truth! Far be it from us to choose with the people Barabbas instead of Christ, robbery and wrong instead of honesty and right! Far be it from us to ask with Pilate, "What is truth?" without meaning more than he did, to love it when we know it! Truth is the thing that really is. That God made all things, this is truth. That Christ redeemed all mankind, this is truth. That the Holy Ghost makes holy all God's people, this is truth. That sin leads of a certainty to hell, and holiness to heaven, this is truth. All this truth we know. For to this, and other truth akin to this, our Lord has borne faithful witness. All this truth we know. All this let us take pains to understand. All this let us rejoice to be assured of. All this let us prefer to the false suggestions of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

Lord, let us ask, not in scorn but prayer, Lord, what is truth? Tell us, for Thou only canst reveal it! Tell us, and incline us to hear thy voice! Tell us, and incline us to obey!

Christ answereth Pilate.

1 Then ¹ Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged him.

2 And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe,

3 And said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him.

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man!

6 When the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him:

for I find no fault in him.

7 The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God.

8 When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;

9 And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer.

10 Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

11 Jesus answered, Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin.

In Pilate we see the fearful consequences of loving the praise of men more than the praise of God. See ch. 12. 43. First he scourged Jesus, though he had before acknowledged, "I find in him no fault at all." Ch. 18. 38. And this indignity he seems to have inflicted with a view to satisfy the Jews, and to save the life of his prisoner. As if he might safely do so great wrong, nay, any wrong at all, in order to avoid doing a greater wrong! As if it were any more allowable to scourge, than to crucify, one in whom he could find no fault! Having inflicted this scourging, he suffered also the soldiers to mock and evil entreat our Lord, with a crown of thorns, and a purple robe, with blows, and with words of insult. For this, Pilate as well as they, must answer; since he who forbids not, and prevents not wrong, in those who are under his command, shares the guilt of the wrong that is committed. Let masters remember this of their servants, and parents of their children. And let all those who are under authority submit to those who are set over them, as in the Lord, in the exercise of power for the Lord's sake, with a view to the honouring of his name.

Pilate, having thus abused his authority, again testified in behalf of Jesus to the Jews, that He was faultless; and brought Him forth in his distressed condition, in the hope that the people would relent. "Behold the man!" Is this the man whom you accuse of setting up for a king? See how far He is from any such condition. Behold Him in captivity, in pain, in scorn. By such an artifice, instead of by plain dealing, did Pilate try to deliver the innocent. Never, where we have a duty to perform, may we seek to gain our object by hypocrisy! Never, when we have wrongs to redress, or right judgment to give, or the innocent to deliver or defend, never may we be ashamed to avow our principles, never afraid to declare the truth!

Pilate wishes not to crucify Christ; but see how entirely he consents to let the Jews do that, which he would not do himself. "Take ye him, and crucify him." He minded not their sinning, though he would not risk the being punished himself. How singularly is this conduct at variance with the affectionate declaration of St. Paul: "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren!" Rom. 9. 3. We can scarce commit any greater sin ourselves, than to let our brethren sin instead of us. We might as well crucify Christ afresh ourselves, as expose Him to be crucified by the world. The Jews answered to this proposal, that they might judge Jesus according to their law, He ought to die, and they would have Him put to death, "because he made himself the Son of God." And this answer having alarmed the governor, he inquired further of Christ whence He was. "But Jesus gave him no answer. Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?" Here was the great mistake of Pilate. He considered not that whatever he did as governor, he did it under the controul of an Almighty Being, as minister of an ordinance which was of God. This lesson, therefore, our Lord here teaches both him and us. "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin." Because magistrates have the sanction of divine authority, because it is from God that they derive their power, to be used for the benefit of man, therefore the abuse of it either by themselves or others is doubly sinful. Never let us then make public justice the implement of private malice. Never let us indulge our own evil passions, under the pretence of letting the law take its course. Never let us profess that it is out of a zeal for justice that we accuse the conduct of our brethren, when in truth it is out of our own anger, enmity or pride. To use the law or the magistrate for such purposes, is to use them for a cloak of iniquity. And the more excellent is the ordinance we abuse, and the more surely it is an ordinance of God, we have, in abusing it, "the greater sin."

Christ is crucified.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar.

13 When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14 And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar.

16 Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away.

17 And he bearing his cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

18 Where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

19 And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

21 Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written I have written.

Pilate here still presents to us the painful spectacle of a double-minded man, "unstable in all his ways." James 1. 8. The faithful rebuke which he had received from Jesus, ver. 11, made him again attempt "to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend." And in like manner, when Pilate once more put it to them, "Shall I crucify your King? the chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar." This they said, in order to work upon the fears of the governor; it being well known that the Cæsar who then reigned at Rome, was one of the most jealous and most cruel of mankind. "Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified." When he found his own interest likely to be concerned, this seems to have determined him more than any thing else. He thought no more of the justice or injustice of the case. He gave up the innocent to the malice of his enemies. Thus ended his endeavours to release Jesus. Thus end all good intentions which flow merely from kind feeling, and which are not founded on the love of God. They are too weak for competition against the fear of man. Whilst it ministers to our pleasure, or serves our purpose, we may prefer to do right. But when to do wrong is more agreeable or more profitable, then, if we be not netting on Christian principle, there is no hope that we shall do right any longer.

"And they took Jesus, and led him away." Behold, how they led Him! "he bearing his cross." They laid on Him the cross on which He was to suffer. They made Him carry to the place where He was to suffer, this instrument of a painful and shameful death. Behold, whither they led Him forth! "into a place called the place of a skull;" a place so called as being a place where malefactors were put to death, a place strewed perhaps with the bones of the deceased, or noted for having been once so strewed. There in this place of shame "they crucified him;" they nailed Him to the cross. "They crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." Now then we may say with Pilate, "Behold the man!" Ver. 5. See nailed to that cross, the hands that healed, the feet that went about doing good. The tongue which there cries aloud in agony, hearken, it is the same that used to speak in mercy, it is the same which will hereafter utter sentence on mankind! "Behold the man," or rather as Pilate expressed it afterwards, "Behold your King." The man they crucified is the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Let us endeavour to see Him, as He is, our King. Let us remember Him as One to whom we owe all duty, all allegiance. Let us serve Him not only with fear, but with love. For behold, it is for us that He is crucified.

Pilate having gratified the Jews in giving up our Lord to death, seems to have purposed to affront them, in the title which he wrote upon the cross: "JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS." This was written in three languages; a fact which accounts for its being written differently in the three Gospels where it occurs, it being taken probably in each from a different language. In this inscription, though the governor wrote the truth, he knew not the true meaning of what he said. He wrote the truth, without meaning the truth, without intending any honour to Jesus Christ. Thus fares it also with that formal worship, which is often offered by those Christians who crucify their Lord. They profess perhaps his faith aright; they may repeatedly declare that they believe in God, and in Jesus Christ his only Son, their Lord. They may acknowledge Christ for the King, not only of the Jews, but of themselves. And yet all their professions and all their prayers are but like this inscription, empty words, which draw down no blessing on the worshippers.

Lord, may we own Thee for our King, by loving to obey thy will! Lord, may we write upon thy cross, by our faith in thy merits, and by our zeal in thy work! May we write Thee our King! May we write ourselves thy subjects! And that which we have thus written from our hearts, Lord, let it be never blotted out!

Christ giveth up the ghost.

23 ¹ Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, || woven from the top throughout.

24 They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, 'They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

25 Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of * Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

26 When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son!

27 Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home.

28 After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, ² that the scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

Whilst Jesus was hanging on the cross, the soldiers were making spoil of his garments. This may remind us how often men are employed in heaping up riches by robbery and wrong, when they should be thinking of being saved through Christ on the cross. One portion of our Lord's dress they divided into four, "to every soldier a part." But because the coat was without seam, they were unwilling to rend it, and they therefore "cast lots for it, whose it should be." This may signify to us the iniquity of a practice very common amongst Christians, under the name of gaming. Play we call it, when men cast lots for that, which should clothe the naked and feed the hungry. Play we call it, when men stake on trifles the welfare of their immortal souls. For what less than this is hazarded, when time is wasted, and temper aggravated, and money coveted, and those means consumed on sinful pleasure, which, if they can be spared from necessary expense, should be devoted to Christian almsgiving?

From the covetousness and gambling of the soldiers, let us turn to observe what was the employment of our Lord, whilst He was yet hanging on the cross. Let us take his behaviour as a pattern for our own, under any affliction which it may please God to lay upon us. The first lesson we may hence derive is this, that in the midst of our own troubles, we should be mindful of the afflictions of our neighbours. And this point in our Lord's example is most important; for it is commonly to be observed that sorrow, or pain, or sickness, makes men fretful, and perverse, and selfish. We are apt to think that the convenience of all around us must give place to the relief of our more urgent distress. If ever we are thus tempted in our suffering to offend, let us bethink ourselves of Christ in the agony of the cross, turning with concern to his devoted mother, and to his beloved disciple, and saying to the one, "Behold thy son," and to the other, "Behold thy mother."

Secondly, we may here learn, that we ought to feel desirous, in all our sufferings, to fulfil the will of Almighty God. We should endeavour, whatever we have to suffer, we should endeavour, like our Lord, that the Scriptures may be fulfilled. They are the Word of God; and they have taught us that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." Heb. 12. 6. They have assured us that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor. 4. 17. Let us help towards its doing so, by endeavouring to bear affliction as God would have us. Let us receive it as his dispensation; and so use it, that it may redound to his honour. Then we shall bear cheerfully whatever He lays on us to be borne; and we shall thankfully acknowledge, when death itself shall come, that it is good for us to depart. Life, though it be full of trouble, will be full of hope. And death, though it be full of terror, will be also full of joy. "It is finished." Such were the last words our Saviour uttered. "It is finished." The Father's counsel is brought to pass. The Scriptures are fulfilled. The redemption of mankind is wrought. The power of the enemy is vanquished. The sufferings of the body are at an end. The moment of glory is at hand. Thus may we have grace to think of our own severest sufferings! Thus may we have grace to speak with our own dying breath!

And of this let us feel assured, that whether or no our will be thus resigned to the will of God, his will must surely be accomplished in us. The Scripture was fulfilled, not only by Christ purposely, but by the soldiers without their intending it. Their parting of his garments was as exact an accomplishment of the word of God, as his receiving the vinegar. Only herein lay the important difference, they designed their own pleasure, He desired to do the Father's will. And only herein will be the difference at the end; that whilst the will of God will be fulfilled in the endless joy of them that love his word, it will take effect no less certainly in the endless misery of such as love their own will only. Far be it from us then to resist his pleasure! Far be it from us to disbelieve his word! Far be it from us, in sufferings of our own, to be unconcerned for our brethren! Far be it from us to be cold or careless, to be wasteful, idle, or covetous, whilst we contemplate the sufferings and the death of Christ!

Christ is buried.

31. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs:

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water.

35 And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe.

36 For these things were done, ¹ that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.

37 And again another scripture saith, ² They shall look on him whom they pierced.

38 ³ And after this Joseph of Arimathæa, being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of the Jews, besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jesus.

39 And there came also Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

40 Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There laid they Jesus therefore because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

³ Matt. 27. 57.

How carefully did the Jews observe the day next before the sabbath, which used to be called "the preparation!" Such at least was the case with the sabbath of their greater festivals; when "that sabbath day was an high day." How well might we learn hence to spend the day before our sabbath in some manner, more like to a preparation, for the day following, than to a summing up of the business of the week! Never let us crowd into this last day of our week more than its usual share of work. Never let us on this day so weary our body or mind, as for us to need more than our usual slumber on the sabbath. Let it be to us also "the preparation." Let us clear up all arrears of worldly work, that we may have on the day following less distraction of thought from the work of heaven. And by diligence in the days which come before, let us take care that the arrears are not too heavy for the day, the day on which we ought to work the least rather than the most of all the six. Happy is that Christian labourer, who early in each week has done the hardest of his work, who early in his life has fought the chief of his good fight, and who after the example of the miracle at Cana, has kept the best till the last! See chap. 2. 10.

How anxiously does St. John here testify to what took place after the death of Christ; how the soldier pierced his side; how out of it came blood and water; how not a bone of Him was broken! This is chiefly in order to satisfy us that Christ was really dead. For this is sure to be the case, whenever the water is let out which is enclosed in the region of the heart. The certainty of his death may in like manner be concluded from his having been embalmed after the manner of the Jews. For no one could handle a body, to wind it up in linen and spices, without knowing whether it were really dead. And no one, least of all two faithful disciples, would have laid the body in the sepulchre, whilst there remained any even the least signs of life.

And why is it so important for us to be assured that Christ was really dead? Chiefly for these two reasons following; the one, that we might be satisfied that our sins are atoned for; the other that we might be fully assured that Christ did truly rise from the dead. For we are instructed by the Law, which was "our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ," Gal. 3. 24, that the death of the victim is necessary to the effect of the sacrifice. See Levit. 17. 11. We experience also in the visitation of death the most fearful of all the consequences now known of sin. And we are assured, by the whole tenour of the Gospel, that it was only by the death of Christ, that satisfaction could be made for the sin of man.

And if, in our own liability to this awful change, we would have some certain ground of hope, where could we possibly find it, if Christ had not really risen from the dead, and unless therefore He had first really died? The sepulchre to us is "nigh at hand." We must expect at no very distant day to return unto the dust from which we were taken. We may be young. Yet even youth we know is not always safe, and cannot long abide. Or we may be old, and so used to living; that we find it hard to think seriously of dying. But the longer we have lived we have the more ground to feel a lively apprehension that the sepulchre is "nigh at hand." We may be strong and healthy; and yet health and strength will secure us neither from sudden accident, nor from the speedy visitation of acute disease. We may be weakly, and therefore watchful against sickness, careful of our safety, and apt to think that we have so much the longer life in store. But no care, no watchfulness of ours, can ensure us against the last enemy of all mankind. To the weakly as well as to the strong, to the young as well as to the old, to all ages and to each sex, to every rank and station; to the busy and to the idle, to them that have much to do and to them that do nothing; to the righteous and to the wicked, to them that through faith work righteousness, and to them that through unbelief work iniquity; the sepulchre is in all cases "nigh at hand."

Christ not in the sepulchre.

1 The ¹first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

2 Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the ²other disciple, whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together: and the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5 And he stooping down, ~~and looking in,~~ saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

7 And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed.

9 For as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead.

How fearful a thing must death be, if even a burial place is apt to fill us with a feeling of alarm! How few would be willing, like Mary, to visit a sepulchre whilst it is "yet dark!" What is it that in such a case we are afraid of! What is it that makes our knees to tremble, and our blood run cold? Something there may be of weakness in our corrupted nature, which cleaves even to them that are regenerate, and which makes the hearts even of the faithful sicken, as they walk among the remains of the departed. But where such awe amounts to active fear, it must be chiefly out of ignorance or sin, out of ignorance which is sinful, because we might know better, out of such sin as we might avoid, because Christ has given us access to his grace. Let us learn from Mary Magdalene not to fear where no fear is. See Ps. 53. 6. Let us think with her, when we are in a place of trembling, let us think of Christ our Lord, let us consider how He has loved us. Let us endeavour so entirely to love Him, that our love may cast out fear. See 1 John 4. 18.

Mary, on reaching the sepulchre, found the stone which had been put at the door rolled away. Hence she supposed that they had "taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre." Upon this Peter, and the disciple whom Jesus loved, came and looked into the sepulchre, and saw there only the clothes in which the body of Jesus had been wound; "And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself." This fact should have led them to doubt whether the body of Jesus had been stolen. Since what is done by stealth is usually done in too great haste to admit of any such order and composure. "Then went in also that other disciple;" by whom St. John means himself. "And he saw, and believed;" by which he means that he believed what Mary had said, that the Jews had really taken away the body of the Lord. And their believing this seems to be mentioned on purpose that we may know, how surely they saw that his body was not there. "For as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead." And therefore in no other manner could they account for his body being gone, than by supposing that the Jews had taken it away.

And here let us observe what mistakes we are sure to fall into, if we know not the Scripture. The disciples might have understood from the prophecies in the Old Testament, that the Lord would rise from the dead. And they would then have been filled with joy, instead of sorrow, on finding the sepulchre empty. How many things might we also learn from Scripture, which now we know not! How surely, if we knew them, would they minister to our joy! What doubt can we encounter in our faith, for which here we might not find explanation? What difficulty could we meet with in our practice, for which here we might not meet with most safe direction? What affliction can befall us, and consolation not here be in store? What joy, and it not here be written, how it may help us towards joy eternal?

But alas, how much wiser are the children of this world, in their generation, than the children of light! See Luke 16. 8. How well aware were the Jews of the report that Jesus would rise again from the dead, whilst the disciples as yet "knew not the scripture!" See Matt. 27. 63. How gladly does the world profit by the least hint of worldly wisdom! How strange that Peter and John, with so many things to awaken their attention at the sepulchre, should turn away without further inquiry, towards their own home! It was but now that "they ran both together;" and were in such haste to know the truth of what had happened, that "the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre." One while we are vying with each other who shall know most, who do best. But how soon does our holy emulation flag! How soon, unless we watch, does our zeal abate! How easily are we disheartened by the slightest disappointment, or discouraged by having our hope deferred! Let us endeavour rather to take courage from the least ground of hope, than to despond on slight instances of failure. Let us interpret whatever little we yet know of Scripture, so as to raise in us a desire to know more. Let us profit by whatever little belief we have in Christ, so as to help us towards more firm assurance of faith.

Christ appeareth to Mary.

10 Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

11 But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept; she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith, unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God.

18 Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her.

§ 352. Christ the Saviour of all.

The disciples had gone homewards, on finding, as they supposed, that the body of Jesus was taken away. "But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping." The more fervent is our love, we shall be the less inclined to enjoy even the allowable comforts of our home, when we may otherwise hope to minister to the glory of our Lord. Whilst the others were gone home, it was something for Mary to stand and weep. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Matt. 5. 4. Where there is wrong, which we cannot redress, where there is suffering, and we are not able to relieve it, where there is sin, and we cannot prevent the sinner, let us at least feel concern in his behalf; and if we have nothing else that we can do, let us weep much, feel much, pray much.

To Mary thus staying when the rest were gone away, thus weeping because she knew not what to do for good, first two angels appear for her consolation, and afterwards our Lord Himself. "Woman, why weepest thou?" Such was the kind inquiry which was in both cases addressed to this affectionate disciple. "Woman, why weepest thou?" These were the first words that appear to have been spoken by our Lord, after his arising from the dead. It is as if He would declare, that through his death and rising again, tears should at once lose their bitterness, and should in the end be utterly abolished. Why should they lament, who have assurance from the Lord, that like Him they shall arise from the dead? How can they sorrow, as though they had no hope, who have the prospect of life eternal? Sinner, why weepest thou? Thy sins are forgiven thee. Mortal, why weepest thou? Thy death is the gate of heaven. Parent bereft of child, or child of parent, husband widowed of wife, or wife of husband; why weep ye? "Thy brother shall rise again." Ch. 11. 23. The friends whom you have lost are found in Christ. Why weep then at that change which you may believe is for their good, at which they, as you should hope, will rejoice for evermore?

These words of Christ were spoken, and He Himself appeared unto Mary, not till after she had "turned herself back;" on her way probably to tell the disciples of her having seen the angels. Mary at first knew not that it was Jesus who had spoken unto her. But as soon as she knew, she said, "Rabboni; which is to say, Master." Now from St. Matthew, 28. 9, we learn that the women, either on this or on a later occasion, as soon as they knew the person of our Lord, attempted to hold Him by the feet. To some such attempt as this we must refer what is here said to Mary, "Touch me not." Be not anxious to hold me now, for I shall yet stay some time longer upon earth. "I am not yet ascended unto my Father." I am not now gone away visibly into heaven. This will however soon take place. Go therefore, and let the disciples know of it. "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."

Here let us observe how Christ says, "my Father, and your Father," not our Father; "my God, and your God," not our God; as if He purposed to teach us by these words, that God is his Father in other sort than ours, and that Christ is the Son of God in other sort than we are his sons. Whereas for us He has left instruction when we pray to say, "Our Father." Matt. 6. 9. And He would have us also always consider Himself as "our Lord and Saviour." 2 Pet. 1. 1. For so do his apostles continually describe Him; not the Saviour, as of a few, but our Saviour, as of many, as of all; though specially of those that believe. See 1 Tim. 4. 10. And in so regarding Him we shall continually be reminded, as He would have us, at once of the love which we owe to Him, and of that which for his sake we ought to feel towards each other.

O Father, be Thou our Father! O God, be Thou our God! O Lord, be Thou our Lord and Saviour; a Saviour to us and to our brethren; to their brethren; yea, to all mankind! All deeply need thy help. All have fallen. All without Thee are lost. All, without the redemption of thy blood, are sure to perish everlastingly. Make known the glad tidings of thy salvation to them that yet sit in darkness! Make helpful the atonement of thy death, to them that have never known thy name! Help us to make others to ascend, that so we may ascend ourselves, to thy Father and our Father, to thy God and our God!

Christ appeareth to the disciples, satisfieth Thomas.

19 ¹ Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had so said, he shewed unto them his hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

21 Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

22 And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost:

23 ² Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

24 But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

26 And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

27 Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

28 And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God.

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

30 ³ And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book:

31 But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.

¹ Mark 16. 14.² Matt. 18. 18.³ Ch. 21. 25.§ 353. That we have sufficient evidence for belief.

It was on the first day of the week that the disciples were assembled, when Christ appeared to them. This was the day on which He had arisen from the dead. This is the day which has ever since been known in the Christian church as the "Lord's day." Rev. 1. 10. At his appearance they rejoiced, though they had so lately forsaken Him. They rejoiced; and He mercifully confirmed their joy, saying, "Peace be unto you."

After repeating this kind encouragement, Jesus added, "as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." Here He gave to his apostles the same kind of office, though with a very different degree of authority, as that which He Himself had exercised on earth, namely, to be ministers of reconciliation between God and man. He was Himself, as He was man, in this sense commissioned. He thus sent his apostles; and they afterwards, in like manner, according to their commission, sent others. And in order to fit them for their office, and to signify to them what their office was, "he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost;" words which seem plainly to prove, that the Holy Ghost, which proceeds from the Father, proceeds also from the Son, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." This commission, thus expressed, meant not to the apostles any more than it means to their successors, that they might remit sins according to their own will and pleasure. For who, as the Jews justly asked, "who can forgive sins but God only?" Mark 2. 7. It means no more than that as ministers of Christ, they can forgive those sins which He declares to be forgiven. As the magistrate neither acquits nor condemns of his own self, but only as he is commissioned by the king, only as he is instructed by the law, so should ministers of Christ, as his servants, remit or retain sins according to his Gospel.

But what an opportunity was this that Thomas lost, by not being with the disciples on the Lord's day! How manifold are the blessings which those Christians miss who forsake the assembling of themselves together, as the manner of some is. See Heb. 10. 25. Thomas "was not with them when Jesus came," and when told of his having come, Thomas would not believe. What evidence have we here that the apostles were not weakly credulous! What condescension is here manifest in Christ, that He satisfied even unreasonable scruples! He offered to Thomas the very evidence demanded, though it was far more than the case required. "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." This was mercy utterly undeserved. This was proof far more than necessary. But so it is that God deals with our perverse understandings. He gives us evidence tenfold more than ought to satisfy us. And so it is that He would move our stubborn hearts, He gives us blessings an hundredfold above our small deserts. "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples." Not only did they see all that is here written, but many more things over and above what needed to be set down in this book. Many others indeed are written in the other Gospels: but St. John had a particular object in what he wrote, that we "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God;" that we might have right faith in his being the Word, which was in the beginning with God, which from the beginning "was God." Ch. 1. 1. For it is thus believing that we may have life through his name; it is by believing truly, and by believing also the truth,

Christ appeareth to his disciples fishing.

1 After these things Jesus shewed himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise shewed he himself.

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples.

3 Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night they caught nothing.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus.

5 Then Jesus saith unto them, || Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No.

6 And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.

7 Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,) and did cast himself into the sea.

8 And the other disciples came in a little ship; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,) dragging the net with fishes.

9 As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.

10 Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

"Jesus shewed himself." He was not seen as He used to be, living all day long with his disciples. He shewed Himself, when He thought it good for them to see Him, when it would be good for us to know that they saw Him. And thus it is written also in the Acts; 10. 40, 41; "Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God." So that for God to shew Him and for Christ to shew Himself is the same thing. And that He was shewn only to chosen witnesses, was because these were best qualified to testify to his person; these might best know Him by his words and works, now that his person was in some sort glorified. For that some change had taken place in his appearance, seems to follow from what is said of his shewing Himself, and from the disciples not knowing Him immediately. On this occasion they were employed in their former business of fishing. And to this they seem to have now returned, as their proper work. So little did they as yet understand of Christ's kingdom, or of the office they were to hold in it as teachers! So far were they from taking on themselves the work of preaching the Gospel, so willing to wait till they were duly sent on the day of Pentecost, so contented in the meanwhile with their ordinary employment. In this they had ill success all night. And since their fishing has been interpreted by our Lord, as a sign of their catching men in the gospel net, we may do well to explain their failure by the fact, that Christ was not with them, in their company. For no sooner did He join them, and give them his directions, than they enclosed a great multitude of fishes. So that if we would in this sense catch men, if we would be instruments in God's hands for saving the souls of our brethren, we must seek so good an end, only in the way which is appointed in the Gospel. And thus it is also in the saving of our own souls. We must work as our Lord directs us. We must not do evil that good may come. We must seek for the increase of grace, only by the means which Christ has ordained. Life without Him is night; but it is morning when He is on the shore. Labour without Him is vain; and hunger without Him, unsatisfied. But through his gift we may enjoy, in our spiritual necessities, both fire to warm, and food to nourish. With his blessing, whatever work we undertake for good, our success will be abundant, and yet our net will never break.

"For all there were so many, yet was not the net broken." If we take the net to signify the kingdom of heaven, this may lead us to reflect with thankfulness on the boundless extent of God's mercy in the Gospel. The more can be drawn into that holy company, the greater is the joy of those who are there. The wedding is furnished with guests; "and yet there is room." Luke 14. 22. As long as we have any near us, whom we think that we could help to make more holy, let us endeavour to do so, both for their good and for our own, both to help forward their salvation, and to promote God's glory. And would that we could go on with the similitude, in respect of the concord which should prevail, amongst all Christians of all ages, and of all nations of the world! Would that as the numbers of the church have been increased, its net of unity had been never broken! When the net breaks, the fish are lost. When churches are at variance, souls are in peril; Christians are at a loss for truth, and the world is more slow to believe that they are disciples of Christ. Shame be to the pride and selfishness, to the jealousies and ambition of men, that have made so many rents in the net, so many breaches in the walls of Zion! But thanks be to the goodness and to the grace of God, that what is torn He can mend, what is broken He can repair, what is wounded He can heal, what is severed He can unite! Thanks be to God, that He will make one, in the world which is to come, many who are here estranged from each other!

Christ giveth Peter charge of his lambs.

12 Jesus saith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13 Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

14 This is now the third time that Jesus shewed himself to his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead.

15 So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs.

16 He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

17 He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me! And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

18 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

19 This spake he, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me.

The disciples durst not ask Jesus, "Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord." Having known Him to be dead and buried, they could not divest themselves of awe, on seeing Him again alive. Let us also stand in awe of Him, so as to sin not. Let us fear asking further, of what we might know abundantly from his word. Let us fear to do that which He forbids. Let us fear to neglect that which He commands. But let us temper our fear with love. Let us have love prevail over our fearfulness. For see how, when the disciples were afraid, our Lord encouraged them, saying, "Come and dine." To eat a meal in common, to partake together in the supply of our bodily necessities, this helps to abate our fears of each other, and helps to enlarge our love. And it is well, if only we avoid excess, to offer and receive such hospitality as this. But let us prefer above all others the invitation of our Lord. Let us rejoice far more than at any other feast to eat with Him at his own Supper. Let us listen to his voice thus calling us to Himself, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3. 20.

"So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" The painful fear might by this time be allayed; but there must have yet remained in the apostles a painful regret, for having deserted their Master in his last hours. And especially this feeling must have oppressed the disciple, who had uttered this vain profession, "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." Matt. 26. 33. To this saying Christ seems here to allude: "Lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." He makes no more comparison of himself with others. He answers not for loving Christ more than his brethren. He answers only for himself. He answers for himself, not on the strength of his own self knowledge, not on the strength of his own self confidence, but only so far as Christ might know him to be strong. "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my Lambs." And the like expression our Lord thrice repeated. "Feed my sheep." And again, "Feed my sheep." What a solemn charge was this to Peter! What a proof to him, and to all the apostles, that the Lord had entirely forgiven them! What a comfortable assurance, that He would yet employ them in the work for which He had chosen them at the first, the making men wise unto salvation! "Lovest thou me?" Though I know, I ask. It is not enough for me to know. It is needful for you to profess your love, it is needful for you to prove it by the devotion of your life. Feed therefore my sheep. Go no more a fishing on this sea of Tiberias. Henceforth catch men. Take the world for the extent of your labours. Seek in it for them that are lost. Help them in it that are helpless. Feed them that are hungry and thirsty after righteousness. Feed them in the pasture of the Gospel; administering both milk for babes, and also strong meat for men.

To this encouraging address our Lord added in a figure a description of the death, by which Peter should glorify God. "When thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." That is to say, he should be crucified. This is known from history to be the manner in which Peter suffered martyrdom. Here then was one more proof of Christ's forgiveness. "Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth." Heb. 12. 6. And if ordinary suffering be a token that God is gracious to our souls, what must it be to suffer death as martyrs, to perish by the same death as Christ Himself? Who would not wish that he had lived in times, when he might thus have died for Christ? Who would not gladly die in pain, that might be sure to rise in glory? Let us then now be martyrs in our lives, if we may not bear witness unto the faith by death. Let us live in self denial if we have no call to die in shame on the cross. If we are never called upon to be crucified for Christ's sake, let us offer what we value almost as dear as life; let us crucify our will, our passions, our sins.

Christ answereth Peter concerning John.

20 Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple¹ whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

21 Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do?

22 Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.

23 Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die: but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?

24 This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true.

“The disciple whom Jesus loved,” means St. John, the writer of this Gospel. Peter having been told of what should happen to himself, and knowing how St. John was beloved, inquires whether to him there would be vouchsafed any token more strung of his Master’s love, any work more excellent than to feed his Master’s sheep, any chastisement more profitable than the cross, any death more glorious than to be a martyr? “Lord, and what shall this man do?” What shall happen unto him whom Thou lovest? May we know more of the future than Thou hast already thought fit to tell us? May we be told by Thee, who “knowest all things,” ver. 17, may we be told for our present satisfaction the things which shall be hereafter? “Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.” We ought not to be curious about that which God has not revealed. We ought not thus to inquire into the future for ourselves, much less ought we to pry into what concerns our brethren. And though chastisement be a token of God’s love, it is not for us to be informed, why He sends it unto some, and withholds it from others, whom He loves. “Follow thou me,” is the rule to each of us for ourselves. “What is that to thee,” is the reply to our inquiry into the allotment of our neighbours. “Follow thou me.” Yea, Lord, we will! Whichever way Thou leadest, it shall be our heart’s desire to walk in thy steps, to work by thy commandments! Yea, Lord, we will follow Thee! whether to be resigned in pain, or in joy soberminded; whether to be contented in want, or in abundance thankful. In the life we live, and in the death we die, we will try, do Thou but help us, to follow Thee!

“Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die;” for they understood that he should live until the coming of Christ, and thus not have to die at all. And they were then under the impression that Christ would soon come to judgment. And so indeed He did soon come to destroy the city of the unbelieving Jews, which seems to be the thing here alluded to; for St. John is known to have lived many years after that event, and to have died in a good old age. But as Christ visited Jerusalem in his wrath, He will also soon visit the world we dwell in. And this is that second coming of his, which we as Christians must continually look for. And how know we, any one of us, but that we may tarry till He come, but that He may come whilst yet we live? Nothing is less likely to be known by man beforehand, than the day and hour of our Lord’s coming. See Matt. 25. 13. Nothing ought to be more familiar to our minds than the apprehension that He might come any day, any hour. “Surely I come quickly;” Rev. 22. 20; this is the testimony of the faithful and true Witness. “The night is far spent, the day is at hand;” Rom. 13. 12; this is the warning of the apostle to the church for ever. We know not what an hour will bring forth; only we know that few are the years of our pilgrimage: it is possible, it is probable, that ere they are fulfilled, the world itself may end.

“This is the disciple,” adds St. John of himself, “which testifieth of these things: and we know that his testimony is true.” All men know that the testimony of an eye witness is the most fit of all others to be relied upon. And here the writer of this Gospel tells us, that he is that very disciple whom Jesus loved, and of whom our Lord spake these words. We know then that his testimony is true. We are certain that he whom Jesus loved, must have been one who loved that which is true, one whom the Holy Spirit of God would guide in his writings into all truth. In his writings, in his true testimony he still tarries, and will tarry, till the coming of his Lord. His words will never die; for they are the words of his Master Christ.

“And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.” See then, now that we have finished these four histories of our Lord, see how little we yet know of his patience in well doing, of his words of grace and truth, of his work and labour of love! The world could scarce contain a full account of all He did for fallen man. Eternity would scarce suffice to tell of all his loving kindness unto us his people. But though we know so little, compared with the whole of his goodness, we know much as compared with our ignorance, much as compared with our wants: and oh, how more than much as compared with our deserving! Though the Gospel be in reality but a part, and but a small part of all God’s majesty, of all Christ’s love; it is to man no less than all in all; it is to man perfect, and whole, and full. It tells us of all that we need here to know. It instructs us in all that we need here to do. It teaches us what to believe in, and how to believe; what to obey, and by what means we may become obedient. It reveals to us of God, how He is holy, and just, and good; of ourselves how we are fallen, and weak, and wicked. It represents to us the Father creating us, the Son redeeming us, the Holy Ghost making us to be holy. It describes to us ourselves as redeemed, born anew to be sons of God, saved from sin, from the bondage of sinning; saved from death, from dying everlastingly; saved through the counsels of the Father, saved through the precious blood of his dear Son; saved through the working of the Holy Spirit in our souls; saved from endless misery, saved for an inheritance of eternal joy.

Amen: so true it is that all which is here written, really did take place! Amen: so true it is, for many other like things Christ did for us! Amen: so kindly did He heal the sick, so graciously did He comfort the afflicted; so completely did He make the blind to see; so wonderfully did He make the dead to live! Amen: so truly was He man, dying for us men, and for our salvation! Amen: so fully was He God, making atonement for the sins of all mankind!

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

The preface to the Acts of the Apostles.

1 The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach,

2 Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen :

3 To whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God :

4 And, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me.

5 For John truly baptized with water ; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence.

§ 357. The necessity of divine assistance.

THE book of the Acts of the Apostles was written by St. Luke. At the beginning of it he refers to his Gospel, which he calls "the former treatise." Both works are written to the same Theophilus. See Luke 1. 3. And the one is evidently a continuation of the other. For St. Luke mentions, in these opening verses, that his Gospel reached down to the very period from which he now begins afresh, namely to the time when Jesus "was taken up," or, in other words, had ascended into heaven. And this happened, he tells us, not till after our Lord "had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen." Which commandments, as we learn from the verse following, pertained "to the kingdom of God." So that in this history of what the apostles did, we may expect to see what it was that Christ commanded. For, however different may be the case with us, we believe of these holy men that in most things pertaining to themselves, and in all things relating to the kingdom of God, what Christ commanded, that they did.

Accordingly we have here a record of some of the chief things which they said and did towards preaching the Gospel unto all the world. And yet important as was the work they had in hand, they were instructed not to make any beginning till they had received the Holy Spirit promised by the Father, of which Christ had before spoken. Hence let us take occasion to reflect for ourselves on the necessity of our having help from the same Holy Spirit of God, ere we enter on any good and Christian work.

The apostles witness the ascension of Christ.

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

8 ¹ But ye shall receive || power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

9 And ² when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

10 And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel;

11 Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

12 Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey.

13 And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.

14 These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

“Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?” This was a question uppermost in the minds of the apostles. They were expecting that Jesus, as the Christ, would make the Jews not only not subject to any other nation, but also masters of all the rest. And that some such dominion will in the end be given them may be thought to follow from our Lord’s answer to the apostles, that they must not expect to know the times and seasons, as though the event would at some time happen. But the whole passage seems rather to direct our thoughts to the prevalence of Christ’s spiritual kingdom, by the preaching of the Gospel unto all mankind. And this would lead us to expect, that the sovereignty of the Jews means the heavenly glory of such Jews as shall be altogether Christians, and of such Christians as shall be Jews inwardly, children of Abraham in point of faith. In any case we may here learn, not to pry too curiously into things which it has pleased God to hide. And we may thankfully observe that the power promised to the apostles of bearing witness unto Christ, is a power of which all Christians have a share, a dominion of which we all partake. Only let us so make our light to shine, as that men may glorify our Father which is in heaven, and behold we are both priests and kings with God, we offer sacrifice acceptable unto Him through Christ, we are heirs of a crown of glory.

These were the things of which our Lord had been speaking to the apostles, when “he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.” The glorified body was no longer to continue in the sight of mortal men. By a force unknown, by a power inconceivable to us, it was lifted up from the earth, and so continued to rise, until by reason of a cloud they could now no longer see Him. And whilst they continued to look steadfastly towards heaven, two angels informed them of the lesson which they ought hence to learn for their own improvement. “This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.” Surely as He then was lifted up, He shall again come down. Our eyes shall behold the same form descend when He returns to judge the world. Oh that we might therefore in the mean time live, so as to rejoice when He shall come again! Oh that we may now so in heart with Him ascend, that with Him we may then dwell for evermore!

Hence therefore let us now note how the apostles spent their time immediately after this exhortation of the angels. They “continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.” So perhaps we think we should have preferred to live, if we had seen with our own eyes our Lord ascend. But are we not quite sure that He ascended? What matters it whether we have seen or not, if only we have believed? If we receive the Scriptures as God’s word, if we are quite certain that Christ did thus ascend, the effect of his ascension on our hearts should be the same as if we had beheld it. Let us then continue with one accord in prayer and supplication. Let us delight on due occasions to pray in company, whether it be in the congregation of the church, in the assembling of each single household, or in the intercession of friend for friend. Let us not wilfully miss any opportunity of prayer, either public or private. And especially let us rejoice to join in prayer with those, who like the persons here mentioned with honour, are faithful servants of the Lord. How know we how much their earnest supplication might help to make our petitions heard? How know we how much our own petitions may avail, in behalf of those whom we would most wish to help? Let us live more devoutly, that we may pray more successfully. Let us love more heartily, that we may pray more earnestly. For the more we love, we shall be sure to pray the more. And the more we have grace to pray, we shall be enabled also the more to love.

Matthias is numbered with the eleven apostles.

15 And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty,)

16 Men and brethren; this scripture must needs have been fulfilled¹ which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.

17 For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry.

18² Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

20 For it is written in the book of Psalms,³ Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and⁴ his⁵ bishoprick let another take.

21 Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us,

22 Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection.

23 And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias.

24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen,

25 That he may take part of this ministry, and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

26 And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

⁵ Or, office, or, charge.

The casting lots, by way of deciding certain matters of difficulty was a practice allowed and enjoined amongst the Jews; they being under the direct government of Jehovah, who by this method decreed to signify his will. Numb. 26. 55. Thus we are told in the book of Proverbs: "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." Prov. 16. 33. Already had this solemn ordinance been perverted to purposes of gambling; as we read of the soldiers at the foot of the cross casting lots for our Saviour's garments. In the instance before us, the lot was used by the apostles by way of ascertaining the will of God, in a matter where they had no other means of knowing it. But as our Lord Himself appointed St. Paul by other means, to the holy office, He might very probably design to signify, that this method of casting lots was no longer to be used for discovering the will of God. And he might further intend to shew them that in this business they should have waited, as He had bidden them, for the pouring out of the Holy Spirit which He had promised, ere they entered on any function of their sacred office.

Whether however in this they were right or wrong, St. Matthias "was numbered with the eleven apostles." And in him we have an important instance, of the commission of the ministry being handed on by outward appointment, from those who received it from Christ Himself. St. Peter first proposed the measure to the assembly of one hundred and twenty disciples, all probably themselves preachers and teachers of the Gospel. And he argued from a passage in the Psalms, that as Judas had been lost from amongst their number, it was right that some one else should supply his place. He pointed out also the kind of person who would be qualified for the office, such as had companied with them "all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among" them. The object also he stated to be this, that the person chosen might be ordained to be a witness of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Such let us remember is the great business of ministers amongst Christians to the end of time. They must testify of Christ, how He died and rose again from the dead; and how all men must hereafter through his power rise again, either unto good or evil. This witness they ought to bear, not only with their lips, but with their lives; shewing forth that like as Christ is risen from the dead, even so they also walk in newness of life.

And for this end, not only they, but all we also, should pray to Him who knows the hearts of all. We should pray for those who are to be, or who have been, set over us in the Lord as ministers of the Gospel. We should pray that fitting persons may be chosen to take part in this ministry. We should pray that all who have been chosen, may become or continue fitting, to the greater profit of the church. How different are such prayers from the censure, scorn, and scoffing, which are often heaped by the world on the ministers of religion! How greatly would it help us to avoid the slightest approach to such censorious words, if we did but pray daily from the heart, that God would bless his servants in their work! This would indeed be the best of antidotes to all uncharitable thoughts or words, to pray for those whom we are apt to censure, for those of whom we are tempted to think ill. For how could we really pray for any without wishing them all good? And how could we wish them any good, and yet be glad to think ill of them, or to utter evil?

Lord, help us to think well of all! Lord, teach us to pray heartily in behalf of all! For our enemies, that it may please Thee to turn their hearts; for our friends, that they may love Thee even more than they love us; for the church, that it may be enlarged and prosper; and even for the most wicked of the world, that they may be converted and live for ever.

The apostles filled with the Holy Ghost speak with tongues.

1 And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.

4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now † when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were ‡ confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language.

7 And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galilæans?

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judæa, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia,

10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, 11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?

13 Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine.

† Gr. when this voice was made.

‡ Or, troubled in mind.

“Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost,” “and with fire,” Acts 1. 5; Matt. 3. 11, this is what our Lord promised to his apostles. And here we see how the promise was fulfilled. And we should conclude that as by baptism Christians are devoted to the service of their Lord, so by this pouring out of the Spirit the apostles were consecrated to their holy office. “They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.” What an amazing miracle was this, and how significant of the work which the apostles had to do! Let us consider how great a length of time it takes for any one to learn a new language. Let us consider how sure we feel beforehand, that on meeting with a native of some foreign country we should neither understand nor be understood. Let us consider that this has been the case amongst mankind, ever since the confusion of tongues at Babel. And we shall thus be prepared to feel that as God did then, for the separation of mankind, impose on them diversity of speech, so did He on this occasion give us in some sort community of tongue, that the whole world might be again one people. For since this gift of tongues has been made the means to many nations of their having one hope, one faith, one baptism, we are now far nearer to being one people, so many of us at least as have this blessed hope, than if we had all one language, but different religions.

This then was the great use and propriety of this miracle; it fitted the apostles, and all others who enjoyed the gift, for preaching the Gospel unto all lands. It enabled them to testify that which they had seen and heard of the Lord Jesus, unto both Jew and Gentile in all nations of the earth. It made all other miracles profitable, by empowering those who wrought them to teach for what end they were ordained of God; to say to the sick whom they healed, and to the blind whom they made to see: “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. Acts 16. 31. Thus whilst the infirmity of Moses, who complains, “I am slow of speech,” Exod. 4. 10, may denote how the Jewish law was meant only for the hearing of a few; the miraculous utterance of the preachers of the Gospel serves to signify and prove, that the glad tidings they had to tell of were designed to instruct, to comfort, and to save, all in every nation that would fear the Lord.

And this was the use to which the apostles immediately applied their new and marvellous ability. For thus did the men of all nations, then assembled at Jerusalem, express their astonishment: “We do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.” They indulged in no idle and vain display of their newly acquired gift. They spake of God’s wondrous work in the redemption of mankind through Jesus Christ. Affected the more deeply themselves by the sound they heard from heaven, by the sight they saw of fire not from earth, they were enabled the more forcibly to testify of things which no eye can see, no ear can hear, and no imagination of man’s heart can conceive.

This was the use the apostles made of gifts that were miraculous. This is one chief use that we ought to make, of the grace no less truly supernatural, which God gives in all ages of the church to the disciples of his blessed Son. We must make our light to shine before men, that they may glorify our Father which is in heaven. See Matt. 5. 16. And this is the way we must seek to grow in Christian graces, by prayer and by living at peace amongst each other. For thus were the apostles “all with one accord in one place;” all assembled in one congregation, all of one heart and mind. Oh that Christians in each Christian country, were thus all of one accord! Oh that Christians, in each neighbourhood, thus assembled for divine worship, all in one place! Then might we with reason hope that unbelievers would again ask with amazement “What is this?” Then need we less fear that they would ascribe to any other than a heavenly influence an effect so holy in our lives. Our preaching to the heathen might then prosper, if it were supported by our own practice. And the voice of our prayers might be then better heard in their behalf abroad, if we were first all one at home ourselves.

Peter speaketh of Christ to the Jews.

14 But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judæa, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words :

15 For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day.

16 But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel ;

17 ' And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh : and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams :

18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit ; and they shall prophesy :

19 And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath ; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke :

20 ' The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come :

21 And it shall come to pass, that ¹ whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

22 Ye men of Israel, hear these words ; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know :

23 Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain :

24 Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death : because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.

25 For David speaketh concerning him, ' I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved :

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad ; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope :

27 Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

28 Thou hast made known to me the ways of life ; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

§ 361. What God hath ordained concerning us.

It was in mockery that some of those, who heard the apostles speak with tongues, said, " These men are full of new wine." For they must have known that drunkenness, though it might make men talk more than usual, would not help them to talk in languages unknown before. But to these Peter calmly answered, as though they had been in earnest, pointing out the early hour of the day, as an argument to shew that himself and his companions were not likely to be drunken. And this perhaps is the reason why, when he spoke, he is described as " standing up with the eleven ;" that they might be all seen to be truly sober. Let us be careful when we are mocked, or in any way insulted, to preserve that evenness of temper which will enable us to reason calmly with those who thus behave. And especially when the truth of the things which we believe is called in question, or pointed at with scorn, let us both be ready to give to every one, according to our ability, a reason of the hope that is in us ; and also be careful so meekly to bear with our opponent, so gently and affectionately to reply, that we may justify the profession of our lips, by the effect of our faith upon our lives.

The argument of the apostle was of a kind to be conclusive with those who heard him. For they were all either Jews or proselytes, collected on occasion of the feast from the neighbouring nations, and probably acquainted with those prophecies which are here alluded to. Greatly should we be moved by such passages as these, to acquaint ourselves in like manner with the ancient prophets ; to study the volume of the elder covenant for our better help in understanding the latter one. All is written for our instruction. And in all, holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. And the scribe rightly instructed for the kingdom of God should be able to bring out of his treasure things new and old. See Matt. 13. 52.

St. Peter shewed that what had happened on this occasion was no more than the fulfilment of a prophecy, that thus the Holy Spirit should be poured out, " before that great and notable day of the Lord come." And hence he turns his address, to urge on their attention the proofs of Jesus being their Lord and Christ, arguing from his resurrection, which was itself a most striking fulfilment of a prophecy in the Psalms. This prophecy shews the previous intention that Jesus should be so raised up. And here we read that He also was " delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." So that God surely foreknew and planned all things relating to our redemption through Christ ; both how He would have to die upon the cross, and how He would also arise from the dead. And thus God knows beforehand, also of us, all we do, and all we suffer ; plans for us how we might do and suffer for the best ; and ordains how, according to our use of the time which He gives us here, we shall in the end either perish or be for ever saved. Certain we are to come to one or other of these two ends. And fearful it is to think that we might by any possibility come to death eternal. What is it then that God has ordained concerning us ? " Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Whosoever shall in earnest pray, through faith in Christ, and persevere in prayer and faith unto the end, the same shall live for ever. Let us therefore receive God's promises as they are generally set forth to us in holy Scripture. And in our doings let us follow that will of God, which is expressly declared unto us in the word of God. (See XXXIX Articles.)

Peter's address concluded. The hearers pricked in their heart.

29 Men and brethren, ¶ let me freely speak unto you ' of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.

30 Therefore being a prophet, ' and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne ;

31 He seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, ' that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.

32 This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses.

33 Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear.

34 For David is not ascended into the heavens : but he saith himself The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand,

35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

36 Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.

37 Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do ?

38 Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39 For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

§ 362. What we who are baptized ought to do.

St. Peter in this conclusion of his address, dwells chiefly on the resurrection of Christ, shewing that by this event we must interpret those words of David in the Psalms, which could by no means be applied to the son of Jesse. And the like remark he makes on what David had foretold of Christ's ascension. From whence he argues, that God had made the same Jesus whom they had crucified both Lord and Christ. Now this argument of the apostle supposes it to be a fact well known to all his hearers that Jesus of Nazareth had truly risen from the grave, had truly ascended into heaven. And these things being notorious in Jerusalem at the time, and also specially testified on this occasion, St. Peter might justly argue, that since the things were prophesied of Christ, Jesus to whom they happened must be the Christ Himself.

"Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart." The address of the apostle was convincing. Or rather, God's grace effectually moved their hearts to feel its weight. For without his grace, no such argument, however forcible to the mind, 'is able to bring conviction to the soul. His power must move us first. But in order to be so moved we must first pray for help. But it is He that must ever help us first to pray, must help in us that first faint longing in the heart, which is the ground of our first earnest prayers. To Him we owe it that we hear the preacher's voice, that we read the word written by inspiration of the Spirit. To Him we must look for grace to profit by these his ordinances of Christian edification. And yet how much depends on our using his grace aright, on our striving to the utmost of our ability to mark, learn, and inwardly digest !

"They were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" This is an inquiry well befitting those, who for the first time feel deeply the necessity of caring for the soul. This is a question which we should each of us do well frequently to put to ourselves, as we become more and more convinced that this same Jesus is "both Lord and Christ." "What shall we do?" How can we better employ the talent committed to our charge? How can we become more truly devout to God, more right and reverent in our apprehension of Him, and of his dealings towards ourselves? How among our fellow creatures can we do more good, and feel more love? How might we be able to give a better account of the time we have, when we shall have time no more? "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This answer applies exactly to the case of those who, when they asked the question, had never been baptized. But it is also full of information profitable to ourselves. "For," as St Peter added, "the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Called we have been by God's mercy to be Christians. Invited we are by his earnest appeal to save ourselves from an untoward generation. Already we have received the outward sign of baptism. Already we have also received the inward grace, the remission of our sins in the name of Jesus Christ. Let us live then as they who have been forgiven; as they who have received the gifts of the Holy Ghost, the quickening of our understandings to know God's will, and of our hearts to love to do it. Let us live as though we did indeed truly love; as if with Christ we were risen from the death of sin, as if our hearts were ascended with Him into heaven; as if we were loving to be there with Him in thought, longing there to see Him as He is; glad to be dead to sin, and thankful to feel alive again unto righteousness through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Believers had all things in common.

41 Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

42 And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43 And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44 And all that believed were together, and had all things common;

45 And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

46 And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread || from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, 47 Praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

The Gospel was for its growth compared by our Saviour to a grain of mustard seed. See Matt. 13. 31. Here we read of three thousand souls added in one day to the infant church. Soon afterwards five thousand are said to have believed. Ch. 4. 4. "So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed." Ch. 19. 20. May we find it thus to grow in our own hearts by faith! May it be unto us daily more and more profitable, more and more precious! May it occupy daily more of our meditations, and daily more affect our lives! May our own growth in holiness and joy be a means of winning others to the faith! Many the many thousands who dwell around us in the land, and the many millions who exist in foreign parts, still utterly estranged from God, be rapidly brought home into his fold; the zeal of those who know his will being adorned by their devotion to his service, and helping under his grace to add daily to the church such as become heirs of salvation.

This addition of three thousand converts took place on the occasion of the gift of tongues, after St. Peter's discourse on that affecting miracle. "They that gladly received his word were baptized." This was the course for them who were already grown up to man's estate; first to hear gladly, and then to receive baptism. We have been already baptized; even before we were able to hear. Our life, through the care of Christian friends, has been from the very outset dedicated to Christ. And in proportion as we grow able to hear at all, it is our duty to hear gladly "the engrafted word, which is able to save" our souls. James 1. 21. How far otherwise is the case of those who regret that they are thus bound in covenant with Christ, to renounce the world, the flesh, and the devil! How far from gladly do they hear that word, which so powerfully convinces them of sin! How hard is it for them to learn with joy the righteous judgment of God! And yet how often does God in his goodness make them glad to hear because eager to escape, glad to be told all their sins, because anxious to repent of all, glad to be instructed in all their duty, because fully purposed in all to obey!

But what an account of Christian duty is this, which is here given us in the case of the primitive disciples! How does it put to shame our worldly tempers, and our cold affections towards Christ our Lord! "They continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." Instead of stedfast, how apt are we to be in all these things variable! In doctrine how prone are many to waver and go astray; in fellowship, to violate the unity of the Spirit! In the breaking of the bread of the holy communion how backward are nearly all to attend! In prayers how slow, how cold are all, how wandering in thought, how wayward in heart! And how sad is the effect of this our unsteadiness on those who behold it in our lives! How different from the surprise and awe which the early converts raised in all beholders, by the fervour of their zeal, the stedfastness of their devotion! "Fear came upon every soul." Every one who witnessed their method of living was astonished, was alarmed about his own condition; considering probably thus each within himself: surely these men live not thus for nought; there must some strange thing have happened in the world, to have moved them to such a life as this; and how can I possibly be safe, if I neglect the preaching of that Gospel, which has wrought so great a change in them?

And further they "had all things in common." They cared so little for this present world, that each gave up all he had for the common use of all. Each was content to share alike with the rest whatsoever had been his own property at the first. How far from such a spirit as this are they, who spend all their time in heaping up riches to themselves, and none in giving help to others! How far from it are they, who make money their chief delight; however much they have already, seeking always to get more, or however little, seeking always to have much! Let us feel on the contrary that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Chap. 20. 35. This must be our way to have all things in common; when we have the heart to give freely to the utmost of our power; when they who have much give largely, and they who have little receive thankfully; and when all either receive or give as they that must give account to Him, who is Owner and Lord of all.

Peter healeth a man that was lame.

1 Now Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

2 And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

3 Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms.

4 And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them.

6 Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength.

8 And he leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

9 And all the people saw him walking and praising God:

10 And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering.

§ 364. How we should reply to them that beg.

It was at the hour of prayer that Peter and John went up together into the temple, when Peter wrought this great miracle on the man that had been lame from his birth. It was by asking an alms that the man drew their attention to his case. Let us be hence encouraged to ask in prayer of God. Let us rejoice, if whilst He thinks fit to withhold the things we ask for, He should give us others far better; even as health was to this poor man better than silver or than gold. "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." Let us watch that in our prayers we seek not for gold or silver; that we press not for any earthly advantages at all. Or if we ask for any, as for health or friends, let it be always with resignation to God's will, and with the sense of how much better He must know what it is best for us to have.

But if we ask with faith for spiritual blessings, we cannot then ask amiss. We cannot then ask and receive not. See James 4. 3. We are sure in the end to receive what we require, as this man was to have his health restored. As the apostle "took him by the right hand, and lifted him up," so will God raise up us when fallen. As this man's "feet and ankle bones received strength," so shall we by God's help become strong to do those goodly works for which we now feel all too weak. As "he leaping up stood, and walked," so shall we, however low our estate in sin, however feeble our faith or hope or charity, yet be able both to rise in holiness of life, and to make progress in the path of God's commandments. And as he "entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God," so will it be our delight, as we gain more of grace by prayer, to enter into the house of God, there to hear his word, there to worship his holy name.

And would that now, whilst we reflect upon how much we might obtain by making known our requests to God, would that now we might also feel how urgent is our duty to comply with requests made to us by each other! Ill it becomes a Christian to reply with rude refusal to the most importunate demands of the most abject beggar. There may be much, in such a case, to lead us to suppose, that the party is not actually in want. There may be eases more urgent which we know of, already more than we are able to relieve, and where we know the want to be both great and real. Otherwise we are bound either to inquire into the case of our petitioner, or to suppose it true till we know it to be false. And where we suppose the distress to be real, we are bound, if in our power, to help in relieving it. And if we have neither gold nor silver left, which we could justly apply to such a purpose, we may learn from what these apostles did, to give at least a reply of courtesy, a word of friendly exhortation, and a prayer for help from God. Money I have none that I can give, we might say, if we can so say with truth; but I assure you of kind concern, I advise you how to seek for help elsewhere, and I pray God that He may help you to that food which never fails, to that treasure which is eternal in the heavens.

"And all the people saw him walking and praising God." This was the chief use of the miracle at the time. It was to turn the attention of the people to the powers which Peter exercised by the gift of the Holy Ghost. It was to fill them with wonder and amazement, that they might be anxious to inquire into what had happened, and so be filled in the end with faith and love. And this is also one chief use of our improvement in the grace of a holy life; it moves the hearts of others to observe and imitate. But more, it also elevates and purifies our own. It raises us to a higher and better state of being. It makes us altogether different from such as know not God, in all the things we have to do on earth, and in the end which we expect at death. Without the grace which prayer brings down from heaven, we are at once helpless and hopeless. With it we are able to hope all things, we are able to do all things. We walk with joy through life, and lie down to die in the firm persuasion that our death is to live for ever. We live as if we felt ourselves in God's presence. We die to find ourselves in the enjoyment of his glory.

St. Peter exhorteth the Jews to repentance.

12 And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?

13 The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.

14 But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you;

15 And killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses.

16 And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

17 And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.

18 But those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

19 Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

20 And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

21 Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

22 For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

23 And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

24 Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days.

25 Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

26 Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

It is not easy to excite attention without being tempted to covet admiration. But St. Peter, after working a remarkable miracle, forbids the people to fix their thoughts on him and his companion St. John, but would have them rather connect what they had seen with what he had to tell them of Jesus Christ. Thus he informed his hearers of the truth; what had really taken place, and by what means. And next observe how charitably he supposes of the Jews, that in ignorance they had done the dreadful thing, to deny "the Holy One and the Just." "And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it." Brethren he might well call them in this matter; for he also had denied his Lord. And whilst he thus allowed for ignorance in them, he probably meant to own against himself how he had committed the very same offence. And for their further consolation he assured them, that God out of all this evil had been able to draw forth good, having taken care that hereby should be fulfilled the things which He had spoken by his holy prophets. For though this ought not to make them less sensible of their sinfulness, it might help to confirm their faith in the efficacy of those sufferings of Christ, whereby alone sin can be forgiven; and whereby there may be forgiven even the worst of sins.

And thus he connects with their past sin their new hope of mercy: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." This is the exhortation of St. Peter to those who like himself had denied their Lord. This is the voice of mercy, which in the Gospel ever sounds unto the worst of sinners: "Repent, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." There is always much for all of us to repent of. We have all many sins that need to be blotted out. To all of us must come the time when Christ, who is now preached as a Saviour, shall return to us in the office of a Judge. God grant that it may be to us a time of refreshing, of comfort coming to ourselves from the presence of the Lord! God grant that we may in the mean while listen to prophets and apostles, both urging us to repent! God grant that above all we may listen to his Son!

Here we read of one most important end for which the Son was sent into the world; to bless us in turning away every one of us from our iniquities. Here we learn that it is a real blessing, not a hardship, not an evil, but a benefit, a matter of joy and thankfulness, to be so turned away from sin by the teaching of the Son of God. Let us then be glad that our sins are shewn us in the Gospel to be so exceeding sinful. Let us not wish to live in them any longer if we might. Let us rejoice that we may now escape their bondage, that there is now given to us, through faith and prayer, grace sufficient for the victory.

Blessed be God, that He thus has blessed us! Blessed be God that He has shewn us from what we ought to turn, and what we ought to turn to; pointing out on the one hand the sinfulness of sin, and on the other the excellence of holiness! Blessed be God that, besides shewing us the way, He has given us all help in turning, and promised us also, when we are turned, all further help to walk in newness of life!

Peter and John are cast into prison.

1 And as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them,

2 Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now eventide.

4 Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand.

5 And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and scribes,

6 And Annas the high priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

|| Or, ruler.

7 And when they had set them in the midst, they asked, By what power, or by what name, have ye done this?

8 Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11 This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

The priests and Sadducees and captain of the temple were grieved that the apostles should teach the people, and preach through Jesus the resurrection of the dead. That which we do not ourselves believe with joy, we can scarce wish that others should have preached to them. We can scarce help grieving at the sound of glad tidings being heard, if we feel that we have no share in the gladness promised. Even the resurrection from the dead, all fearful as death is itself, all delightful as is the thought of life eternal, even the resurrection from the dead must be matter of mingled grief to those, who for their unbelief and disobedience expect only "the resurrection of damnation." John 5. 29. Never may we thus view with sorrow, what God has revealed for our joy! Never may we thus grudge to let others hear, what it should be our hearts' delight to hear ourselves!

To be put in hold, to be cast into prison, was, we see, all that the first preachers of the Gospel gained in this present world. And this is one good reason for believing them, when they preach through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. For they supported this doctrine by bearing witness to the fact that Christ had risen from the grave. And as in the fact they could not be deceived, so we may be sure that they were not deceivers, because all that they could gain was to be cast into bonds, or to be sentenced, as many were, to death. The resurrection from the dead is therefore certain. It is sure to take place; whether we wish for it or not. Christ has risen, and we must rise. We must rise, and stand before his judgment seat. For thus has He declared of Himself: "I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. 1. 18.

"On the morrow" the apostles were examined by the rulers. They spent therefore the whole night in the prison house; by which means it was perhaps thought that they would be daunted, and so more easily be persuaded to preach Christ no more. For certainly if they had any doubt themselves about the truth of what they had to preach, they were less likely to be positive "on the morrow," after lying all night "in hold." But on the morrow when they are inquired of, "By what power, or by what name, have ye done this?" they plainly and courageously declare "by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole." "This," adds St. Peter, "this is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." That is to say, in Jesus Christ was fulfilled this prophecy of David, in Him, and in his being rejected by the Jews. "Neither is there salvation," he concludes, "in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Here is a truth of most deep importance, set down in words of most plain application. Only by Christ can we be saved; only through the atonement of his blood, only by our faith in his name, that is to say, in Himself. None other name is given unto man. No other name, or thing, or being is there, in the whole compass of every thing that is, no other in which we may safely trust; not in our own works, not in our own faith, not in our own prayers, not in all the prayers, and all the faith, and all the works of all that ever prayed, believed, and wrought; but only in Jesus Christ, and Him crucified, in Him and in his dying for us on the cross. Through Him we may be saved; delivered from wrath, delivered from sin; made safe from sinning for the present, safe from condemnation in the end.

May God give us a saving faith in the merits of his Son our Lord! May God make us not ashamed of our Saviour's cross; not grieved at the thought of his being also our Judge! When we are tied with the chain of our sins, may God by his great mercy loose us; and when we are put in hold in the prison house of the grave, may He set us free for ever; for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord!

Peter and John threatened by the rulers.

13 Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

14 And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

17 But that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

19 But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

20 For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.

21 So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed.

The rulers of the Jews marvelled at the boldness of St. Peter and St. John, because they "perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men." It was evident from their speech and manner that they had no advantages of human learning, no subtilty of worldly wisdom. This would indeed have made their courage past belief, if it were not that they had support from Heaven. And how but by such support can we account for the fact that they were not only bold, but also successful? How can we account for this whole history of the Acts of the Apostles, of their preaching and prevailing against all kinds of opposition, except by the working of Almighty God? What they did was his doing, not theirs. His blessing it was that made their preaching prosper; his power that healed by their hands the sick.

The success of their apostleship in the conversion of the world may be to us at present the more striking of these two kinds of evidence. The miracles to those who witnessed them must have yielded proof still more forcible. And this we are told was the case with the rulers: "beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it." And why should they have wished to deny it? Why would any of mankind now prefer to prove, if possible, that the Gospel is not from God? Because the Gospel condemns things which they love to do. Because it orders them to do what they had rather not. Because it constrains them to feel, what they are reluctant to admit, that they are in point of knowledge but little children, in point of goodness only abject sinners, in the sight of Almighty God. And so also the Jewish rulers had evil motives in their hearts, for refusing to believe, even when at the time they owned to each other, that a notable miracle had been done. And they refused to receive, for their own eternal benefit, that counsel of God for their salvation, of which they felt the proof to be so strong, that they feared it would spread abroad largely amongst the people.

The rulers feared, because they felt that they were wrong. They feared, because of the miracle. They feared, because of the people. They feared, because the miracle was so evident and so strange, as to be likely to weigh greatly with all who heard of it. And accordingly they determined to threaten, what all the while they had no intention to perform. They hoped to influence the apostles, by the same feeling of alarm, which they felt to be so powerful in themselves. Thus to threaten is the common policy of worldly wisdom, and it springs from two of the worst of failings, deceit and cowardice. Let us therefore make it our unalterable rule of practice, never in any way, or at any time, to threaten any thing, which we do not at the time of threatening intend to do. Whether it be with children or with men that we are concerned, let us be assured that such plain dealing is both best for them, and best also for ourselves in the end. That which it is not well to do, it can never be well to threaten. That which we do not really mean, it must be always sin to say.

Whilst the rulers are afraid, the apostles are all courage. They reply in sincerity, as in God's presence, that they could not help bearing testimony to what they had seen and heard; and they put it to the rulers to decide whether they ought not to obey God rather than men. These are the true sources of holy confidence, a resolution to act according to God's will, and a conviction, after due pains taken to inquire, that we are in reality so acting. For what need we fear speaking, when we are persuaded that we speak the truth? Nay, how can we help speaking it, if it be a truth which we are commanded to profess? And what need we fear doing, when we believe that we are doing the will of God? Nay, how can we help doing it, what power shall hinder us, what threats deter, if it be both plainly God's will that we should do it, and also plainly his promise that in doing it we shall enjoy his help, and attain unto the inheritance of his glory?

The prayer and conduct of the disciples.

23 And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them.

24 And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is:

25 Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, ¹ Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

27 For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, 28 For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word.

30 By stretching forth thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus.

31 And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

32 And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common.

33 And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all.

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold.

35 And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, 37 Having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

In the imprisonment of the two apostles there had been fulfilled that which Jesus had forewarned them of, the being brought before rulers for his name's sake. See Luke 21. 12. On their deliverance "they went to their own company." And in the voice of praise, which all then uttered with one accord, they observed how thus there was fulfilled another and more ancient prophecy, which God had spoken by the mouth of his servant David. For herein it was seen how utterly in vain the rulers had set themselves against Christ, in the persons of his ministers. And herein it was made manifest, that however perversely men may exercise the will given them by God, they cannot go beyond, or overturn, what He for our good has counselled, and what He will constrain even the most unwilling of us all, to help to bring to pass. How suitable at such a moment was the prayer which followed! how fit to compose their troubled thoughts, and to secure both for themselves and for their brethren the help they would now so greatly need! How profitable it is to us, as an example, to teach us how we ought in all our need to pray to God, and in all our deliverances to give Him thanks!

Thus therefore let us apply unto ourselves the two chief things which followed on this prayer of the disciples, and on their being filled with the Holy Ghost. First it is said, "they spake the word of God with boldness." Then it is added, they "were of one heart and one soul," and "they had all things common." And these things are thus repeated, first, that "with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus;" and secondly, that the "possessors of lands or houses sold them," for distribution of the price amongst the rest. And to make this matter, strange as it must seem, more certain, there is added the name, the office, and the country, of one disciple who thus sold his land, and who was afterwards well known as the companion of St. Paul. Let us then seek for these proofs of our being filled with the Spirit. Let us speak the word with boldness. Let us never be afraid to own our convictions of the truth. Let us be glad of an opportunity to testify with all meekness, but at the same time with all courage, to testify the things which we believe, before those who are in error or in doubt. And secondly, let us labour after unity; let us strive to be of one heart and of one soul. Let us prove our affection for each other, by the readiness with which we give up of what is ours, for the use of those who are in greater need. Nothing is more helpful to us, if we would have weight in bearing testimony to our Lord, than to sit loose to the world and to such possessions as we have in it. "The love of money," St. Paul tells us, "is the root of all evil." 1 Tim 6. 10. And in this practice of the primitive disciples, that they had all things in common, we see how thoroughly they laid the axe to the root of the tree. See Matt. 3. 10. Though we sell not all we have, let us use it, spend it, give it, as if it were not ours, but lent unto us by God for his service; not for the gratifying of our own vanity or sense, but for the honouring of his name by the benefiting of each other. Oh may God, who has given us all we have, incline us thus to give all to Him! Oh may we never either acquire or possess, never either spend or give, what we cannot lay as at the apostles' feet, an offering of devotion to our Lord!

Ananias and Sapphira fall down dead.

1 But a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,

2 And kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

3 But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart || to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

4 Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.

5 And Ananias hearing these words fell down, and gave up the ghost; and great fear came on all them that heard these things.

6 And the young men arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

10 Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.

11 And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

It is grievous to see how on this occasion the husband and wife agreed together in offence, each encouraging the other in what each knew to be a sin, and both yielding up their souls to the snares of Satan. To Ananias the apostle thus puts the charge: "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost?" Of Sapphira he enquires; "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?" To have the heart filled by Satan, to be taken captive by our evil enemy at his will, this is, we see, no excuse for sin, this hinders not the certainty and severity of punishment. And to have agreed together in iniquity, to have, in what we do amiss, the countenance of those, whose wishes might justly influence our own, this does but add to each one's own offence a share in the sinfulness of the other.

Great was the sin of Ananias and Sapphira in attempting to deceive the apostles, and in them to deceive also the Holy Ghost; especially when they had witnessed, as they must have done in many instances, the mighty works of the Spirit. Great also was their sin in wishing to deceive at all, in aiming to be thought devout by the gift of their possessions, whilst they retained for themselves a part of the price. It was their own to sell or not, as they thought fit. But they could never have been at liberty to pretend to sell it for God's honour and for the common stock, whilst they enjoyed for their own exclusive use a portion of the produce. There are many things which beforehand we are free to choose either way, to sell or not to sell, to give or not to give, to do or not to do. And yet when we have pledged ourselves to do them, we are then no longer free to retract our pledge; least of all if it be a case where we stand pledged to God, if it be a sacrifice we have promised to his honour, a sum which we have devoted to doing good for his sake.

Nor are we indeed altogether free to do exactly what we will with what we call our own. Nor does St. Peter here mean to say that we are so. Ananias and Sapphira could indeed have refused to sell their possession. But such a refusal, at a time when Christians had all things in common, see Acts 4. 32, would have argued in them a sinful love of this present world, a sinful distrust of the promises of Christ, a sinful indifference to the wants of their suffering fellow converts. We are not at liberty not to give largely. We cannot without sin neglect to do all the good that lies in our power. We cannot without lack of faith and charity, refuse to spend, and sell, and give, whatsoever may be better given, or sold, or spent more suitably for God's honour and for our own salvation, than if it were kept by us for our own possession.

Have we not promised to renounce the world? Are we not bound by the same strict obligations as Ananias and Sapphira? And what do we but lie unto the Holy Ghost, if we keep back of the price, which we are bound, most solemnly bound, to dedicate to Almighty God, even our hearts, and all that here we love, which we must count as nothing for the sake of Jesus Christ? Let us therefore ever be aware, that to be worldly minded instead of heavenly minded, this is for us, who are bound otherwise, to lie to the Holy Ghost. Let us be aware that to lie to the Holy Ghost is no less than to lie unto God. The Lord of life and death, He who upholds our existence here, and who could in one moment turn us to the dust from which we were taken, He it is whom we are bound by the most solemn of all engagements to love with all our hearts. Let us be ready then, for his sake, like the widow at the treasury, to part with even all that we have. See Luke 21. 2. And whilst He yet allows us to use it as his stewards, let us both watch and strive, that in all we have and in all we do with it, we use it according to his will.

The apostles, being imprisoned, are delivered by an angel.

12 And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people, (and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.)

13 And of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women.)

15 Insomuch that they brought forth the || sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.

|| Or, in every street.

17 Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the Sadducees,) and were filled with * indignation,

18 And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, 20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life.

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

* Or, envy

Here we read of the respect in which the first Christians were held by the people of the Jews, chiefly owing to the miracles which the apostles wrought, and to the agreement which prevailed throughout the church. "Of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them." Highly as Christians were esteemed, no one pretended to be a Christian who was not. Such was the fear that had fallen upon all, after the death of Ananias and Sapphira! Such was the manifest judgment of Almighty God on falsehood and hypocrisy! Such was the holiness of the genuine believers! Such was also their risk of danger from the rulers, that no one ventured outwardly to join their company who was not inwardly devoted to their cause.

"And believers were the more added to the Lord." This entire separation of the church from the world, with this entire unity of the church within itself, prevailed upon many to adopt the Christian faith. Whilst the signs and wonders, which the apostles wrought, drew together a great multitude from the cities round about; who by the healing of their manifold infirmities were likely to be won over to the truth. Let us be assured that as the hands of the apostles had power to heal the sick, so might we also be certainly healed of our sins, and so certainly would our influence, as we are members of the church of Christ, help greatly to add believers unto the Lord; if only we would attend carefully to these two points, to agree more cordially with each other, and to keep ourselves unspotted from the contagion of the world. Thus might virtue go forth from the whole unto the sick; and the shadow of them that have faith and love, might overshadow for their eternal good, the hearts of such as know not God.

The success of the apostles provoked the indignation of the high priest, and of all them that were with him. And by way of stopping the progress of the Gospel, they resolved to try the effect of force. They "laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison." This was a step further than the last attempt to silence them, which ended in idle threats. And now surely, thought these evil rulers, now that we have taken these decisive measures, Peter and his companions are completely silenced. The walls of the prison are between them and the people. They can preach no more in the name of Jesus. They can no longer heal the sick, cast out the unclean spirits, or draw the people to a new faith and practice. "But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life."

This was an errand too important for God to let it long be hindered by the malice of foolish men. Prison walls, and doors, and locks, and bars, what are these against the purposes of Him, who made the world and all that is therein? It was his will that the Gospel should be preached, should be preached in the very place where its enemies were holding council to suppress it, preached by these very men whom they had cast into prison, and at this very time when they were thought to have been silenced. And whilst the high priest and council were sending to fetch them to be arraigned, or rather before they sent, "early in the morning," the prisoners, having been thus set free by God, were speaking and teaching the words of life. How profitably might this rescue of the prisoners remind us, that God knows how to deliver from captivity the soul that is in the bondage of iniquity! How strongly should it encourage us to hope that, whether our duty be to preach or hear, He will secure to us the means of making known to others, or of knowing for our own peace and joy, the words of Gospel truth!

Lord, may thy Gospel be to us the word of life! May it make us now to live in holiness and love! May it fit us for, and bring us to, a life of endless glory in the world which is to come!

The apostles answer before the council.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned, and told,

23 Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors: but when he had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now when the high priest and the captain of the temple and the chief priest heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: for they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned.

27 And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the high priest asked them,

28 Saying, 'Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us.

29 Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree.

31 Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

32 And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

It appears from this history that when "the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors," it was done so as not to disturb the keepers who stood watching. The persons of the prisoners were removed in such a manner, as could be neither seen nor heard by mortal senses. This may seem in some respects more strange than what happened to Paul and Silas at Philippi, see Acts 16. 25, where the foundations of the prison house were shaken and the keeper of the prison was awakened out of sleep. But in either case the same convictions are forced upon our minds, that what we call the settled order of nature, is settled only for times and seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power; and that when He pleases He can make the things that are, as though they were not, can either set free the prisoners without opening the doors, or open the doors so that none shall see, or manifestly burst them open to the dismay of the beholders.

A miracle so well calculated to fill our minds with confidence, served only to raise doubt in the chief priests and rulers. "They doubted of them whereunto this would grow." To doubt is somewhat short of disbelieving. And yet these rulers, we see, acted as unbelievers. For doubt, unless it be soon settled by diligent inquiry, by faithful and laborious searching after truth, is seldom far removed from unbelief. How indeed can we expect that it should be otherwise? If the Gospel be the word of God, how can we help fearing for those who doubt it, for those who doubt without seeking for the truth, that He who alone could save them from this fall, will soon give them over to a reprobate mind?

That the mind of the rulers was still bent on evil is evident from the question which they put to the apostles, asking them, "Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name?" To which Peter and the others answered by asserting what before they had only asked as a question: "We ought to obey God rather than men." God had raised up Jesus. Of this they had been witnesses. Of this they were also bound to bear their testimony. For Him had "God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour." And besides they had the Holy Ghost bearing witness with them by his gifts. And therefore they could say with confidence that in bearing this witness they were obeying God. For what could it be but God within their hearts, and God reigning in the world around them, who at once gave them a confident persuasion that they could heal the sick, and also at the same time make the sick whole of their diseases; at once made them try to speak in tongues unknown before, and enabled them to utter what they tried; at once made them wish to lead a life before unheard of, and gave them the grace to walk by faith in love?

This same rule of obeying God rather than men we ought also to put in practice ourselves, if ever we should be called upon by men to do that which seems to us to be by God forbidden. For what can be more manifest apostacy from our bounden duty and service to our Lord, than wilfully in any single thing to please each other, at the expense of displeasing Him? Only here we ought to take pains to know what God's will really is; lest we disoblige those whom we are bound to love, without really obeying God. And especially if our rulers are concerned, if it is some command of theirs which we are in doubt about, then we should very carefully consider, how plainly it is the will of God, that we should obey them who bear rule over us. To violate this duty on the false pretence of scruple in our conscience towards God, this would be hypocrisy. To be disobedient to our rulers in a case as clear as this of the apostles, this would be devotion to our Lord. Let us study to obey man out of a sense of duty, out of our love to God through Christ; and we shall then have little difficulty in determining, when, out of the same duty and the same love, we must resolve to refuse obedience to each other.

God make us willing to be subject one to another, because desirous to be subject unto Him!

The counsel of Gamaliel.

33 When they heard that; they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

34 Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space :

35 And said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

36 For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody ; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves : who was slain ; and all, as many as || obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

37 After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him : he also perished : and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38 And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone : for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought :

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it ; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

40 And to him they agreed : and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go.

41 And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.

42 And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.

The chief priests were cut to the heart by the faithful preaching of the apostles ; and immediately consulted together to put them to death. In this however they were hindered by the weighty and reasonable advice of Gamaliel. And they were content therefore with having the apostles beaten, that is to say, scourged by the common executioner. At this, we are told, the sufferers rejoiced. Both the pain and shame to them were matter of joy. For so they well knew that Christ their Lord had suffered before He entered into his glory. And so they were glad to suffer with Him, in the assurance that they should be also glorified together. See Rom. 8. 17. And so ought we also to be glad, when God sees fit to lay on us any sickness, sorrow, or suffering, even though it be attended by public shame ; if not brought on us by means of any fault of ours. And by thus feeling, and thus behaving, by being glad to suffer when it is God's will, and suffering as they that are really glad, meekly, cheerfully, and thankfully, we both get forward in our way to heaven, and we also help forward those who witness our behaviour. We help forward in our measure, according to the trial to which God has called us, the consummation of that blessed time, when the work of God shall prevail throughout the world, and men shall see it and believe.

For to what human means do we so greatly owe the success which the Gospel has had hitherto, as to the patient endurance of wrong by those in all ages who have maintained the truth ? What truly godly doctrine has not at some time drawn down on its professors the enmity of those amongst whom they lived ? What sufferings have equalled those which have been borne with patience in defence of a true confession ? And what can more plainly prove that the Gospel was of God, than its thus prevailing, by the fortitude in suffering which it wrought in those who suffered for Christ's sake ? That it was not the counsel or the work of man is made evident, not so much by its success, as by the method by which it has succeeded. Not by the weapons of worldly warfare, not by the indulgence of worldly appetites, not by a compromise with any single evil propensity, has the Gospel won its way amongst mankind. But in spite of being most unwelcome to our pride and passions, in spite of being most inconsistent with the use of any force or violence, persecution or compulsion, it has prevailed against infidelity and idolatry, in the most understanding nations of the earth. With Gamaliel then we conclude, that as the impostors who arose in former times came to nothing, so would this religion of Christ have vanished, unless it had been indeed of God. With Gamaliel we would argue, that to oppose the Gospel, to oppose what the Gospel teaches, to oppose it knowingly, wilfully, to oppose it with our lips or with our lives, this is no less than fighting against God.

What a fearful thought is this ; that with the will which God has graciously given us we should ever dare to disobey his commands ; that with the strength to choose and act, which He has bestowed, we should ever presume to fight as against Him ! What can be more pitiable than the condition of that man, who thus opposes the Maker of the universe ? What can be more clear than that we thus oppose Him, not only when we doubt his word, but when we disobey his will ? To murmur under his chastisements, is not this to fight against God ? To abuse his blessings, is not this to fight against God ? To refuse the self-denial He requires, to fix on earth the affections which He has told us to set on things above, see Col. 3. 2, to revel in enjoyments by Him forbidden, to be devoted to pursuits by Him denounced, to repine in disappointment by Him allotted, nay, not to be thankful in the worst of sorrows which He can possibly send us for our good, what is this but to fight against God ?

May He, who loved us when we were sinners, now dispose our hearts to be at peace with Him ! May He help us to suffer shame for his name even with joy ! May He strengthen us that we cease not, with our lips and by our lives, both to profess and to preach to others the Gospel of our Lord !

Seven men appointed to the daily ministration.

1 And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration.

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables.

3 Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.

4 But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

5 And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch:

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.

7 And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith.

§ 373. How we ought to do good and to distribute.

How hard it seems for many to be of one mind! No sooner was the number of the disciples multiplied, than there arose this murmuring of the disciples amongst each other. As if the enemy of souls, in envy of this increase in the multitude of Christians, took occasion by their being multiplied to sow the seeds of discord. Let us be watchful, whilst we labour to make converts to the faith, that we preserve ever the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Let us take pains, that as the multitude of disciples is increased, there be made no opening for increase of dissension with each other. And especially let us be upon our guard against that love of money, which led to the murmuring here mentioned, and which is elsewhere said to be "the root of all evil." 1 Tim. 6. 10. For this jealousy between those converts who were inhabitants of Judæa, and those who came from the cities of the Greeks, related to the distribution of the common fund, amongst the widows of each separate nation. As if the apostles, who had counted all things but loss for Christ's sake, were likely to be unjust in the allotment of the property committed to their care. As if any partiality which they could possibly have shewn would have justified this murmuring of the brethren against each other.

From the behaviour of the apostles we may learn to do good at all risk of unjust suspicion; and also, when such suspicion shall arise, when such murmurs are uttered against us, then to take all reasonable steps to satisfy the murmurers. As long as no one murmured, they submitted to the labour of distributing the common fund. But now that the office raised a jealousy among the flock, they desired the brethren to look out among themselves seven men whom they might appoint over the business. These have been thought to have been ordained also to a spiritual office, such as is held by deacons in our church. For though the apostles had no longer time for serving tables, for distributing the sustenance of the body, it was highly fitting that this business should be duly overlooked, by those who were also qualified to be ministers of religion. And that these seven were thus appointed, at once to distribute alms and to preach the Gospel, is further made probable by the manner of their appointment, by prayer and the laying on of hands.

This distinction between the work which was most fit for the apostles, and that which became any other of the disciples, may be applied also to the difference between Christians in general, and those of us who are set apart for the ministry of the word. To preach the Gospel, to administer the sacraments, to be devoted to this work of preaching and of prayer, certainly this must be the most powerful of all means of doing good, within the reach of any Christian man. But those who are not duly called to so excellent an office, must not be above the task of discharging duties, which are here called serving tables. To do good in the temporal necessities of their brethren is an employment most worthy of their thoughts and time. To give food unto the hungry, clothing to the naked, and to visit them that are sick or in prison, this is a business fit for the disciples of Him, who went about doing good. Nor, if it be duly done, can it fail to help very greatly in spreading abroad also the knowledge and the faith of Christ. For what can more fix the attention of the beholder than a life devoted to such labours of love? What can more soften the hearts of those who share such acts of kindness? To do good then, and to distribute, let us not forget. Let us make it one chief head of our expenses. Let us make it one chief employment of our time. Let us be careful so to give as that none may murmur. Or if any murmur, let us remove, if possible, the grounds of murmuring. Let us give, not for our own pleasure, but for the good of those whom we relieve; and not for their good only, but for God's honour, and in order that Christ may be glorified. Let us give so as to win others to the faith, by shewing that true Christian faith makes us fervent in our zeal, and hearty in our charity, patient in well doing, though suspected of doing ill; and however much we love the good, yet kind also to the unthankful and to the evil.

Stephen doeth great wonders, is accused of blasphemy.

8 And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen.

10 And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake.

11 Then they suborned men, which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God.

12 And they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law :

14 For we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the || customs which Moses delivered us.

15 And all that sat in the council, looking stedfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

§ 374. The glory that shall be revealed.

Stephen was one of seven men selected by the brethren, and appointed by the apostles, for the ministration of the fund common to the early converts. And here we are told that he "was full of faith and power," and "did great wonders and miracles among the people." And the whole chapter following is taken up with an account of his address to the Jews, and of their violence in putting him to death. This may serve for an instance of the piety, and zeal which were manifested by the primitive Christians, and of the temper with which they were persecuted. For Stephen, though the first martyr, was but one out of many thousands. And we ought always to remember that this book is not a full history of the acts of the apostles, or of the Christian church, but only a short account of a few chief events, such as might best give us a just notion of the whole.

We are to conceive it then to have been at this time daily happening, amongst a people well advanced in ordinary knowledge, that great wonders and miracles were wrought, that they who wrought the miracles preached an entirely new religion, that the various sects then existing disputed with the preachers of the new faith, that public attention was called to the subject, and that the objectors were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which the new preachers spake. This ought to have convinced them of the truth of what was spoken. But they were so much the more resolute to oppose. Such is the perversity of the will of man. Such is the obstinacy with which we are tempted to cling to false opinions, false doctrines, false excuses, before God; even when we know their falsehood. But let us, when we cannot gainsay the conclusions which Scripture forces upon our minds, let us meet them with no false pleas, with no suborned witnesses. Let us own ourselves overcome by the force of truth, and rejoice to be its subjects henceforth for ever.

The charge brought against Stephen was that he had spoken blasphemy against the temple and against the law. Probably he had been repeating what our Lord declared, of his visiting Jerusalem to destroy it. This might seem to his accusers to be blasphemy. Or they so represented it, in order to his greater injury. And therefore to meet this calumny, he was endued with great power from on high, so as not only to speak with irresistible force, but also to look with the majesty of an angel. This in him was an evident miracle. Let us rejoice to know, that if we speak faithfully the truth, for Christ's sake, we also, through his grace, shall be glorified. Already will the countenance express that peace which this world cannot give. And hereafter, in the realms of light and love, we shall receive the "crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5. 4.

What is exactly meant by such expressions we cannot indeed now explain. Nor can we more than feebly understand any one of the many figures, by which Scripture teaches us, that heaven includes all that we can here conceive, and more; all that we can here love, and more. And this is doubtless one use of these images, that they remind us how excellent that state must be where God now is, and where we hope ere long to dwell for ever. Whenever therefore we look on any thing which has beauty upon earth, when we listen to sounds of sweetness, or indulge in feelings of most pure delight, never let us forget that these things, however excellent, however great, are not worthy to be compared for one moment with the glory which shall be revealed in us. See Rom. 8. 18. That glory is set before us in the Gospel of our Lord as an object on which we might each day reflect, and which any day we might expect to reach. Strange that we should believe in its being so high, so great, so good, and yet so seldom think of it, so faintly long for it, so feebly labour to attain it. Let us endeavour by this reflection to kindle our desires for heaven from the flame of our earthly affections. And the more we love or admire any thing on earth, let us the more covet those heavenly joys, which, compared with this very thing, be it what it may, are beyond all question far, far better.

St. Stephen begins his defence.

1 Then said the high priest, Are these things so?

2 And he said, Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran,

3 And said unto him, 'Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall shew thee.

4 Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6 And God spake on this wise, That his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.

7 And the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God: and after that shall they come forth, and serve me in this place.

8 And he gave him the covenant of circumcision:

and so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

9 And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him,

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house.

11 Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12 But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first.

13 And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls.

15 So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers,

16 And were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

§ 375. Of our sinfulness, and the mercy of our Saviour.

Stephen had been accused of blasphemy against the law of Moses, and against the temple of Jerusalem. For the Jews counted that both Law and temple would endure as long as the world should last. And to imply that they would cease, that Jesus would destroy the temple, and substitute the Gospel for the Law, this seemed to the Jews no less than blasphemy against God. Stephen therefore, by way of defence, enters into a history of their fathers, even of those to whom the promise had been given. And it was evidently his intent to shew, first, that before there was either Law or temple, the patriarch had been in favour and in covenant with God; and secondly, how since the giving of the Law, the Jews had resisted their own lawgiver, persecuted their prophets, and failed in many things to profit by the ordinances, for which they professed so high a value.

And first, it is clear, that before the Law was revealed, God entered into covenant with Abraham; giving him both the promise of the land of Canaan, and also the ordinance of circumcision, for a sign of the covenant thus made. And in this covenant we have a lively representation of our state as Christians. For we also have a land of promise on which as yet we set not foot; which we wait for in hope, work for in fear and love, being for a while in bondage unto the flesh, subject to the temptations of the world and of the devil, and in jeopardy each day we live of losing our life eternal.

From the favour shewn to Abraham previously to the Law, Stephen next proceeds to dwell upon the like mercy vouchsafed to Joseph, and to his father Jacob. Joseph was sold into Egypt; "but God was with him." Affliction for the present is our way to joy for ever. We too are in bondage during this present life, but if only we believe, God is with us also. In the land of our captivity there is deliverance at hand. When famine reigns elsewhere there is corn in Egypt. No one suffered more than Jacob in the bereavement of his son. No one was more greatly comforted in having him restored. No portion of God's universe has perhaps fallen more deeply into sin than ours. We have sinned. But Christ has died. He has died for the saving of sinners. We have sinned, and are sentenced to death. But through Christ, blessed be his name, we have assurance of the resurrection from the dead. Like the brethren of Joseph, we have been at enmity with God. We have been estranged from Him who has condescended to be called "the firstborn amongst many brethren." Rom. 8. 24. But like Joseph, He desires to make Himself known unto us. Like Joseph, He provides for us abundance in our want, and sheds over us, in the anguish of our souls, the tears of love, and of compassion. Like Jacob, we die, and are buried with our fathers. But even in our graves we are not forgotten. Even there does our Saviour remember us for good, and undertake for us that we shall surely rise again. Our flesh must see corruption, but it shall also, through Him, see incorruption. It must be sown in weakness and in dishonour. But it shall be raised in glory and in power.

God grant that what here we suffer, either in life or death, may turn to our everlasting joy! God grant that whilst we live we may live unto the Lord, and that when we die we may in our death be buried with Christ, and rise again with Him to everlasting life!

St. Stephen's defence continued.

17 But when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt.

18 Till another king arose, which knew not Joseph.

19 The same dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 ¹In which time Moses was born, and ²was || exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months:

21 And when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.

23 And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

24 ³And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

25 For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood not.

26 ⁴And the next day he shewed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou didest the Egyptian yesterday?

29 Then fled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

§ 376. Our unwillingness to be amended.

St. Stephen in his defence before the council of the Jews, continues to dwell at length on the history of their fathers; by which means he secured their attention, pacified their anger, and prepared them the better to be convinced, if their hearts had been open to conviction. From this portion of the history we may derive many useful lessons for ourselves. Here we learn that God fulfils his promises in due season. However long we have to wait, when the times draw nigh, which He knows to be the best, we may be sure He will not forget. Here we may call to mind how ill it fared with the king which knew not Joseph, with the people, who requited by ill usage all the benefits which they owed to the children of Israel. And we may hence do well to consider, that there is no sin more sure to bring its punishment with itself, than unthankfulness either towards man, or towards God. Here we may note, how in the midst of the afflictions of the Hebrews, Moses was raised up to be their deliverer, and preserved by the very daughter of their oppressor. So easy is it for God to overrule the designs of the wicked for the benefit of his people, and to raise up the poor out of the dust to set him among princes. Brought up at the court of Pharaoh, learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, mighty in words and deeds, Moses chose, and it is a choice which we should resolve to imitate, rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. See Heb. 11. 25. "When he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel." It came into his heart. God put it there. It was not there by nature. It is only by the grace of the Holy Spirit that we can better like to do good to others, than to please ourselves. Let us be aware when any good thought arises in our hearts, let us be aware that it is God who put it there. Let us not dare to check it. Let us reverence it, follow it, be thankful for it, and pray that it may be maintained, renewed, strengthened, perfected.

Moses then, thus moved by God, desired both to redress their wrongs, and yet more to reconcile them amongst each other. But they would neither thank him for smiting the Egyptian their oppressor, nor yet for setting them at one in their mutual strife. How fit is their conduct on this occasion to remind us of our unthankfulness to our Saviour Christ! And how fit is this zeal of Moses to remind us of our Saviour's love to us! Has not Christ smitten our oppressors? Has not He vanquished sin and death? Has not He urged us above all things to love one another? In our mutual oppressions, quarrellings, and strife, does not his voice affectionately proclaim, "Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?" And what thanks do we commonly give Him for these his good offices? Are we not often sorry that sin has been thus vanquished? Do we not almost wish that it were not so certain as it is, that we may, if we will, be free from sin? Are we not in our pride reluctant to be reconciled to those with whom we are at variance, apt to set at nought that Mediator, who has both made our peace with God, and would have us to be in all things at peace with each other? Is it not the feeling of our hearts, when conscience in vain reproves, when Scripture commands and we will not obey, when Christ and the Holy Ghost remonstrate in our souls against sin, and we resolutely continue sinners; is it not the answer of our hearts, though we say not the very words with our lips, "Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?"

Well it is for us if Christ flee not at that saying, if the Holy Spirit, thus many times grieved, have not altogether ceased to move us for our good. May God grant that for the future we may listen more attentively to his words, more willingly follow his godly motions, and more faithfully fulfil his will! May Christ make us to be at peace with God, incline us like Himself, to visit our brethren in their affliction, to set at one them that are at variance, and to have peace one with another.

30 ¹ And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sina an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.

31 When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight; and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold.

33 Then said the Lord to him, Put off thy shoes from thy feet: for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

34 I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt.

35 This Moses whom they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush.

36 He brought them out, after that he had ² shewed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red sea, ³ and in the wilderness forty years.

37 This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, 'A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, || like unto me; him shall ye hear.

38 ⁴ This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us:

39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt, § 377. That Christ is not far off.

We have here two points insisted on, which are of great importance in the defence of Stephen. The first is, that the very Moses whom the Jews refused, saying, "Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer, by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush." Whence the Jews might do well to take warning, lest the same Jesus whom they rejected should be, as Stephen preached, no other than the Christ. Now the Jews gloried in the recollection of the deliverance which they had received by the hand of Moses. And they were ready, no doubt, to marvel at the blindness of their fathers in refusing one who proved afterwards so mighty a deliverer. Let us apply always to ourselves the astonishment we are apt to feel at the mistakes and perversity of others. Let us be surprised at our own ignorance, obstinacy, and pride. Let us to surprise add sorrow, and repentance, and amendment.

The second point of importance in the argument here urged by Stephen on the Jews is, that Moses, in whose law they trusted, had himself spoken of another prophet to arise, and bidden the Jews in due time hear him; so that Moses was himself a great witness in behalf of Christ. And the more the Jews believed in Moses, they ought to have believed the more in Jesus also. And this perhaps may account for the discredit which has been cast on the books of Moses, as well as on the other writings of the Old Testament, by those who disbelieve the Gospel. For us, it is sufficient, believing as we do that the Gospel is from God, it is sufficient to find in it the Scriptures of the Old Testament continually referred to as inspired by the Holy Ghost. Many things therein we may be unable to understand. Many we may be unable to account for. Many parts, by distance of time and country, may be now obscured to us, which to the Jews were once plain and profitable. But of this we cannot doubt in any case, that all was written by guidance from above; for it was of the Old Testament that St. Paul was writing, when he said what we may safely apply also to the New, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God." 2 Tim. 3. 16.

And this was the opinion universally received amongst the Jews. For though they rejected Moses at the first, they were afterwards induced to receive him by means of miracles. It was the burning bush, it was the rod which was made into a serpent, and wherewith Moses wrought signs and wonders, and drew down destruction on Pharaoh and his host; these were the things which convinced his brethren, that he was a messenger from the Most High, a prophet who truly spake the very will of the Almighty. And so it was also with Jesus Christ; He did that which man could not do, He spake as man never spake. See John 7. 46. He was like unto Moses in his mighty works, in his revealing God's will. He was greater than Moses, for He was not a servant but a son, the everlasting Son of the Father.

But now He is gone away from us for a time. And many, who if He were still on earth would be convinced by the majesty of his presence, are tempted, like the Jews of old, to say, "we wot not what is become of him." Surely He is not far off. He is nigh to hear our prayers, and to present them before his Father's throne. He is nigh to note our sins, and to intercede, if we repent, for our forgiveness. He is gone into heaven for a time, there to be our Ruler for the present, and thence to come back and to be our Judge. This is what is become of Him. He is gone, that in his absence the Comforter might come; that the Holy Spirit might make holy our hearts and souls. He is gone; but He will come again quickly. Suddenly as a thief in the night; as the lightning that shineth from one end of the heaven to the other; He will come openly, visibly, sensibly. Let us watch and pray; in order that now whilst He is absent we may obey Him as our Ruler, and then be not afraid to meet Him as our Judge.

The defence of St. Stephen draws to a close.

41 And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

42 Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, ¹ O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, ² that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen.

45 Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drove out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David;

46 Who found favour before God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.

47 ³ But Solomon built him an house.

48 Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet,

49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?

50 Hath not my hand made all these things?

St. Stephen here concludes that part of his address, which consists of a review of the Jewish history. He dwells on the idolatry of which the Jews were guilty, as a proof of how little respect they had themselves unto their Lord. And he shews also, from God's own words in the prophecies, that the temple, of whose honour they were so jealous, was not holy in itself, but only by God's appointment, and therefore might very probably be by Him destroyed. And this distinction we may apply to many things which were of force under the elder covenant, as opposed to nearly all that is enjoined in the New Testament. The former were often matters of indifference in themselves, but might because they were appointed. The latter have been appointed, commanded, and revealed, because they are right for us to believe and do.

There is a close connexion between the two things here objected to the Jews, the worship of idols, and the superstitious reverence for temples. Both we know abounded and still abound amongst the heathen. Both probably were gradually introduced by practices meant at first for helps towards devotion. We set apart a place as sacred for the worship of God; this is reasonable and right. But to suppose that God so dwells there, as not to be present every where; this is superstition. To speak of blasphemy against the temple, which the Jews did here, was to speak of the temple as if it were in God's stead. And therefore they might need to be reminded, by the utter destruction of that sacred house, that heaven is God's throne and the earth his footstool. See Ps. 66. 1. And so should we also, whilst we cherish all due respect for the houses of Christian worship, continually be sensible that God is present every where, and continually be mindful of the time when all houses made with hands shall perish, and God shall be all in all. His hand hath made all these things, and can, in a moment, bring all to nothing. Out of church as well as in, his eye is near to see, his arm to help or to correct. Let us live as if it were his temple every where; let us in every thing give thanks; let us pray without ceasing.

In like manner idolatry may probably have arisen from an undue reverence, paid to things really worthy of our admiration and regard. Thus men began to worship the works of God instead of God Himself; and at length also they even worshipped the work of their own hands. Let us be thankful that we are altogether relieved from ignorance so gross, from sin so grievous, as that of idol worship. Let us be watchful that we never fall into that sin which is in Scripture pronounced to be most akin to it, the love of money. Covetousness is idolatry. See Col. 3. 5. And it is so because it is the setting up of mammon for our God. It is the bowing down before mammon and worshipping him. It is paying to mammon that honour and regard, which are due neither to money nor to rank; neither to relations nor friends however highly valuable, however thoroughly amiable, but only to our Father which is in heaven, only to our Lord and Saviour Christ. And here also, as in idolatry, let us carefully remember that it is impossible to serve at once both God and mammon. Men began with idols as helps towards devotion. Soon did they forget God and worship idols only. We may try for a time to love both God and mammon, but this attempt will soon end in loving the world only. Our diligence in business, our kindness to each other, our readiness to do what which is just and generous and true, these things, unless they spring from real affection towards God, are little less than an idolatrous attachment to this present world. To this world's happiness they are directed, and in it they have their sole reward. Let us then henceforth love God far the first, nay, if it be of the world we speak, let us love only God. Let us be no less than at enmity with the world. Let us remember that the friendship of the world is enmity with God. And let us be assured that enmity against the world, against the sin, the pomps, and vanities of the world, such enmity is absolutely necessary, in order for us to love God truly, or for us to be beloved by Him.

Grant Lord, that like Thee, whilst we hate the sin, we may have grace to love the sinner. Teach us to be at once at enmity with the world, and in charity with all them that dwell therein.

St. Stephen is stoned.

51 Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye.

52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them which shewed before of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53 Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it.

54 When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth.

55 But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up stedfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God.

56 And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.

57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, 58 And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.

59 And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.

60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.

§ 379. How to forgive our enemies, and to worship Christ.

"They stoned Stephen." He has the happiness of being the first of martyrs; the first who is recorded to have suffered death for the sake of the cross of Christ. A martyr means, a witness who lays down his life for his testimony; it means one whose life is taken by violence because he bears witness to the truth. Such a witness was Stephen, the first martyr that we read of to the truth of Christ Jesus. How fearlessly did he bear his testimony! How powerfully did he rebuke the unbelief of the Jews! How suddenly and forcibly did he sum up his short account of their history, with this application of the whole to themselves: "as your fathers did, so do ye!" They resisted the Holy Ghost; "so do ye!" They were stiffnecked; so are ye. They were uncircumcised in heart and ears; so are ye: "For he is not a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh." Rom. 2. 28. They persecuted the prophets, and slew them which shewed before of the coming of the Just One. Ye have been betrayers and murderers of the Just One Himself. Of you therefore, as Christ declared of this generation, shall be required the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world. See Luke 11. 50.

How unexpected must have been this reproof to Stephen's hearers! How little are we led to look for it by the calm tone of his previous address! Probably at this point of his defence he saw signs of impatience in the council; and therefore hastened, whilst he yet was spared, to apply to their own hearts the history of their fathers' sins. And probably the Holy Spirit, by which he spake, urged him thus to denounce their unbelief, thus to encounter their wrath and fury; that he might present to the Christian church for ever this animating history of true martyrdom. "They were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth." Such was the effect of truth plainly spoken, but unwillingly received. If agony so great can now arise from sin brought home to the conscience here, what must be the feelings of the wicked and impenitent, in that place which is described as outer darkness, where "shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth!" Matt. 22. 13.

Whilst the Jews "gnashed on him with their teeth," Stephen "looked up stedfastly into heaven." Fury is in their hearts, in his is peace; in his are hope and joy. He "saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God." That light which cannot be approached, in which he was so soon to dwell, was now for a few moments by God's power forestalled. A few moments before death his soul was made sensible of that glory, which, on his dying, would otherwise have first burst upon his sight; of that glory, which on our death, will fill also our senses with delight, if only like Stephen we die in the Lord. Heaven opened, Christ standing at the right hand of God, a place of which no earthly beauty or magnificence can give us the most faint conception, beings to whose power and goodness no human excellence can approach; these were in one moment seen by Stephen. This is the vision to which death might in one moment bring us that now hear these words. Who then would not rather die with Stephen, than live with them that compassed his death? Who that lives the life of unbelief and sin, can fail to be numbered with the enemies of our Lord?

But if the martyr's death may not be ours, we at least may imitate the martyr's prayer. Let us learn how to forgive our enemies, by seeing how Stephen forgave his. Let us learn where he had learnt, from Christ our Lord. And whilst of each ill turn they do us we repeat, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," let us repeat also the prayer which Christ first used Himself, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Luke 23. 34. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." With such words as these let us lie down to that which is most like to death, our nightly rest. With such a thought as this, let us lie down when we can no longer speak, to sleep the sleep of death. And here also let us learn to say, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. Lord, my Ruler, Guide, and Judge; Jesus, my Saviour, the Deliverer of my soul; receive my spirit, take into thine own keeping, in this fearful hour, that in me which never dies. Take me, and deliver me from wrath. Take me and keep me, unto Thyself for ever.

Philip preaches Christ in Samaria. Simon is baptized.

1 And Saul was consenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judæa and Samaria except the apostles.

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3 As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison.

4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word.

5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.

7 For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

9 But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one:

10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.

12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

§ 380. That we should rejoice, and give God the glory.

Saul who is here mentioned as consenting to the death of Stephen, was the same who is afterwards called Paul. And it is profitable for us to be thus told beforehand what an active part he took in the persecution of the Christian church. For thus a door is opened to our faith and hope, however great our sins have been, however long we may have been bent on wickedness or vanity, a ground is given us to believe and hope, that we may, like Saul, be converted unto God. But whilst he yet was making havoc of the church, the faithful Christians "carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentations over him." They were not afraid to own him for their brother; they were not ashamed to weep over his death. The change to him was glorious. But to them the loss was great. We may be devout towards God; and yet lament the decease of friends on earth. We may deeply feel regret for their departure, though we believe that they are gone to a better world. The Gospel will not root out our feelings of affection for each other. But whilst it allows us to indulge them, bids us to restrain them within wholesome bounds. We must sorrow, but not as they that have no hope. We may lament, but not as murmuring against God. We may love our brethren; but as loving God still more. We may carry them to their grave with lamentation; but it must be also with thanksgiving and with cheerful hope.

From the violence of this first persecution it followed that the disciples, all except the apostles, were scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judæa and Samaria. Thus the preaching of the Gospel was extended. For "they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word." Such is the common end of man's devices, when they are set up against the will of the Most High. Whilst we struggle and resist, God's work so much the more prospers. The more men persecute, Christ so much the more is preached. How clearly does this shew us the folly of attempting either to oppose the truth by violence, or even to propagate it by force! Let us remember therefore in our practice, if there be any one whom we wish to win from error, we must do it not by severity, but by kindness. We must shew that the truth which we maintain, works in ourselves a right Christian temper.

As one instance among many of what happened in this persecution of the Christians we read how successful Philip was in the city of Samaria. "The people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did." "And there was great joy in that city." What a delightful testimony of the true fruit of the Gospel, effectually preached! What a just account of the state of feeling which it ought to work continually in our hearts! For a time it may make us sad. But on the whole it must help to make us joyful. For a time it may constrain us to mourn for sin. But in the end it will enable us to rejoice in our forgiveness. And not only with the people did Philip's preaching thus prevail, but also with one who himself had been looked up to as "the great power of God." This was Simon, who "in the same city used sorcery;" and who knew that he must lose his own influence in proportion as the Gospel of Christ should succeed. His conversion proved therefore the more plainly the force with which Philip preached, the truth and power of the miracles which Philip wrought. The miracles to which Simon had pretended were now really taking place. And he who had been used to make others wonder, now wondered himself, "beholding the miracles and signs which were done." Let us aim in all we do, not to be ourselves admired, but to give God all the glory. Let us prefer wondering at the marvels of his providence and grace, to being wondered at for our own proficiency. Let us exalt our Saviour, and abase ourselves. Let us acknowledge at once our own sinfulness, and the sufficiency of his atoning blood.

St. Peter reproveth Simon.

14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John :

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost.

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them : only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money,

19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter : for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

Here we again remark that what is related to have happened in Samaria, must serve for an instance of what was done by the apostles in all other places on like occasion. They "heard that Samaria had received the word of God;" and they sent unto them Peter and John, to pray that they might receive the Holy Ghost.

Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." This was an ordinance distinct from baptism, which it appears that none but the apostles might then administer. It was the outward sign and means whereby those who had already been baptized, were endued with the power of working miracles. For in those times the Holy Ghost enabled men to heal the sick, to speak with tongues which before they knew not, and to prophesy or declare abroad the will and work of God, under his infallible direction. And gifts of some such kind as this appear at that time to have been bestowed, by the laying on of hands, on some, if not on many, in every Christian community which any where was formed. Whereas now, when no such marvels are vouchsafed, the Holy Ghost being manifested in the holiness of life of them which believe, there is still practised in the church the like ordinance of laying on of hands, at the time of what we call confirmation.

It was in order to obtain power to work miracles, that Simon desired to purchase with money the gift of the Holy Ghost. This shews that, though he believed and was baptized, he was yet far from fit to be entrusted with these precious gifts; which were meant not for the worldly profit of the possessors, but for the spiritual advantage of the rest. And in order to point out to us how great was this mistake, St. Peter uses these words of strong reproof: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money." Most hateful in God's sight must be the notion of purchasing with money any spiritual gift. Most hateful to a reflecting Christian should be the thought that any benefit can arise, as some have vainly held, from prayers or masses offered formally in our behalf by others, at a price of gold and silver. Most reluctant we always ought to be to bid money for the performance of any duty, or in any way to bow the knee to this idol of a wicked world. Most thankful we ought always to feel that the one thing which is to all most needful is always to be given, never to be sold; that the saving of the soul, that most precious of all objects we can desire, may be purchased without money and without price, alike by rich and poor, alike by the most upright of mankind and by those who have most grievously offended.

For here let us note the force of St. Peter's exhortation: "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." Even this request of Simon's was not such blasphemy against the Holy Ghost as cannot be forgiven. What sin therefore can we ever have committed, what sin can we have imagined in our hearts, for which we might not, if we were to repent and pray, obtain the forgiveness of our Father which is in heaven? And what a motive to our repentance, and to our prayers, is this! God will, through Christ, forgive our sins. God has for Christ's sake forgiven them. Let us pray for ourselves that his pardon may in us be realized. Let us implore the prayers of friends in our behalf. Let us believe what the apostles have declared, that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." James 5. 16. Let us feel sure of what Christ has taught us, that the faint utterance of humility and contrition from the heart of the most abandoned prodigal who now at length returns unto his father's house, will be met with unexpected love, and encouraged by undeserved forgiveness.

God teach us to pray for ourselves and for each other! God help us in our devotions to repent! God forgive us the works of our hands, the words of our lips, and the thoughts of our hearts! Many of them are evil, yea all of them. Only in God's mercy have we hope through Christ. Only if we repent, as Christ would have us, can we truly hope for mercy.

Philip baptizeth the Ethiopian.

26 And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.

27 And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship, 28 Was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.

29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?

31 And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, ¹ He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away:

and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea.

The temple at Jerusalem was noted for its grandeur in all the neighbouring nations. And the worship there celebrated was the means of conveying to many parts of the world some knowledge of the true Jehovah. And thus, from as far as Ethiopia, a country many hundreds of miles apart, it appears that this high officer of state thought fit to journey, for the sake of worshipping at Jerusalem. This may serve for a reproof to those amongst ourselves, who imagine that their business is too urgent to admit of their attending on religious ordinances. Who could less be spared from his post than the treasurer of a mighty queen? What proselyte of the Jews could more reasonably have pleaded that his office excused him from thus visiting the temple? Yet what Christian shall we find travelling a thousand miles, out of pure desire to do honour unto God?

This zealous proselyte came not to Jerusalem out of vain superstition; but took pains to learn the religion which he professed. For as he journeyed in his chariot, he was reading the Jewish Scriptures. And when Philip joined himself to his company, he was employed on that affecting passage of Isaiah, which thus describes the Saviour of mankind: "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter; and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth." Isa. 53. 7. This was a most appropriate text for the discourse of the Christian teacher. "Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." Jesus was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Jesus was He of whom the prophet spake. Jesus was He of whom all prophecy was written, for whose sake the Scriptures were revealed, the temple built, the sacrifices slain, the worship celebrated. All was in order to prepare mankind for the coming of the Christ. All was to prepare their minds for understanding, that by his stripes we are healed, by his death our sins are blotted out. This was the end of the whole Jewish institution. These were the doctrines Philip preached from this passage in Isaiah; faith in Jesus, obedience to his will, compliance with his ordinances, hope of the heaven promised by him.

And that this was the tenour of what Philip said, we may conclude from the anxiety of his hearer to be baptized. Philip must have spoken about baptism. And now when he was inquired of, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" he answers, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." This is that profession of faith which is required of all who are baptized, and is made by others in behalf of those who are too young to answer for themselves. This profession has been made for us. And by this we are now bound ourselves. Let us take heed that we believe with all our hearts. Let us be glad that we have thus been bound to faith and to obedience. Let us go on our way rejoicing. This the eunuch did, when Philip was taken from him. This we must be prepared to do if we should lose any help to edification, which for the present we enjoy. We have still access unto grace through Jesus Christ. We have still hope of redemption through his blood. We have still a life of love to lead, and a crown of glory to enjoy. Let us be thankful for any circumstances which have helped to draw us nearer unto God. But if the help is no longer continued, let us be thankful to think that we can do without it. The minister of the Gospel may be removed from us, or we may remove from him. But the Gospel, and Christ, and God, these are ever with us, for these are every where.

Saul journeying to Damascus is stricken to the earth.

1 And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest,

2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.

3 And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

5 And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

6 And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.

8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

§ 383. How we may know what God would have us do.

On the conversion of St. Paul we would first observe, that it is an instance of God's right, and power, and determination, to raise up, for great and holy purposes, whatever instruments He thinks most fit. No one could seem beforehand more unlikely to be selected for an apostle to the Gentiles, than this great persecutor of the church. But here we see how easily all such difficulties are overcome, where the will of the Almighty is concerned. The fury of the persecutor is converted into the zeal of the apostle. Oh that God might thus turn our selfish pride into a lively regard for his honour; our wrath towards each other into enmity against sin; our covetousness and love of this present world into an earnest desire for the treasures of eternity!

Saul was on his journey towards Damascus, "breathing out threatenings against the disciples of the Lord." His thoughts were dwelling on the havoc he should soon make in the church of Christ. How sad it is to think that any one should have pleasure in persecuting his brethren, for conscience' sake; but how pleasing to remember that in this instance, as in many others of like nature, St. Paul, as he tells us, obtained mercy, because he did it ignorantly in unbelief. Sec 1 Tim. 1. 13. "Suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven." This was what made him fall in weakness and in terror to the earth. "Who art thou, Lord?" were the words of his reply to the voice which said unto him, "Why persecutest thou me?" "Who art thou, Lord?" Had he better known who Jesus was, he would have been less likely to persecute his church. It is ignorance that prompts usually the slander, enmity, and ill treatment which differing sects of Christians often meet with from each other. We note too much the points on which we are at variance. We know too little, or think too little, of the many and most important matters in which we are agreed.

"And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest;" and yet Saul neither knew Jesus, nor had ever seen Him. To do ill then to the disciples of Christ, is counted for doing ill unto Himself. And we may apply to any evil usage, which Christians are tempted to inflict upon each other, we may apply what our Lord said, of giving food unto the hungry, clothing the naked, and visiting the afflicted; "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25. 40. How ought we then to watch, lest in any way we injure or oppress a fellow creature, and above all a fellow Christian! It is Christ whom we persecute, if we persecute his brethren. It is Christ whom we wrong, defraud, or slander, if we slander, defraud, or wrong any one of the least of those, whom He has allowed to be called by his name.

And now observe what an instant change was made in the intentions of Saul the persecutor. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" It is no longer his own will that he consults, but he submits himself to the direction of the very Jesus whom he persecuted; and by his direction he goes into the city, and there waits patiently to be told what he should do. Christ tells him by means of some one else. He uses the ministry of men to direct those whom He would bring into the way of life. And on that ministry we must be content to wait, however much we might prefer to be directed by Himself. Saul had been before blind through ignorance, and now when he arose from the earth, he had lost the use of eyesight. But at the end of three days, it pleased God both to restore his sight, and to enlighten his understanding. However long we have to wait, after once we are awakened to the necessity of caring for the soul; however long we have to wait ere we can know the truth, or be sure that indeed we know it; let us use the means which God appoints, let us go where He tells us, and consult those whom He commissions to instruct us, and we shall at last know certainly what He would have us do.

Lord, what wilt Thou have us to do? Whatsoever be thy will; whatsoever sacrifice Thou requirest; whatever idol we are expected to give up; whatever pain, however irksome, to endure; whatever duty, however difficult, to do; enlighten our minds to know thy will, and move our hearts that we may love to do it!

Saul is baptized and preacheth at Damascus.

10 And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name.

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel:

16 For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?

22 But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.

§ 384. When we are converted we ought to strengthen the brethren.

How exact is the description here given to Ananias of the abode and the occupation of St. Paul! "Go in to the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth." How lively is the notion which these words convey of that truth which is elsewhere set down in Scripture, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good!" Prov. 15. 3. There is no house in any street, there is no street in any city, there is no city in the whole world, but God knoweth both them that dwell therein, and what they are about. Well is it for us, if of us it may be truly said, "Behold, he prayeth." Well it is, if God sees in our families that we kneel down together to ask his blessing, and to proclaim his praise. Well it is, if when most we are alone, when we have entered into our chamber and shut to the door; well it is, if the voice that here spake to Ananias can still truly say of us, "Behold, he prayeth." No sight can be more welcome unto those who have joy over a repentant sinner; no sight can be more acceptable to God, who would have all men come to repentance; than for us, his fallen creatures, to draw nigh to Him with the confidence of sons, through the mediation of his Son our Saviour Jesus Christ. Whether we are alone or in company, whether at home or abroad, whether at leisure or engaged in business, let us still feel that God is nigh to hear, and glad to hear our prayers.

For this end it is necessary that we both see clearly and feel deeply the things which belong unto our peace. There must fall from our eyes those scales of error, which make us blind to God's mercy in the Gospel; which render us insensible to the love of Christ in dying to save our souls. We must receive our sight, and also, like St. Paul, be strengthened. We must obtain grace to help from God most high. Whatever change we have already undergone, so far as it has been for good, has been of God's doing. Whatever change we yet need must be also of his gift. And to obtain his precious promises it is required that we pray as He commands. We must exert ourselves according to what measure of grace we have, if we would hope, through God's mercy, to have more. We must not look for a conversion so sudden, so sensible, so unsought for, as this of the apostle Paul. We must not presumptuously suppose that God sees in us any such great fitness for any so good a work; or that we are in any such sense, as he was, chosen vessels unto the Lord. By grace we stand through faith; and one of the chiefest of all graces is humility. Let us think humbly of ourselves, and God will raise us up; let us feel how greatly we need improvement, and He will be more likely to change us for the better.

And especially when we are ourselves converted, let it be an object most dear unto our hearts, to convert or to strengthen our brethren. This is the first thing we hear of Saul after his conversion, "Straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." The further we have been from preaching Him ourselves, either by our lips or our lives, the nearer we have been to persecuting Him, the more we have approached by our repeated sins to crucifying the Son of God afresh; the more let us desire, the more let us endeavour, by the tenor of our lives, and by the utterance of our lips, to do honour to the Lord who bought us. And in this matter, the address of Ananias to his convert, may serve for a useful guide. "Brother Saul," is the name by which he calls one who had so lately persecuted the Church. As brethren let us address the most hardened sinners; as brethren let us address the most determined unbelievers, if we would hope to win them unto faith in Christ.

Saul is laid wait for both by the Jews and by the Grecians.

23 And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him:

24 ' But their laying await was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

26 And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him.

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cæsarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.

31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judæa and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

1 2 Cor. 11. 32.

§ 385. How we ought to profit by the day of prosperity.

In the escape of St. Paul from Damascus, we learn how vain are the devices of men to hurt those whom God desires to save; or to hinder that work which He designs to do. Whilst the enemies of Paul "watched the gates day and night to kill him," his friends let him down out of the city "by the wall in a basket." It mattered not how mean was the conveyance, where the object was so important and the end so excellent. It matters not how humble be the post, how servile the work, how unworthy of our birth, or station, or abilities, in the estimation of the world, if the progress of the Gospel is concerned, or our own proficiency in faith and grace. No situation in which these can place us, no duty which these can require at our hands, ought to be counted too mean for the most noble, too low for the most eminent of Christ's disciples.

And now when Saul was safe out of Damascus, the disciples at Jerusalem refused his company, supposing that he was not a true believer in Christ. This shews us, how lasting are the ill effects of errors once committed, of sins once known against us. However sincere our repentance may have been, even true disciples will not give us credit for it, and the world will scarcely ever believe it to be true. But the more we feel or apprehend this hardship for ourselves, let us the more labour to remove it from the path of our brethren. Barnabas, the son of consolation as he is called, took Paul "and brought him to the apostles." This is an office we may be glad to execute, to introduce to the communion of true believers those who have been heretofore estranged from the faith. This is an office which we may render easy to our neighbours, by being ready to receive those whom they thus bring to us. This is an office which might be rendered almost needless in the church, if we would all think less hardly of the brethren who offend; if we were ready, in their repentance, to believe all things, to hope all things. See 1 Cor. 13. 7. The disciples were all afraid of Paul, when they believed not that he was a disciple. It is only perfect love which "casteth out fear." 1 John 4. 18. And nothing can remove from our hearts, in the conversion of our offending brethren, all suspicion of their sincerity, all apprehension for our own security; nothing but that charity which "believeth all things."

At Jerusalem, we are told of Paul, that "he spake boldly, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him." The Grecians mean those Jews who spake the Grecian language, and used the Greek translation of the Old Testament. And these, we may remember, were the very persons with whom Saul had joined hands at the death of the first martyr Stephen. Now that he feels the sinfulness of having consented to that death, they are among the first whom he tries to convince by argument that Jesus was the Christ. If there be any whom we are conscious of having encouraged in their sins, or whom we remember as having helped to encourage us, let us not hesitate, when we ourselves know better, to convince them also of the truth. The Grecians went about to slay Saul. Those with whom it may be our duty to dispute, will more probably go about to silence us with scorn. But what might we not gladly encounter, either of ridicule, or shame, or pain, to give to those whom we once have loved the peace which we now feel ourselves, or to save them from that endless misery from which we have learned to fly with fear and trembling.

When the brethren had saved Paul from the hands of the Grecians, and sent him forth to Tarsus, the churches, we are told, had rest "and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." This is the right use of rest from persecution, for a church to grow in numbers and in grace. This is the right employment of respite from affliction, for the soul to make progress in holiness and in love. But how seldom do we thus profit by the day of prosperity! How seldom in the history of the church, or in the record of our own memories, do we find that as our blessings have been multiplied, our hearts have been more fixed on heaven, or our thanks more freely offered to the Giver of all good gifts! God make us for the future to profit by our joys, or else continue to chasten us for our good! God help us, whilst we rest, to walk in fear, to be edified and to edify one another, or else bring us, by withholding from us rest on earth, to peace eternal in the heavens!

St. Peter healeth Æneas; raiseth Tabitha from the dead.

32 And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.

33 And there he found a certain man named Æneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy.

34 And Peter said unto him, Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

35 And all that dwelt in Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord.

36 Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not || delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and shewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, he presented her alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

§ 386. That we must not despise the lowly.

We have here an account of two great miracles wrought by Peter, as he was passing throughout all quarters to confirm the faith of the early church. In the first of them we may observe how carefully the apostle ascribed the glory unto his Lord: "Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole." Not by his own power did he pretend to do this thing, not for his own credit did he desire to do it. Not for our own credit, not by any power or any might of ours, let us think to do any good thing, not thus let us desire to be of use unto our brethren, or to improve ourselves. It is Jesus Christ that makes us whole. It is He, who by the atonement of his blood has healed our infirmities, and enabled us to walk in newness of life. It is his grace which moves us to the good that we desire, which works in us the good we do. Let us be careful to ascribe it to his mercy. Let us be glad to think of Him and of his love, on every occasion that occurs for fulfilling his will. Whether it be that we help to heal the sick, whether we labour in the instruction of the ignorant, whether we work to give food unto the hungry, or contribute to deal forth the bread of life unto the nations which still lie in darkness and in the shadow of death; in any case let it be, not our pleasure, but our Lord's, that we are thinking of. Or rather let it be our pleasure to think of his.

Of Dorcas it is observed, that "this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died." The good, we see, die as surely as the evil, as painfully, as suddenly, and according to our reckoning as unseasonably. For it is not in this present life, in the enjoyment of its blessings, or in the length of its continuance, that the chief advantages of faith and piety are found. Nor are the services of any Christian, however eminent, however highly honoured or painfully regretted, of such value in the sight of God, as that He cannot afford to cut them short. In the midst of our good works and almsdeeds which we do, or which at least it is our duty to perform, we are liable, each hour of our lives to sickness and to death. "This night thy soul shall be required of thee," Luke 12. 20, is a summons no less likely to be sent to the most patient and persevering saint, than to the most careless and wilful sinner. But how different are the feelings with which it would be received! How different in Scripture is the account of that fool, as he is called, to whom this summons was proclaimed, from the blessedness of those who die in the Lord! "Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them." Rev. 14. 13.

Pleasant it is in this world for their remaining friends to see on earth the fruit of their labours. Welcome to Peter was the sight which these widows who stood by him weeping shewed, "the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them." But what is all that here we can effect, to what we hope hereafter to enjoy? What is the little good that we can do on earth, to the treasure which is laid up for us in heaven? And who that can hope for the departed that they are gone to that better place, who would wish them back again here? Not for her own good, we must suppose, but only for the benefit of the church, was Dorcas recalled to life. For her it must have been far better to depart and to be with Christ. For them it was most profitable that she should be raised again to dwell amongst the saints upon the earth. "It was known throughout all Joppa, and many believed on the Lord." Thus what was her loss was gain to them, and therefore also we doubt not joy to her. Whether by our life or by our death, whether by our patience in well doing or our fortitude in dying, we can most help to edify others, or to minister to God's glory, we should be alike contented, thankful, joyful.

Cornelius seeth a vision.

1 There was a certain man in Cæsarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway.

3 He saw in a vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:

6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

§ 387. How we ought to value the ministry of man.

It is plain that before Cornelius became a Christian, he was a worshipper of the true God. For he was "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house." And in proof of his fearing God, it is added that he "gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway." It is the very substance of all practical religion, to feel that devotion unto God which inclines us to frequent prayer, and that cordial love of man, of which one fruit is abundant almsgiving. And this religious practice was attained to, we see, in no small degree by Cornelius, whilst yet he was unacquainted with the Christian faith. He had learned to pray devoutly. He had learned to give much alms. All which he had learned perhaps in part from the instruction of his Gentile parents; but chiefly from the Jews amongst whom he dwelt, and from the Jewish Scriptures, to which he now had access. For though probably not a proselyte, certainly not circumcised according to the flesh, he was one of those whom St. Paul describes as being Jews inwardly; whose circumcision is "that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." Rom. 2. 29.

The prayers and almsgiving of Cornelius went up for a memorial before God. They served to remind Him of his gracious promises, and of the wants of this his devoted servant. But prayers and alms, and charity, and piety, are not enough for the fulfilment of our present joy, much less for the justifying of our souls, in the day when our works shall follow us. No, there must be prayers more fervent than our own, there must be love more pure than any we can feel, bounty more large than any we can exercise; there must be the love of Christ in dying for us, the mercy of God in forgiving us, the intercession of the Holy Spirit in our behalf. These things are necessary for our being saved in the end. And these things it is good for us now to know; it is most important for our safety that in these things we should now believe. And therefore the more large were the alms of Cornelius, and the more continual his prayers, God was so much the more pleased to vouchsafe this vision, to send this angel, and to bring him by these means unto faith in Christ. Let not us then ever make light of this only sure foundation, on which true religion can be built. Let not us suppose that any prayers or almsgiving can avail, where faith in Jesus might be duly had, but is not. We have been told in this matter what we ought to do. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," this is our direction, "and thou shalt be saved." Acts 16. 31. From faith in our redemption through his blood must spring devotion unto God, and goodwill towards man, prayer and praise, and attendance on the preaching of God's word, almsgiving, and forgiving of offences, peacemaking among brethren, and peace within ourselves.

But these things we can neither rightly know, nor correctly practise, without the help of that teaching by the ministry of the church, which Christ has for this end ordained. And accordingly Cornelius is thus instructed, "Send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:" "he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." The angel was not to answer that anxious inquiry, "What is it, Lord?" Nor would the Lord Himself enlighten this new convert by direct revelation from on high. It was his will that Peter should be sent for. It is his pleasure to use the ministry of man in making known the Gospel to the world. It is not enough that we give alms and pray, we must also wait upon the ordinances of the church. We must attend on public worship. We must join in the prayers of the congregation, and listen to the preaching of the clergy. We must call on them, or send for them, and consult them, on the things which we ought to know and do. For so it is God's pleasure to bring good out of infirmity, out of weakness to perfect strength, and by the help of our frail fellow creatures to support our frailty and to confirm our faith.

Lord, by whatever means Thou thinkest good to teach us what we ought to do, make us intent to learn! Help us both to pray and to give alms! help us both to hear and to believe, both to hear those whom Thou hast sent to teach, and to believe all which Thou hast condescended to reveal!

St. Peter seeth a vision.

9 On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour:

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

11 And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17 Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

19 While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20 Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come?

22 And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

It is not easy to say what was the nature of the visions vouchsafed to Peter and to Cornelius. Certainly they were made to see in some lively manner the things here described as seen, and to hear so as to be sure they heard the words here described as spoken. But how they were thus admitted to hold converse with the world of spirits is more than we may be able to explain. Only we are sure that with God all things are possible. And if any one should still ask us how these things are consistent with the state in which we here live, we may answer in the words of St. Paul, spoken of his own vision and revelation of the Lord: "whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth." 2 Cor. 12. 2.

In this vision the apostle was instructed in the duty now to be performed, by a reference to the distinction between different kinds of animals in the Jewish law. Some were counted clean, and allowed to be eaten. Some were called unclean, which the Jews were forbidden even to touch. See Levit. 5. 2. And therefore Peter, when desired in this vision to eat of all manner of beasts and creeping things and fowls, did no more than his duty as a Jew, in answering, "Not so, Lord." But that which may be right for us to say or do, when we know but little of God's will, becomes wrong, when by his grace we are enlightened to know more. The commandments, which God laid upon the Jews for a time, must give way to those which He reveals to be binding on all Christians, unto the end of the world. And so also the duties which seem binding upon Christians, when first they feel the force of their Christian obligations, are often in their progress superseded by others, which require of us more eminent devotion, or more enlarged love. At first we may be struck with the importance of separation from an evil world. Afterwards we may come to hope of the very worst whom we behold, that they may be better in God's sight than we suppose, and learn to count nothing common or unclean which He may for Christ's sake have cleansed. Distinctions which at first we think important, afterwards seem as nothing in comparison with things in which the most different of mankind agree. To be of divers nations, to profess divers creeds, these things are lost sight of, when we consider as we ought, how God has made of one blood all nations on the earth, has redeemed through one Saviour the whole race of mankind, and through Christ will assuredly save in the end all in any nation and of any creed, who fear Him, and work righteousness. See ver. 35.

Thrice was this sign given unto Peter, thrice this declaration made, that he should not call common what God had cleansed. This repetition shewed how surely the sign would be fulfilled. For thus Joseph told Pharaoh of his dream: "And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twicc; it is because the thing is established by God, and God will shortly bring it to pass." Gen. 41. 32. Thus God often, in his dealings with us his creatures, repeats his lessons of instruction, for the further satisfaction of our reluctant hearts. Never then may we be backward to communicate any good we are permitted to receive! Never in any blessing God has to bestow may we count ourselves more worthy than our neighbours, or reckon those who to us seem most unworthy, as being in God's sight common or unclean!

Cornelius rehearseth the matter to St. Peter.

24. And the morrow after they entered into Cæsarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.

25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intention ye have sent for me?

30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing,

31 And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

§ 389. How we ought to esteem none common or unclean.

Cornelius is waiting for the arrival of St. Peter, fully expecting to be instructed in the chief things which ever after he must do. He has called together his kinsmen and friends that they may share his advantage and be partakers of his joy. "And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him." This shewed both his sense of the apostle's authority, and his ignorance of the religion which he was now to learn. He offered to his fellow creature that outward homage which is due to God alone. "But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man." This is a sufficient proof that no manner of religious worship ought ever to be paid, either to the apostle Peter, or to any other of the creatures of God. How sinful then is that worship, how injurious to the honour of God, how perilous to the salvation of man, which in the church of Rome is often paid to saints and angels! Thankful we ought to be that we are exempt from the contamination of this gross offence, watchful that we no less diligently avoid that sin which is in Scripture pronounced to be most like unto idolatry, the love of money.

And further, these words of the apostle may serve to put us on our guard against giving or receiving any too servile attentions from each other, as between man and man. Distinctions of rank remain under the Gospel, which would have the great still great, but poor in spirit; the poor still poor, but rich in grace. For though neither poor nor rich ever cease out of the land, we are all made equal by the same hope of heaven, by the same redemption through Jesus Christ. In this sense the brother of low degree is now exalted; and the rich brother now made low. See James 1. 9, 10. And how can it agree with such Christian equality, for those who have this world's advantages to treat as far inferior to themselves such as are most poor and abject? When therefore the most wretched of our kind endeavour thus to abase themselves in our presence, asking perhaps for alms, or acknowledging some help received, with a homage fit only to be paid to God, let us feel within our hearts the force of this address, "Stand up; I myself also am a man." I am come of the same blood, let us feel, whether we so say or not, I am come of the same blood, I am made of the same dust, as yourself. I was born with the same propensity to sin. I expect to return to the same dishonour in the grave. It is only by God's goodness that I enjoy this advantage for a time. This rank or wealth, authority or ability, this refinement of nature or education, these are talents entrusted to my care to be adorned with due proportion of humility and love. Earnestly I hope that ere long we may both share alike in endless glory. Earnestly I desire, in the mean time, to esteem others better than myself, and to treat with most kind attention those who are in any respect inferior or worse.

In this sense we might feel of all our fellow creatures that there is nothing common or unclean. In this way we ought to shew that we so feel, by speaking with affection, and never with contempt, of those who in points of blessings or advantages appear to be the most beneath ourselves. Oftentimes, when we the least suppose it, their prayers are heard, however ill expressed, and their alms, though no more than the mites of the widow, are had in remembrance in the sight of God. It is the heart that God looks to in all we do, or rather it is the soul within the heart. It is that which still lives when the heart is cold; which, when all that here makes us differ shall have ceased, will still live for ever and ever. Then will God bring down the mighty from their seat, and exalt the humble and meek. Then He will fill the hungry with good things, and the rich He will then send empty away. They who now treat with cold disdain the most abject of their brethren, or exact for themselves that homage which it ill becomes even the highest to receive, shall then begin with shame to take the lowest place. Whilst they who reject such unseemly courtesy, and had rather wait on others than be waited on, shall be invited by Him who was the servant of all, "Friend, go up higher." Luke 14. 10.

St. Peter preacheth Christ to Cornelius.

34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, ¹ Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

35 But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:)

37 That word, I say, ye know which was published throughout all Judæa, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil for God was with him.

39 And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree:

40 Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly;

41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.

43 ² To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

44 While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

§ 390. The importance of baptism.

St. Peter now sees, and plainly declares, that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is open to Gentiles no less than to Jews. Not only to the children of Abraham after the flesh, but to all who are children of his faith the Gospel is ever open; to any, of any nation, who like Cornelius, learn to fear the true God, and for his sake to be charitable to mankind, to all these is redemption through Christ proclaimed. These in due season God calls to become Christians, or counts, as we hope, for believers in his Son, though through lack of zeal on our part, they never hear his name. Oh that like the apostle, when we learn this truth, we would at once begin to help in the preaching of the word, would make the conversion of the heathen the object of our daily prayer, and of our abundant contribution! Oh, that the more we own God's righteousness in being no respecter of persons, we would the more endeavour to make known to all mankind his mercy in Christ Jesus!

This, we see, is the way St. Peter reasoned. "In every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is, accepted with him." What then? Is it a matter of indifference to make known unto such hearers the glad tidings of salvation? Far from it. This is so much the more reason to preach peace by Jesus Christ. For this so much the more emboldens us to hope, that in every nation are some who would receive the word with joy, and who receiving it themselves, would help largely to make it known to others. And thus might they who now only fear the Lord, learn further to love his holy name; they who now work righteousness in ignorance, might learn to work by faith in Christ. Whilst the thousands who now neither work nor fear, who live as though there were no death, and die as though there were no life to come, these thousands and millions of the heathen might be wrought upon to lead a life of holiness, and to hope for a blessed immortality.

And what an account is this which is here given of our Lord, how well fitted to move the hearts of Gentiles, as yet unacquainted with his history! That Jesus of Nazareth was anointed "with the Holy Ghost and with power;" that He "went about doing good;" that He healed "all that were oppressed of the devil;" that He was put to death by the Jews, raised the third day, shewed openly to chosen witnesses, ordained to be the Judge of quick and dead, and set forth, both by prophecy of old, and by the testimony of the Spirit at that hour, as the propitiation for the sins of all mankind; this was what St. Peter preached to Cornelius and his company, this is what we ought to endeavour to make known to all mankind.

"While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word." Here again there was no respect of persons. The kinsmen and near friends of Cornelius, see ver. 24, were all manifestly endued with power from on high, fitting them to be witnesses of the truth which they had heard. And St. Peter thus encouraged to extend to all the character and privileges of Christians, "commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." What a note of honour for this Christian ordinance, that even where the Holy Ghost was first manifestly given, baptism must be afterwards administered! What a proof that baptism may be conferred, yea and also the gifts of the Holy Ghost, where there has been neither any great length of service, nor any evidence of a permanent impression. To be baptized is one thing; to be saved is another. To be put in the way of salvation, and to have the grace of the Holy Ghost given us, this if we abuse his gifts, if we walk not faithfully in that way, this will but increase our condemnation.

Peter justifieth his going in to the Gentiles.

1 And the apostles and brethren that were in Judæa heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him,

3 Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying,

5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me:

6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat.

8 But I said, Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cæsarea unto me.

12 And the spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house:

13 And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, ¹as on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, ²John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

17 Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?

18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

That Peter should have baptized men that were uncircumcised, nay that he should so much as have eaten with them, this gave great scandal to the Jews, even to those who were converted to the Christian faith. For as yet they were far from being aware that the Gospel would be a light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as the glory of God's people Israel. And we find that they contended with Peter on the subject. So that this apostle had no such supreme authority as some have without reason supposed. And this is a point which it is well for us to note in this history of the early church. For where our Lord has so earnestly entreated in our behalf that we all should be one, we ought to be well assured that there are good reasons for our differing from those, who most confidently profess themselves to be alone in the right.

"But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning." This was the way he encountered their contention; not by strife, but by persuasion; not by contending again, but by setting before them calmly the facts of the case. For us also it is good to hear this history repeated, that we may note what great pains were taken to satisfy those Christians who had been Jews, of God's merciful intentions towards the Gentiles. The vision vouchsafed to Peter, the angel that appeared to Cornelius, the Holy Ghost which fell on them that heard, and the word of the Lord which had foretold this baptism by the Holy Ghost, all these things led the way to this one plain conclusion: "Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?" This is the conclusion we ought to come to, whenever we are aware that God's will is opposed to our thoughts or wishes. We have God's word for our guidance. We have our consciences enlightened by his grace. How often are these at variance with our own inclinations! And what are we that we should withstand God? What are we, that we should murmur against Him? Why hold we not our peace, and glorify God? Why shew we not forth his praise by the thankful submission of our lives?

God hath granted unto the Gentiles repentance unto life. This was the conclusion thus forced upon the Jews. This is a conviction which should now fill our hearts with joy: that unto us who hear these words this grant is made, this gift is given. "Repentance unto life." Not life without repentance. Not life eternal without a change first wrought in our hearts and lives. No, it is "repentance unto life." It is to be changed here, as our way to be glorified hereafter. It is to be made pure, and humble, and meek, and charitable, whilst yet we are on earth, that we may be fit to dwell for ever with God in heaven. We read in Scripture of no state between the two. We hear of no place where that change can be secured, if not on earth. As the tree falls, so it lies. As the Christian leaves his abode on earth, so he stands before the judgment seat of Christ. Now therefore let us strive to repent. Now let us pray daily for the grace of repentance.

Lord, grant to us thy servants repentance unto life. Gentiles we should have now been, but for thy calling and election, given up to ignorance and idolatry. Grant that being Christians, as now we are, we may make our calling and election sure, we may, through Christ, live for ever!

Barnabas is sent to Antioch.

19 ¹ Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.

21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22 Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

23 Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul:

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves ^{||} with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

27 And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

29 Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa:

30 Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

The persecution that arose about Stephen was the means of sending forth preachers of the Gospel to Phenice and Cyprus and Antioch. These at the first preached only to the Jews, of whom there were then many scattered in every city. And through this dispersion of the Jews, it came to pass, that wherever the first disciples preached, there were hearers who knew something of the prophecies, and who worshiped the true God instead of idols. And these when they were converted, "spake unto the Grecians," preached the Lord Jesus to their Gentile neighbours. "And a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord;" a great number both of the dispersed Jews, and of the Grecians to whom they spake. In which matter we see one of the many uses that are derived to the whole Gentile world from the religion of the Jews. And we learn that as the law was to the Jews their schoolmaster to bring them unto Christ, see Gal. 3. 24, so were they also to the Gentiles guides and instructors, going before and teaching us in the way of life. How then can we doubt that their existence at this moment, as a dispersed but distinct nation, is designed for some great use in making known unto the world the riches of God's mercy in Christ? How could we better help towards propagating the Gospel abroad, than by sober serious and sincere endeavours, for the conversion of the Jews at home?

The Christians at Jerusalem, hearing of this success, and being now aware that to the Gentiles God had granted repentance unto life, ver. 18, sent Barnabas to visit their new brethren. And Barnabas both exhorted them himself, and sent for Saul to share his joy, and to enforce his exhortation. Let us be willing, if we have any good work in hand, to impart to others a share in our satisfaction. Let us not hesitate, out of jealousy or pride, to call in, as did Barnabas, one greater than himself, if we may thus hope to do more good unto our brethren, more honour to our Lord. For a whole year these two laboured together in this single place. This was no small time to stay, for one who had so much as Paul to do. But though he had yet to preach in cities without number, he was contented to pass one whole year at Antioch. Hence we may learn not to be hasty in changing any situation, in which God has once permitted us to settle. The inconveniences we feel where we are, and the advantages we might gain by a removal, oftentimes seem far greater than they really are. Time too is always lost by change. And how little of time have we on earth to spare! How much work for God have we here need to do! And how short is our season for doing it!

"And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." This was a name by which they were first known among their enemies. This was a name to which they were not ashamed to own, when it provoked persecution or contempt. And well did they adorn this most excellent of names, by what is here recorded to their honour, the sending from Antioch relief into Judæa, against a time of great dearth throughout all the world. At such a season how readily would the worldly minded think, that we had better lay by all we can for ourselves. But these early Christians thought otherwise. They felt that to the brethren in Judæa they owed the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ. They knew probably that these were at least as likely as themselves to suffer in the approaching dearth. They thought more of the sufferings of their brethren than of their own. They "determined to send relief." "Which also they did." Let us learn hence to do what we resolve. Let us learn that in times of general calamity, it is the part and privilege of a Christian to administer more help to others, than he is willing to have ministered to himself. He offers instead of asking for consolation. He foregoes his own claims for his neighbour's benefit. He remembers the saying of the Lord Jesus, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20. 35.

Herod killeth James, and taketh Peter also.

1 Now about that time Herod the king || stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church.

2 And he killed James the brother of John with the sword.

3 And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.)

4 And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: but † prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

7 And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out, and passed on through one street: and forthwith the angel departed from him.

11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

|| Or, began.

† Or, instant and earnest prayer was made.

The magistrate, we are told by the apostle, "beareth not the sword in vain." Rom. 13. 4. That is to say, he has a right to put to death all those who are condemned by equitable laws. But what a grievous abuse of kingly authority was this which Herod is here said to have committed; "he killed James the brother of John with the sword." And what a fearful reason for taking "Peter also," because he saw that the killing James pleased the people! There is no more sure road unto the practice of all manner of iniquity, than to be loving the praise of men more than the praise of God. This it was that urged Herod to repeat an act of cruelty, which under the show of kingly power, was only so much the more offensive murder. This it is which tempts many to utter courteous falsehood, rather than offend by unwelcome truth. This it is which makes others often to neglect their prayers, to suppress their convictions of religious truth, and rather than be grieved by their neighbours' scorn themselves, to grieve the Holy Spirit of God. Never let us begin, lest we know not how far we shall go. Never let us enter on this way of pleasing men: for the first step taken knowingly in what is wrong, makes us guilty of all that may ensue.

Thus Peter was put in prison, and delivered into the charge of four quaternions of soldiers. "But prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him." Which then shall we esteem the strongest, the bars of the prison house, or the voice of the Christian's prayer? the four quaternions of soldiers, or the unarmed and defenceless church? Behold, that very night, ere Herod would bring Peter forth, and give up his life to the fury of the people, the chains of the apostle are loosed, the darkness of his cell is lighted up with heavenly glory; and with an angel for his guide, he walks out into the city, as if there had been no force to hinder him! The light shined in the prison, but the soldiers saw not. The angel spake aloud, and smote Peter on the side, but the soldiers heard not. Even the apostle himself scarce knew what was done, "but thought he saw a vision;" as the Israelites are represented to have said when delivered from captivity, "then were we like unto them that dream." Ps. 126. 1. So far above all that here we should expect is God's present mercy to his faithful servants! So far above all that here we can imagine are the good things He has in store for them for ever!

Who then is now burthened with the chains of sin? who barred up within the walls of evil propensities, or long indulged habits of iniquity? Let him behold the light from heaven, that has shined on the prison house of this lower world. Let him follow the messenger of God's covenant, who alone can give liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison unto them that are bound. See Is. 61. 1. "Arise up quickly." This is the voice that awakens us from spiritual sleep. "Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals." These are our orders for what we have to do the moment we are awake. No time is to be lost. No pains, no preparation of ours must be neglected. We must not argue, that because God does so much for us, therefore we need do nothing; because the angel has opened the prison door, therefore let him also bind on our sandals, or enable us to do as well without them. No, we must do what we can. We must do all that we are bidden to do ourselves; and be thankful also for all that is done for us. When, through God's help, we are put in the way of safety, we must strive to work out our own salvation. And when we have ground to think that we are really safe, we must be free to own how certainly we know, that we owe all our deliverance unto God.

Peter is in safety. Herod is eaten up of worms.

12 And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came || to hearken, named Rhoda.

14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.

15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, it is his angel.

16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17 But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judæa to Cæsarea, and there abode.

20 And Herod † was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and having made Blastus ‡ the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because their country was nourished by the king's country.

21 And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made jurament unto them.

22 And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.

24 But the word of God grew and multiplied.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their * ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

|| Or, to ask who was there.

Whilst Peter was in prison, prayer was made in his behalf by the church without ceasing unto God. And now that he is set free, at the first house he visited, he found many "gathered together praying." They were praying probably at that midnight hour for him whom they supposed to be in prison, and whom Herod meant to have brought forth to judgment the very next morning. Let us learn hence to persevere in prayer unto the end, not for temporal but for spiritual deliverance. Our sins may be many, our strength small, our hope feeble. But let our faith at least be large. Let us pray in faith, nothing doubting. In the hour when our danger is most extreme, up to the moment when our fall seems most unavoidable, let us pray in faith, nothing doubting that God will make us a way to escape. And behold, whilst we pray, our chains are loosed, we are saved from what we most deeply feared, shame now, and death for ever. The damsel who came to hearken when Peter knocked, "opened not the gate for gladness." See the folly of giving way to such violent emotions, as endanger the very safety of those, whom we should be most glad to save! See how much better it is, like Peter, to consider the thing soberly, than like Rhoda, not to open the gate for gladness! See the evil of distrusting information, merely because it appears improbable! It was want of trust that made the disciples answer, "Thou art mad;" and again, "It is his angel." True charity opens the gate for gladness. True faith gives us always the conviction, that nothing is too hard for the Lord.

Whilst Peter was receiving the kind greetings of his friends, Herod was enraged at the loss of his prisoner, and commanded that the keepers "should be put to death." Visitations, which move not the sinner to repent, seem usually to harden his obdurate heart. And here we see to what extremity of injustice a man may come, by acting on suspicion without proof. For Herod probably supposed of those keepers, that either wilfully or negligently they had let the apostle go. Let us take always for our guide in judgment, whether of public affairs or in private conduct, the Christian rule, that we think no evil. Let us never treat a fellow creature as guilty, let us if possible never suppose him to be guilty, as long as he might yet possibly prove innocent.

Not content with doing evil, Herod coveted the praise of doing well. He refused not the flattery of the blaspheming multitude, "It is the voice of a god, and not of a man." And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost." What a fearful instance have we here, of God's power to punish the most daring sinners, of his determination to bring low those who most highly exalt themselves! How should it make us loathe the flattery of the world, and dread even the least approach to a sinful love of worldly distinction! How careful, how watchful should it make us to give the praise of whatever advantages we possess, and especially of whatever good we are enabled to do, to God who doeth it in us, to Christ who liveth in us the life we live, so far as it is a life of holiness and love! Then might we not fear to die, if we were to live continually unto the Lord. Then should we not be dejected at the thought, that worms shall destroy this body, if we were firmly persuaded that yet in our flesh we shall see God; and also that in Him we shall see, not a Judge that will sentence us to death, but a Saviour who will deliver us into eternal life.

Paul and Barnabas are sent forth by the Holy Ghost.

1 Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, ¶ which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister.

6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-jesus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10 And said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

13 Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John departing from them returned to Jerusalem.

§ 395. The sin of turning men away from the truth.

The separation of Barnabas and Saul for the work to which the Holy Ghost had called them, is a thing to be carefully observed; as throwing light on the appointment of ministers, at this early period of the church, whether to the office of the ministry in general, or to any particular situation. At that time, when miraculous gifts were vouchsafed, the Spirit gave utterance to the will of God, by means of those who had the gift of prophesying. And probably in this manner it was signified to the church, that Barnabas and Saul were to be ministers. But besides this call of the Spirit, they were also outwardly appointed, by the laying on of the hands of those who were already in the sacred office. See Acts 8. 18. And this practice is still retained amongst our Ives. Ministers are appointed at set times and places, by persons duly authorized, and in the presence of the congregation; so that all may know the source of their authority. In the absence of miraculous gifts, it is put to their own consciences to answer, whether they are inwardly called and moved by the Holy Ghost. And this point is also further ascertained by inquiry into the fruit of the Spirit, the holiness of their lives; the people amongst whom they have previously resided, being charged, if they know of cause why they should not be admitted into holy orders, to signify the same forthwith. Let those therefore who would profit by the ministry of the church, watch for and pray for those who are likely to be ministers. Let them pray that it may please God to bless their ordination, and to bless their work when they are ordained.

The first thing recorded in the joint mission of Paul and Barnabas, is what happened in the case of Sergius Paulus and Elymas the sorcerer. The deputy called for them "and desired to hear the word of God." The sorcerer endeavoured "to turn away the deputy from the faith." Here we have two important lessons; a warning against hindering the faith of others, and an encouragement to zeal and eagerness in hearing the word of God. We cannot too earnestly desire to be edified. We cannot be too anxious to learn "the doctrine of the Lord." And the more we desire, and the more diligently we attend upon the means of grace, we may confidently expect that we shall believe with the more lively faith, and obey with the more hearty zeal. Let us therefore resort to God's house, where his word is preached. Let us, when we cannot leave our homes, send for those who are appointed to instruct us. Let us be glad to read what has been written for our instruction by ministers and members of the church, remote from us in distance, or removed by death. And above all, let us study with devout attention that volume, which contains the record of what holy men of God spake, as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. See 2 Peter 1. 21.

But how different, how fearful, is the course of those, who not content with being careless of their own salvation, endeavour to corrupt their brother's faith, who seem to wish, by adding numbers to their cause, to divert their own attention from the sad suspicion, that it is weak, and vain, and baseless! Far be from us all such mad attempts to darken counsel by words without knowledge! See Job 38. 2. Far be from us that laxity of principle which would undermine the principles of our neighbours! Far be from us that looseness or carelessness of living, which corrupts both the faith and practice of those who behold our inconsistency! Let us labour rather that we may help others to believe better, by adorning our own faith with holiness of life. Let us thus help to give light unto our brethren; and we shall daily be more enlightened ourselves.

Paul preacheth at Antioch in Pisidia.

14 But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down.

15 And after the reading of the law and the prophets the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience.

17 The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

18 And about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness.

19 And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.

22 And when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will.

23 Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus:

24 When John had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

25 And as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

Here we should observe, nearly at the beginning of St. Paul's laborious journeyings, how little he grudged any toil of travelling, any risk of harm by sea or land, so that he might further the great work he had to do. From Paphos to Perga in Pamphylia, from Perga to Antioch in Pisidia, these were but short travels, compared with those, in which he spent afterwards all his time and strength; and all in the cause of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. What a change from the kind of journey which he was taking, when the Lord met him on his way to Damascus, going thither for the purpose of putting Christians into prison! Like unto this change in the apostle's errand must be the alteration in ourselves, from the life we lead whilst we are indifferent to the love of Christ. Then we are on the road to sin, doing harm to our brother Christians by our ill example, and by our unbelief helping to crucify afresh the Saviour of mankind. But as we come to believe in earnest, as we repent from the heart, as we become changed in the inmost soul, then we must be always diligent and patient in well doing, ready to communicate to the wants of others, and sparing no labours which can tend to their advancement in faith and piety, in holiness and love.

Next let us note what was the subject of the apostle's preaching, when the rulers of the synagogue invited him to speak. It was to the Jews who dwelt at Antioch that his discourse was addressed. And he first recited some chief points in the history of their fathers, their deliverance from Egypt, their sojourn in the wilderness, their settlement in the land of Canaan, their long continuance as a nation under judges, whilst the Lord their God was their King, see 1 Sam. 10. 19, and their desiring afterwards to have a king like unto the nations which dwelt around them. Thence he proceeded to mention David, from whom he told them that Jesus was raised "unto Israel a Saviour." And he then reminded them of John's having preached in the wilderness, and having spoken of one that should come after him.

Now this manner of discourse may serve to shew us, that the Gospel is addressed not to our feelings only, but also to our reason or understanding. Our preaching, our exhortation, our admonitions to each other, must refer to facts, to the history of the Old Testament and of the New Testament, to the proofs of the truth of both, to the connection of the one with the other. It must be our object to know well the contents of both. It must be our delight to learn, and to point out, how each helps to make the other at once clear, convincing, and affecting. And in these studies we must shrink from no labour of inquiry, from no irksome work, of hand, and eye, and mind. And what thus we have learnt with pains, we must teach with patience. We must go back again, if necessary, to the first elements of the history, or to the first principles of the doctrine, of Christ. We must bear with the waywardness of children, with the ignorance of them that are but babes in Christ. We must neither evade the inquiries of the thoughtful, nor despise the backwardness of the dull.

May God give us leisure, ability, and zeal, to understand aright, to feel deeply, and to communicate extensively, the precious truths of his most holy word! May He teach us how to study and how to teach, how to know and how to explain to them who are in ignorance, the several portions of his holy book! And ever as more we daily know, may God of his great mercy most graciously enable us also to do the more!

The preaching of Paul at Antioch concluded.

26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent.

27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

28 'And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain.

29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre.

30 'But God raised him from the dead:

31 And he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers,

33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, 'I will give you the sure mercies of David.

35 Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, 'Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

36 For David, || after he had served his own generation by the will of God, 'fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption:

37 But he, whom God raised again, saw no corruption.

38 Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

39 And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

40 Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in 'the prophets;

41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

St. Paul calls the Gospel which he preached "the word of this salvation." And he tells his hearers that it is sent both to the children of the stock of Abraham, and to all among them that fear God. And now let us observe what chief points he insists upon. The death of Christ, his resurrection from the dead, forgiveness of sins through Him, and the being justified by Him, by believing in Him. These are the glad tidings which St. Paul had to declare unto his hearers. These are the doctrines, which he warns them at peril of their perishing, by no means to despise. And these tidings he confirms by the words of prophecy, very plainly relating to the rising of the Messiah from the dead, and therefore also to his first dying for our sins. This was a very different view of holiness, a very different method of being reconciled to God, from what might be learnt from the law of Moses. And this difference is insisted on at great length, as we are well aware, by the same apostle* in his Epistles; where he shews the insufficiency of the works of the Law, and explains how the just shall live by faith.

Do we then, who are Christians, thus believe? Do we rest our hope of being justified, not in our own works, not in our own faith, but only in Jesus Christ, by our believing in Him? Do we consider these things tidings of great joy? Are these the things noted in our memories as the most welcome of any news we ever heard, that Christ died for us on the cross, that Christ in our behalf arose from the dead, that through Him we have forgiveness of sin, and that, if we believe, by Him we are justified from all things from which we could not be justified by the law of Moses? Would we know certainly how these truths affect our feelings? Let us look to it, and see, how they affect our lives. We shall not altogether neglect to put in practice what we really feel deeply in our hearts. Do we then die with Christ in his death? Do we crucify our affections for his sake? Are we risen again in newness of life, like as Christ was raised from the dead?

"Other foundation," this same apostle tells us, "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3. 11. This points to the reason, why our religion does not work in us that effect which we could wish; either of holiness or of a heavenly mind, either of peace, or hope, or joy. We are building on a wrong foundation; or rather it is on no foundation at all. One only can be laid, that is worthy of the name. We have not given due precedency in our thoughts to that chiefest of all mysteries in the Gospel, God manifest in the flesh, see 1 Tim. 3. 16; that mystery which is revealed, explained, fulfilled, in Christ dying for us on the cross. Henceforth let us begin at the right beginning, and we may hope to be more successful in the end. On the right foundation we may expect that we shall raise due height of piety, due fervour of devotion. We may trust, if we begin with devout reliance on the great truths revealed in the Gospel, we may trust that we shall enjoy the great gifts there promised, and reach to the great glory therein set forth.

God teach us to lay the only true foundation! God help us to build thereon a Christian life! God make us, whilst we believe in Christ and in all that He has done for us, God make us to live as Christ has taught us, and to love as Christ has loved us!

Paul and Barnabas turn to the Gentiles.

42 And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them † the next sabbath.

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God.

44 And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles.

47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, 'I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.

49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51 But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

"The Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath." This is the first point mentioned concerning those who afterwards believed. They desired to hear the word of God. "Faith cometh by hearing." Rom. 10. 17. This was the first point in their being ordained to eternal life, disposed, prepared, put in order, towards attaining it. Let us but first long to hear the Gospel, and we shall soon joyfully believe it. Let us believe it, and we shall soon be far upon our way towards our inheritance eternal in the heavens. "And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." What a delightful account is this, of the zeal which was excited by the preaching of Paul and Barnabas, that a whole heathen city should come together to hear him! How seldom is any large proportion of a Christian town assembled at one hour, though in many places, for worship, or for instruction in religion! How many in each single family are often absent, far more often than they need! How many families scarce send forth one single hearer to the preaching of the word of God! How seldom are the numbers of our worshippers such as to fill with envy those who speak against us! How commonly do our half empty churches rather give ground of triumph to our enemies, bring shame upon ourselves, and do dishonour to the cause of our Redeemer! Oh, if we would continue in the grace of God, let us never neglect his worship in the congregation; let us never fail to come together to hear his word, to praise his goodness, and to implore his grace!

"But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy." This is a feeling often put on record against them; they grudged the success of the Gospel amongst the Gentiles. Being resolved themselves not to believe, they opposed the conversion of their neighbours, and "spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming." And what a severe reproof was this that they received, what an exact description of the course of those, who disbelieve or disobey the Gospel! "Ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life." If we refuse to listen, it is our own act and deed, we put the Gospel from us. If we should persist in sin, and perish everlastingly, we ourselves give sentence on ourselves, we judge ourselves unworthy of everlasting life. God has thought us meet for it. He has loved us, unworthy sinners as we were, and called us to repent and to believe the Gospel. If we believe not, if we repent not, we are the hinderers of our own peace, we execute against ourselves, as did these envious Jews, the sentence of cutting off from the presence of the Lord.

From their conduct on this occasion let us especially take warning against envying or grudging one another. Let us note of these evil tempers, how besides being most hateful in God's sight, they lead in the end to our own greater loss. Let us grudge no one any good which it may have pleased God to send him. Let us endeavour to share with others any good, with which it may have pleased Him to bless ourselves. And especially if He have given us the knowledge of his truth, if we have found in it comfort against affliction, a guide in prosperity, a source of peace in this present life, and a rock of confidence for the future, let us delight to extend our convictions as widely as we can amongst the hearts of all, who whether Jews or Gentiles, civilized or savages, free or bond, are made of the same flesh with ourselves, redeemed by the Saviour's blood, and heirs of heaven, who but for our neglect, would be counting on, seeking for, and reaching unto, the same everlasting inheritance.

Paul and Barnabas fly from Iconium to Lystra.

1 And it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed.

2 But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren.

3 Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles.

5 And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them,

6 They were wroth of it, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

7 And there they preached the gospel.

8 And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

9 The same heard Paul speak: who stedfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

10 Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people.

In the conduct of Paul and Barnabas at Iconium we have profitable instruction both in courage and in prudence. We may learn both how to abide danger boldly for a time, and how to avoid it on due occasions, by timely flight. "They so spake," we are told, "that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed." Preaching is the chief means used by God towards the increase of religion in the world. It is by the preaching of his ministers that He awakens the hearts of them that hear, to the sense of heavenly truth. Let us therefore take heed how we hear. Let us pray for them that preach, that a great multitude of their hearers may believe. "But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren. Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord." They were not prevented by opposition, by ill will, by persecution. They continued in the same place, and persevered in speaking with the same courage. For thus far they might do service in the holy cause in which they were engaged. But when their lives were threatened by assault, then they fled unto the cities of Lycaonia.

"And there they preached the Gospel." This was their great business on earth, as ministers of Jesus Christ. And for the sake of this it was their duty now to fly, as before it was their duty to abide. Let us therefore, whatever duty we have to do, boldly persevere in doing it, as long as we have any prospect of success. Let us fear no evil, shrink from no pain, or trouble, or anxiety; as long as we find that we do God good service. But when his work can no longer be promoted by our staying where we are then we are at liberty to fly. Nay it is our duty to preserve our lives, or the health and peace of mind which makes life useful. These rules we may be seldom called upon to apply by any case of danger to our lives, by any occasion of removal from our homes. But how often might we exercise the like discreet forbearance, or the like Christian courage, in the common occurrences of each day, in encountering displeasure, for the sake of promoting good, or in not persisting to provoke ill will, where no good can be reasonably expected to ensue!

At Lystra, St. Paul wrought a signal miracle, on a man who had been a cripple from his birth. And when the people saw what had been done, they took Paul and Barnabas for gods, saying, "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men." What a notion does this give us of the effect of miracles, of the amazement and conviction they must have been fitted to produce on the minds of the beholders! What a lively picture this fact presents of the gross ignorance in which the heathen live, how mean and unworthy their notions are of God, that they should be ready to fall down and worship men made of the same nature with themselves! Hence we should do well to think of thanking God, that we have been set free from this grievous ignorance, from this painful bondage to a vile superstition. But whilst we thank Him heartily for his goodness, let us beware that there lurk beneath our thanks no proud satisfaction in our hearts, that we are not as other men are. Let us temper our own joy in our deliverance by deep concern for them that are still in darkness. Let us remember how many millions of our own flesh and blood still bow the knee to idols, still are ready to bring oxen and garlands, and to sacrifice not only to men like unto themselves, but to images, the work of their own hands. To concern in their behalf let us add pains in their instruction. Let no one, however small his means be content without contributing some help towards the conversion of the heathen. And let both poor and rich give abundantly, of that which God graciously accepts of all, their devout and fervent supplication, that He will in his good time make known his Gospel unto all the world.

St. Paul is stoned at Lystra; returns to Antioch.

14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, ¹ which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

16 ¹ Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

17 Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

18 And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

19 And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, ² and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,

22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

26 And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

We left the men of Lystra prepared to sacrifice to Paul and Barnabas, by reason of the healing of the cripple. But do we find that these holy men were willing to receive a homage, so flattering to the vanity of the corrupted heart? Far from it. They "ran in among the people, crying out, and saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God." To which words they add immediately an account of what they mean by God, lest their hearers should be thinking of such a being as they were accustomed to understand by that name. The God of whom the apostle spake, is He, "which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein." This is a thought which we ought often to recur to, and deeply to impress upon our minds, that it is no other than the Creator of the universe, who is revealed to us in Scripture, as the Father reconciled to us, as the Son redeeming us by the sacrifice of Himself, as the Holy Spirit ever working to make us holy. And this is He, "who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways;" so far at least as not to give them what we call a revelation. Yet on all He bestowed "rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." And if this was a witness, which should have made them live a life of holiness and love, oh what ought not we to seek after, what height of piety ought not we to reach, we, who besides what we experience of God's goodness in the outward world, have felt also his mercy in the inner man, have been strengthened by his grace, assured of redemption through the riches of his love, and made to be inheritors of his endless glory?

And now see how vain and fickle is the judgment of the populace! One while they offer sacrifices to St. Paul as to a god. Not long afterwards, at the instance of certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, the same people stone him, and draw him out of the city, "supposing he had been dead." So easily are the passions of the many stirred up by the arts of the designing few! So manifold are the circumstances which force on us the conviction, that the praise of men is all unworthy of our regard, as compared with the praise of God!

St. Paul, who had been thus nearly put to death, "rose up, and came into the city." And from this city he went to Derbe, and so back again to Lystra, to Iconium, and to Antioch, "confirming the souls of the disciples," "exhorting them to continue in the faith, and" shewing "that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." How forcible to the hearers must this appeal have been, from one who had for their sakes endured so much of suffering, in the very cities which he now was visiting in turn! How greatly should the example, as well as the counsel of St. Paul, help us to rejoice in tribulation! Not that we should not deeply feel any affliction which it may please God to lay on us. It is only if we feel it, that it is affliction, that it can act as chastisement, that it can minister to our joy. For there is such a thing as joy in the midst of sorrow. And this is when we feel that our sorrow comes of God, that He is chastening us for our benefit, that it is good for us to be thus afflicted, and that through our much tribulation, we are making good our entrance into the kingdom of our Father which is in heaven.

The apostles and elders hold a council at Jerusalem.

1 And certain men which came down from Judæa taught the brethren, and said, 'Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question.

3 And being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

² Chap. 10. 20. & 11. 13.

6 And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.

7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, 'Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

8 And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

9 And put no difference between us and them, 'purifying their hearts by faith.

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, 'to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.

§ 401. The test of Christian fellowship.

Already we read of differences in the infant church. Christians are still but men. And Christianity is oftentimes dishonoured by the ill tempers and evil lives of its professors. As Paul and Barnabas, so are many good Christian teachers, subject to the opposition of the gainsayers, forced to have "dissension and disputation with them." Happy are they who know how to differ without rivalry; how to dispute without wrangling, enmity, or pride! Happy are those disputants, who consent to refer to others wiser than themselves, and in station of higher authority, those questions on which they cannot else agree!

Whilst St. Paul and his companions were on their way to Jerusalem for this purpose, "they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren." Great is the joy we ought to feel at the conversion of the heathen; great the pains which we ought to take towards converting them. Great is the interest which we ought always to be feeling, and the endeavours which we ought always to be making, towards turning the hearts of those amongst professing Christians, who know not and love not Christ. Our means towards these objects are, first, that we should ourselves shew forth our faith by our works. Next, we should in all things follow after unity; considering that nothing would more help than our agreement as to what the true faith is, towards winning from the ways of endless misery those who are of no faith at all. Thirdly, it is of great importance that we make this very thing a subject of frequent prayer. For so has our church directed us daily to ask of God, that it will please Him to make known his saving health unto all nations. And so has our Lord Himself instructed us; "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest." Matt. 9. 38. And lastly, we must do all we can to send them forth ourselves. We must, according to our station and ability, contribute to those funds, be they which they may, which are most carefully and effectually expended, in sending forth ministers of the Gospel into lands where it would be else unknown.

"And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter." Here we have an account of one of the earliest Christian councils, held for the purpose of settling a disputed point of practice. And the question at issue was not unlike to those which have often since arisen amongst Christians, how far the neglect of circumcision ought to exclude men from the communion of the church. Let us observe therefore, for our own guidance in like cases, the exhortation of St. Peter on this occasion. Let us note how he rests his argument for the Gentiles on the fact, that since they had heard the Gospel by his mouth, God had put no difference between them and the Jews, but had given to each the witness of the Holy Ghost, "purifying their hearts by faith." This is the great test to which we ought ever to look, and on which we ought to ground our esteem for each other, even for those who in some opinions may widely differ from ourselves. Has God purified their hearts by faith? Do they lead holy lives? And does their holiness result from believing in the Lord? Is it the work of the Holy Ghost? Is there evidence of its being so? If there be, if we may reasonably hope that they are amongst them that are sanctified, let us not attempt to shut them out from our society. Let us not put upon each other any needless yoke. Let us rejoice to extend to them what we glory to possess, "the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." Gal. 5. 1. Let us prove, as far as possible, all things. Let us hold as fast as possible that which is good. See 1 Thess. 5. 21. Let us endeavour to persuade others to hold the same. Let us contend earnestly for the faith. See Jude 3. But let us not be contentious. Let us neither force, nor persecute, nor wrangle. Let us hope, and as far as possible, believe of all, that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ they shall be saved even as we.

St. James gives sentence in the council at Jerusalem.

12 Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.

13 And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me:

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

16 ¹ After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up:

17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.

21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.

The matter in dispute amongst the disciples at this first council in Jerusalem, was how far all believers in Jesus Christ were bound to observe certain prominent regulations in the law of Moses. St. James, who was in the place of a bishop at Jerusalem, that is to say, was the ruler of the church in that city, gave sentence, pronounced the judgment of the assembly. For this sentence, we cannot doubt, was not his own alone, but was the unanimous decision of the apostles and elders, concurring with his words as he proceeded in his address. How delightful is this pattern of Christian unanimity! How pleasant is the sight of brethren that dwell together in unity! How profitable for that end is reasonable discussion of points on which they are inclined to differ! How necessary is mutual concession, good temper, forbearance, and dutiful submission to them that are in station of authority!

And see how moderate, how charitable this sentence was! How fit a pattern for the decision of those controversies and feuds, which still disturb the peace, and check the growth, of our own Christian community! The apostle first recites the topics of the speech of Peter, here called Simeon, which was his first name, Simon. And these he next confirms, by the words of a prophecy from Amos, plainly implying the design of God, that the Gentiles as well as the Jews should become Christians. But it was clear that ordinances like those of Moses, being fit only for a single nation, could never without confusion and constraint be imposed upon all the people of the earth. St. James therefore proposes that no such burden as circumcision, no such yoke as compliance with all the law of Moses, should be laid upon the Gentile converts. Only he would have them written to, that they should abstain from four things, which were held in abomination by the Jewish law: observing that this law was read in the synagogue each sabbath day, and implying that therefore the Jews were the more likely to be scandalized by these practices. So that charity to others may sometimes make it necessary to put a yoke upon ourselves. Charity to others may make it right to deny ourselves in that which we might otherwise lawfully enjoy. For of these four things, though two were gross sins, two were matters of comparative or utter indifference.

And this may help to shew us what points we ought at any time to yield with readiness, in submission to the advice, or in deference to the scruples of our neighbours. Suppose them to have different opinions from ourselves, whether more or less apparently religious. Suppose them to require us in any degree to conform our lives to theirs. Or suppose it be in some matter of church communion, a difference as to discipline or ritual, that keeps us at variance with each other. In the first place, we ought to change, in compliance with their suggestions, any thing that they can shew us to be plainly wrong. The Gentiles, who were addicted to idolatry, and to the most unbounded practice of impurity, must utterly renounce both, not only out of deference to the scruples of the Jews, but out of obedience to the law of Christ. And secondly, we ought to comply with the suggestions of our brethren in regard also to matters of indifference. If there be any thing which we could change to win their esteem, and which signified no more than the abstaining from things strangled and from blood, in this we should be willing to conform to their desires, rather than estrange them by adhering to our own. To the Jews these seemed matters of importance. And there are Christians to whom matters of no more consequence than these prove hinderances to unity and love. The more stress they lay upon such trifles, let us be the more inclined to yield. For however precious may be the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, we must remember above all things, in our conduct to each other, that we never wilfully make our brethren to offend.

The apostles and elders send letters to the churches.

22 Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren :

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia :

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law : to whom we gave no such commandment :

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul,

26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth.

28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things;

29 That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication : from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch : and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle :

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the || consolation.

The question now decided by the council had arisen at Antioch, in consequence of the conduct of Barnabas and Paul. The apostles and elders were therefore careful to send two other brethren, Judas and Silas, as bearers of their decision, to witness that they approved of the apostles' conduct. This shews us how cautious they were to remove all risk of suspicion. And it teaches us how watchful we also ought to be, to "provide things honest in the sight of all men." Rom. 12. 17. This we must do for our own sakes first of all; lest, if we venture to disregard appearances, we be more easily tempted to the reality. No one is quite safe from the worst of sins. No one knows how easily he might fall into falsehood, covetousness, intemperance, or lust; if he were wilfully to give the east advantage to the enemy of souls. And further, we must do this also for our brother's sake; lest we should tempt to any false or uncharitable judgment those Christians amongst whom we live. Satan is always nigh to suggest evil thoughts. The opportunity, the possibility to do wrong, is represented to the mind by his evil influence, as making it most probable that wrong is done. Let us therefore avoid all opportunity, cut off when we can all possibility of sin. Then shall we at once escape the risk of sinning, and the risk of leading into sinful and suspicious thoughts "the brother" "for whom Christ died." 1 Cor. 8. 11.

The message sent from the council imported that the Gentiles who should become Christians were not bound by the observances of the Jewish law. But at the same time they were to abstain from four things, of common practice amongst the heathen, and particularly obnoxious to the Jews. And these are here called "necessary things;" though only two out of the four were of moral obligation. The other two were made important to the Jews, by the regulations of the law of Moses; wherein blood was forbidden for the food of man, because it was by blood, the blood of Christ, that atonement would be made for the sins of men. Thus neither blood, nor things strangled, which had their blood in them, might be eaten by the Jews. And thus as long as the Jews were likely to be scandalized, by seeing such things eaten amongst Christians, it was necessary that Christians should abstain from eating them. For that is necessary which God commands. And there is nothing which He has commanded more expressly, than that we should deny ourselves for our brother's sake, and desire in all things to edify each other.

At the reading of this epistle, we are told of the Gentile converts, that "they rejoiced for the consolation." They were thankful for the liberty imparted; although there were still some points withheld, still some things enjoined, of which they might not straightway see the necessity or use. How different was this joy of theirs from that pride, presumption, and discontent, which make many in their differences count nothing gained, till they have wrung from their opponent all they seek for! How different from that temper which makes some murmur against God, however many be the blessings He bestows, if He withhold from them some one on which their hearts are set! He gives health, but if not wealth also, they rejoice not. He gives health and wealth; but takes from them a friend, or child. They refuse to be comforted. He leads them, like the blind, by a way they know not. He guides them to eternal life and joy, by withholding from them pleasures which would end in ruin, or connexions inconsistent with their peace. Oh, why will they not rejoice in the consolation? Why will they not be thankful for the grace which He still offers, for the heaven which He still opens to their perseverance and their prayers?

God grant that whatever blessing He bestows, or whatever He for a time withholds, we may in either case alike rejoice in hope, and be glad in the conviction that He does all for good!

Paul and Barnabas depart asunder.

32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35 Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

36 And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

How pleasant has been the fellowship of Paul and Barnabas, as set forth in this history of the Acts of the Apostles! How did it help them to labour in the work of the ministry, encourage them to bear patiently their common persecution, and enable them to hold fast the profession of the truth! How should it move us all to work together in love, for the truth's sake, in danger defending one another, in honour preferring one another! And how should the separation which ensued between these two servants of the same Lord, be an urgent warning unto us not to differ, or contend, or quarrel with each other!

The contention here related has been found to be a scandal unto many, who consider not sufficiently for what intent it is that Scripture is given by the inspiration of God. They are surprised at such weaknesses and sins in men, who are described as having been moved by the Holy Ghost. So much the more however, in the first place, we may be sure of the truth of Scripture itself. For how could the account of any one of mankind be just, if it represented him as free from sin? And again, how evident is it here, that the writer of this book cared not for what men would think of what he wrote, or at least did not so care, as to suppress what he must know would have an ill appearance! But further we may observe, that the being filled with the Holy Ghost, and endued with the power to work miracles, does not in the least imply that a man in his own person would be free from sin. It pleased God to put his treasures, as well as the ordinary office of a minister, in earthen vessels. See 2 Cor. 4. 7. It has been his method to make use of men that were still men, in all his measures for spreading abroad the Gospel in the world. And from the failings of the most eminent, amongst that goodly company, whose labours are recorded in the word of God, we may learn this important lesson, that there are no privileges so high, no gifts so great, as that they will secure any man from the risk of sinning. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." 1 Cor. 10. 12. And let him also that falls, or has fallen, feel good hope that he will be again set upright. God is longsuffering to usward, and not willing that any should perish. He is not willing that any should despair. And if He has put it on record, in his book, that the most eminent of his saints have fallen into sin, this is in order that we might learn from their example to repent; this is in order that the worst of sinners may be aware, that it is not their having sinned which can shut them out of heaven, if only they have grace to repent in earnest, and effectually to amend their lives.

And that this was the case with Paul and Barnabas, that they repented of this very difference, we have evidence in the writings of the apostle. In his Epistles he seems to have taken pains to mention the names both of Mark and Barnabas, in proof of his being at peace with both of them. For thus he writes to the Corinthians: "Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?" 1 Cor. 9. 6. And to the Colossians he purposely makes mention of "Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas." Col. 4. 10. And again to Timothy, as if to shew how much he now valued Mark's assistance; "Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry." 2 Tim. 4. 11. If then we have ever differences amongst each other; if, which God forbid, we ever fall out by the way; if we ever embitter by bickerings and strife the few and evil days of our pilgrimage on earth, let us make haste, whilst yet we have time, and be reconciled to our adversary. Let us study to make our adversary our friend. Let us rejoice to make public our renewed attachment, before those who have witnessed our separation. Let us bethink ourselves, how in our estranged condition God has condescended to be reconciled to us. And as we hope to be by Him forgiven, let us from our hearts forgive each other, immediately, entirely, for ever.

God give us the heart to agree with one another! And when we differ, God help us to be reconciled! The more we have been estranged, the more we have to forgive, or have need to be forgiven, God enable us the more to love!

St. Paul circumciseth Timothy; goeth to Philippi.

1 Then came he to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, ¹ named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2 Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, ² that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia,

7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not.

8 And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas.

9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the Gospel unto them.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to Philippi, which is || the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

§ 405. The importance of a settled place for prayer.

It was to the Timotheus here mentioned that the two Epistles were written, which we call the Epistles to Timothy. His mother "was a Jewess, and believed;" that is to say, believed in Christ. And it is plain that Timothy also was already a disciple before the arrival of St. Paul: for he "was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium." This privilege of being a Christian he probably owed to the influence of his mother; for "his father was a Greek." And we may hence take occasion to observe, for how many of our first and best religious impressions we are most of us indebted to a mother's teaching. Happy are those sons, who like Timothy, abide by the instruction of a Christian mother! Happy are those mothers, who like the mother of Timothy, bring up their children in the way they should go, and live to see them walk therein!

As a Christian disciple, being the son of a Greek, Timothy was exempt from the obligations of the ceremonial law, according to the decision of the council at Jerusalem. And it was one object of St. Paul, in this journey which he took, to deliver to the churches in each city this decree of the apostles and elders. Yet because the mother of this disciple was a Jewess, the apostle, rather than scandalize the Jews, "took and circumcised him." And herein he acted on the spirit of the decree, whilst he seemed to neglect the letter of it. For the council had decided for the Christian converts, that they should for the present observe some things more than otherwise they needed, out of respect to the Jewish prejudices. And here the apostle further taught by his practice, that it is the same with this very decree of the council, and as we might in like manner argue, with all laws whatsoever: there are many things in which, though we are at liberty, it is well to act as if we were obliged. Things lawful, things not forbidden by law, are not always things expedient. Let us therefore look not only to the letter, but to the spirit of every law, which bears upon the case we have in hand. And however painful may be the duty to ourselves, let us do always that which is best for others, though it be more than seems literally enjoined.

In the course of the travels here mentioned, St. Luke, the writer of the history, appears to have joined company with St. Paul. For in the tenth verse of this chapter, after mentioning the vision which appeared to St. Paul, he speaks of himself as the companion of this intended journey, "we endeavoured to go into Macedonia." This form of expression running through the remainder of the book, may add somewhat to the interest with which we read what happened under the writer's eye. But it cannot, we should remember, add to the certainty of the things which he relates. For all parts of Scripture are alike surely true, being guarded from error by the hand of Him, whose eye seeth all things, and whose presence is everywhere.

At Philippi Paul and Silas, and their company, went out of the city, on the sabbath day, to a place "where prayer was wont to be made." And this is a good precedent for the respect which Christians usually pay to their accustomed places of divine worship. And it might help also in our private prayers, and in our family devotion, if we were to set apart in like manner for each a fixed place, as well as a fixed time. Where prayer is wont to be made, thither let us with joy resort. Where prayer is wont to be made, there let us devoutly pray, there let us hear attentively, there let us earnestly give thanks. For where prayer is wont to be made, there God is wont to hearken, there Christ is wont to intercede, there the grace of the Holy Ghost is wont to be bestowed, and his peace and joy to be shed abroad in our hearts.

St. Paul converteth Lydia ; casteth out an evil spirit.

14 And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us : whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

16 And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit || of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying :

17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her.

And he came out the same hour.

19 And when her masters saw that the hope on their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the † marketplace unto the rulers,

20 And brought them to the magistrates saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city,

21 And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

22 And the multitude rose up together against them : and the magistrates rent off their clothes, † and commanded to beat them.

23 And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely :

24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

It is mentioned of this woman of Thyatira that she "worshipped God." She was a proselyte to the faith of the true Jehovah, though living in the midst of heathens and idolaters. This circumstance made her heart more ready to be opened, so as to believe what Paul preached. And this was an advantage which must frequently have arisen, from the wide extent to which the religion of the Jews was spread abroad, among the inhabitants of surrounding countries. There were by this means great numbers in some degree prepared to listen to the preaching of the Gospel, and likely in some degree, when they listened, to believe. But no preparation, we should observe, can be sufficient, without help from heaven in the soul. It is the Lord that must open the heart, even of those who know already how to worship Him, ere they can make any great progress in their devotion or their faith.

The mention of the damsel, "with a spirit of divination," serves to shew us that possession by evil spirits was allowed to take place, and to be manifest to the senses of the beholders, for some time after the ascension of our Lord. And there can be little doubt that this was ordered with a view to the more signal proof of God's interfering, in the recovery of those who were possessed. For no miracle was more likely to convince beholders that the power of God was at work, than when they saw it prevail against another kind of power, which they considered to be altogether beyond nature. And something like to this is the proof which we might now each of us have within ourselves, of the reality of God's gifts of grace. Not that on our praying we can be sure that diseases will be healed, but that we may be sure, if we pray in earnest against our sins, we shall have grace to leave them off, we shall have strength to do that which by nature we cannot do, to serve and love the living God. And what can more thoroughly satisfy us that we have the strength of God within us, than to find that we are actually prevailing against sin, and growing in holiness, and in a heavenly mind?

The masters of this damsel that had been possessed were so angry at the loss of their much gain, that they stirred up the people against Paul and Silas, and brought them to the magistrates ; who having first had them beaten, then cast them into prison. This was a severe trial of their faith and patience. To be treated as the worst of malefactors, to be confined in the inner prison, and to have their feet made fast in the stocks, this is nigh to the extremity of punishment which man can inflict on man, and which the word of God allows the magistrate to inflict, for preserving the peace of the community. But how often are the highest, and even the best of men mistaken in their judgment, as the magistrates were here ! How often are they that walk at large more worthy of the stocks, than they that are bound ! Let us reflect when we see a prison house, or hear of prisoners, let us reflect how very probably we ourselves may deserve worse both of God and of mankind, than some of those who lie there in durance. And still more let us think with thankfulness of Him, who when we were in the prison house of sin and death, came to open the doors of our captivity, and to give us, if only we prefer not bondage, freedom for evermore.

Lord, as Thou hast opened our prison doors, open also our hearts, that we may desire to be free ! Unbar in us the strong holds of pride, and selfishness, of desire, deceitfulness, and delay ! Enable us to attend unto the things which have been spoken by thy apostles in thy name ! Enable us to believe what from them we learn ; and what we know enable us to do !

Paul and Silas are delivered from the prison.

25 And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, 30 And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

31 And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.

32 And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

35 And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the prison,¹ and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Whilst Paul and Silas lie awake with pain of many stripes, and with their feet fastened in the stocks, the keeper of the prison is at his ease asleep. But how short is the deceitful rest of them who sleep, but not in Christ, who wake from death, but not to rise with Him! How much to be preferred the watchings and the pains, the sickness, sorrows, or decease of those, who in the hour of their midnight agony can pray and sing praises unto God! No imprisonment of the body, no suffering which the world or the devil may inflict, must shake for one moment our faith in God, our persuasion that what He orders for us is always best, and our resolution to give Him constant thanks. From the lowest depths of woe to which He may have thought fit to bring us, from the prison house of adversity, affliction, or disease, of disappointment, despondency, or despair, let us but raise our voice to God, and thank Him for his fatherly correction, let us but make known unto Him by prayer our desires for help and comfort; the angel of the Lord, we may rely on it, will open for us, in the moment most for our good, the door of our captivity.

And see how different in this juncture was the behaviour of the heathen jailor from that of the Christian prisoners. The one, rather than meet the charge of having lost his prisoners, "would have killed himself." He knew no more of the value of life, he cared no more for the sufferings of those he had to leave behind. The apostle, on the other hand, when at liberty, thought not of himself, but of the afflicted jailor. The first words he uttered were the kind assurance, "Do thyself no harm: for we are all here." Grief makes many selfish. Others seem to become selfish for want of knowing what grief is. But let us learn in either state of sorrow or of joy, to think more for others and less of ourselves, to feel more for their sorrows than for our own.

The jailor, converted by the miracle, asked how he might himself "be saved," how escape in that day when the foundations, not of the prison only but of the whole earth, should be shaken, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Let thy family also believe, and thy family also shall be saved. "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." They explained to him what was meant by believing, how it implied loving and living accordingly. And to this they added the ordinance of baptism. He "was baptized, he and all his, straightway." For so had our Lord instructed his apostles, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28. 19.

And what a change was now made in this keeper of the prison! What a signal instance of God's mercy was his conversion! What a pattern for that conversion of heart, which we fear is still needed in many already pledged by baptism to serve the Lord! One hour he is the minister of cruelty to his prisoners, the next he has brought them into his house and has set meat before them. One hour he would have killed himself, rather than encounter the displeasure of man, the next, with the same displeasure threatening him, he "rejoiced, believing in God with all his house." Oh let us seek that joy which comes of faith, and we shall never feel that shame which springs from fear. Let us be used to feed the hungry, and to wash the stripes of the oppressed, and we shall then never be inclined either to imprison or to beat, or so much as by an unkind word to provoke the temper, or to wound the heart.

St. Paul preacheth at Thessalonica and at Berea.

1 Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews :

2 And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead ; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ.

4 And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas ; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also ;

7 Whom Jason hath received : and these all do contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus.

8 And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go.

10 And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea : who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews.

11 These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

12 Therefore many of them believed ; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few.

At Thessalonica there was a synagogue of the Jews, in which St. Paul for "three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures." This, we are told, was "as his manner was." It was his practice then in every city to preach the Gospel, first to the Jews there resident. And to them he used to reason out of the Scriptures. He used to expound the writings of the Old Testament, for the New was not then complete. And from these Scriptures he used to prove that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead, and that the same Jesus whom he preached was the Christ. This is a kind of evidence not so striking perhaps to us as to the Jews, for whose sake it was employed. For to them these were the only Scriptures ; and they were accustomed to study them with earnest care. And they lived at the time when the things spoken of had happened, so that they could see more forcibly how all was fulfilled. But to us also there is no slight degree of proof in the fact that they believed, even some of the Jews themselves, "and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few." For these were all of them persons most unlikely to change their religion on insufficient grounds. And their believing may therefore the more convince us that they believed with reason, and that our faith is not vain.

And yet we must be aware that there were many which "believed not." There were many who were "moved with envy." There were many whose evil passions made them deaf to all persuasion, blind to all light of truth. And this is the case with every question that can be proposed to the assent of a reasonable creature. Some agree, and some refuse to hear. Some believe, and some believe not. But when we see those believe, who by believing must do violence to pride and prejudice, and gain only loss unto themselves, we can hardly doubt that they have strong ground for believing. Whilst the unbelief of those, whose unbelief costs nothing, and who by believing would seem to lose every thing, affords none of the like presumption that unbelief is reasonable.

And now let us see what these unbelievers objected : "These that have turned the world upside down have come hither also." This was the whole complaint of the unbelieving Jews. And how truly in these words did they describe the very glory of that Gospel which they sought to disparage ! How great was its force in turning men from idols to serve the living God ! How mighty is its influence in the heart, to pull down the strong holds of pride and passion, of selfishness, deceitfulness, and lust ! How powerfully has it in fact prevailed over the most enlightened nations of the earth, and in the minds of the most enlightened of mankind ! And how has it prevailed ? By outward force ? Far from it. A few poor fishermen were the conquerors. Was it then by suppression of research and reasonable inquiry ? Behold the Bereans are commended for searching daily in the Scriptures, those of the Old Testament, to see whether the things were as St. Paul had preached. Let us then endeavour by study, by prayer, and by practice, to know whether these things are so. When we read of the blessedness of a holy life, let us try to be holy, and by being so, let us try whether it be not best for us thus to be. Let us try, and search, and prove, whether faith in Christ, and love of God, and a kind concern for all our fellow creatures, be not, as the Scriptures say they are, the way of peace on earth, as well as of everlasting joy in heaven. One half of this we may prove whilst yet we live. For the other we must wait, till death shall put an end to all that here we do, to all that here we are. But if at present we find happiness to be the fruit of holiness, how strong is the presumption that it will be so in the end, how urgent is the motive thus pressed upon our hearts, to hold fast that which is good !

St. Paul is sent from Berea to Athens.

13 But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people.

14 And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

15 And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

16 Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city || wholly given to idolatry.

17 Therefore disputed he in the synagoge with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18 Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What will this † babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection.

19 And they took him, and brought him unto ‡ Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

20 For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

21 (For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing.)

The Jews of Thessalonica seemed to have spared no pains persecuting those who spread abroad the word of God. They followed St. Paul to Berea, and there also "stirred up the people." We might hence derive a lesson in point of zeal, towards assisting, encouraging, and maintaining those who now preach the Gospel to the heathen. How gladly should we help, by all means within our reach, to make known to others those glorious tidings which we feel to be the foundation of our own only hope, that we shall escape the wrath to come! How should we watch the progress of saving truth from city to city, from land to land! And how would it help to make us more highly value that truth which we have ourselves long known, if we were diligently engaged in making it known to others, in helping and praying that they might profit by it for ever!

But see how easily the malice of mistaken men is directed by God's providence to a profitable use! Whilst St. Paul was driven from Berea, Silas and Timotheus for a while stayed behind. So that the Gospel was preached in two places instead of one; and this other, namely Athens, to which St. Paul was driven, was one of the most important of all cities in which it could have been heard. For this was a place, the most celebrated of all others in the ancient world, for a kind of learning which they called philosophy. And this meant a diligent inquiry into the best means of human happiness. So that the philosophers, who were now to hear St. Paul, were people who professed to study what would most help a man to live a happy life, and to die a happy death. Now these were the very things which the apostle desired to teach. And it was well that he should have those to hear him, who were no strangers to the subject, and who had tried all other methods with little prospect of success.

For that the skill of these philosophers had failed, that they had been unable to make wiser those with whom they dwelt, may be collected from this single fact, that the city was "wholly given to idolatry." Even the city which had been long counted for the fountain of light to the most enlightened nations of the earth, the city to which both Greeks and Romans resorted for instruction in all manner of knowledge, this city was "wholly given to idolatry." The streets and public places, and private houses also, were filled with idols. And the rites and ceremonies of religion consisted in sacrifices and prayers and thanksgiving, all offered to idols instead of God. God be praised that in this Christian land, we have been delivered from a sin to which nations in all ages have been almost universally inclined! God grant that being free from outward idolatry, we may cherish no idols in our hearts!

The Athenians besides idolatry were guilty of another kind of folly, most inconsistent with true philosophy, and injurious to the welfare and happiness of the soul. They "spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing." This love of what is new and strange, this delight in telling of it, hearing of it, reading of it, is a bad symptom in whatever age or country it prevails, in whatever heart it is established. It encourages a man in indolence by the semblance of activity, entertaining his mind, whilst his hands lie idle. He gets accustomed to read of misery without considering that he ought to be relieving it. And the woes which ought to agonize his heart with sympathy, minister rather to the amusement of his mind. God grant that our interest in news may consist in a charitable anxiety, to weep with them that weep, and to rejoice with them that rejoice! God grant that we may seek in all things, not so much what is new, as what is right, and just, and true! God grant that in religion, above all things, we may avoid new and strange doctrines, and ask rather for the old paths, see Jer. 6. 16, search for the faith once delivered to the saints, and abide therein unto the end. See Jude 3.

St. Paul preacheth at Athens.

22 Then Paul stood in the midst of ¶ Mars' hill, and said, ¶ Men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious.

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your *†*devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

24 ¶ God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands;

25 Neither is worshipped with men's hands, ¶ as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;

26 And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation;

27 That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us:

28 For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

29 Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, ¶ we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.

30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent:

31 Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, ¶ whereof he hath † given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

32 And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked: and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

The Athenians, though enlightened in human knowledge, were like other heathens, lamentably ignorant in things divine. So that besides the many false and fabulous divinities, whom they vainly worshipped, they had an altar to one whom they called "the Unknown God." This they had for fear they should have left out in their catalogue any one of the many gods whom they supposed to be. And it amounted to a confession that they knew not what gods there were, though they were willing to worship any that they could hear of. St. Paul therefore assures them that he was able to reveal to them the Being whom they ignorantly worshipped. God, he signifies, is one, and one only. God is He who "made the world and all things therein." God "dwelleth not in temples made with hands." God is not to be satisfied with mere outward sacrifices, as if He needed any thing that we have thus to give. God is Himself the Giver of life and breath to all things. God has "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." God has determined where each man should live, and when, so as for all to be tried, as seemed best to Him, whether they would feel after Him, and find Him, and do his will.

"In him we live, and move, and have our being;" and so St. Paul reminded them that one of their own poets had said, "we are also his offspring." Which saying served to prove to the Athenians, that men in the same condition as themselves knew more of God than to call Him "the unknown." And therefore by this knowledge, which they ought all to have attained, he exhorts them that they should no longer serve idols made of metal, stone, or wood, by the device and skill of man. For, however their past folly might have been overlooked, he warns them that God "now commandeth all men every where to repent." Are there then any present to whom God is still unknown? Is there a heart which has as yet not felt how great He is, how good, how sure to punish, how gracious to forgive? Behold, He commandeth you to repent. He would have you turn without delay from the idols you have served on earth, and give your soul unto the God of heaven. He is around you. He is within you. Or rather in Him you have your being. How dare you bow down to any other? How dare you love more than Him any thing that He has made? How shall you not immediately renounce the gods of your idolatry, and with a new heart and new mind serve the Lord who made and who redeemed you?

The grounds for such repentance, here insisted on, are these: "God hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained: whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." We die, but after death we rise again. We die, but there is after death the judgment. We shall be judged, called to account for all that we here do and say and think. We shall be judged in righteousness; by a righteous rule, every man according to his light and knowledge, and talents and opportunities. We shall be judged by that Man whom God has ordained; by One who as a Man died for our sins; by One who as God is able to forgive them. And that we shall thus rise again to be judged, we have this assurance, the resurrection of Christ Jesus from the dead. The Judge is already again alive. And shortly we must follow. Through the grave and gate of death, by the sentence of our mighty Lord and Judge, we must enter, God only knows how soon, into happiness or misery without end.

Would that as we know who God is, and how great is his mercy to ourselves, would that we might feel thankful for his goodness, and careful to do his will! Would that in point of faithfulness, devotion, and obedience, we may never be estranged from Him, and He never be to us what He was to the Athenians, "the Unknown God."

St. Paul cometh to Corinth.

1 After these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth :

2 And found a certain Jew named ¹ Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla ; (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome :) and came unto them.

3 And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought : for by their occupation they were tentmakers.

4 And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

5 And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ.

6 And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, ² he shook his raiment, and said unto them,

Your blood be upon your own heads ; I am clean : from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

7 And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8 ³ And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house ; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.

9 Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace :

10 For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee : for I have much people in this city.

11 And he [†] continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

§ 411. That we ought not to fear.

St. Paul had been brought up in Jerusalem, "at the feet of Gamaliel ; and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers." Chap. 22. 3. He was carefully instructed in such learning as was in highest estimation among the Jews. And yet he had been taught the business of a tentmaker according to a custom which prevailed amongst his countrymen, that every one should learn some useful handicraft. We see then here that the following of any industrious trade is a fit employment for our time on earth. We see how it is practicable for a man to be engaged in an active business, and yet to be employed in winning others to the faith of Christ. Let those of us who have any worldly work in hand, be watchful to employ a due portion of our time, and thoughts, and means, to the teaching others what we know of Christ and of his Gospel more than they. By example, by edifying conversation, and by exhorting one another in every good word and work, let us persuade as many as we can, that Jesus is the Christ, and that it is good to be his faithful servants.

At the same time it must never be forgotten that there is a distinct office for ministers of religion, that there are men set apart to teach and preach, to administer the sacraments, and to preside in the congregation of the people. It is under their direction that the rest must labour. Into their proper duties the rest must not intrude. And for their support the rest must be glad to contribute ample means, that they may give themselves and all their time to the work of the ministry. It is indeed well for those who labour with their hands, to be ready also to edify with their words. And it is desirable, that those who are set apart for teaching, should be not above maintaining themselves, if needs must, by labour. Yet it is better that such need should be otherwise provided for. It is better, as St. Paul argues in his Epistle, written afterwards to these very Corinthians, because "so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. 9. 14.

At Corinth, as in other places, St. Paul was violently opposed by the Jews. Whereupon, after having done all he could to persuade them, he warned them that their blood would be upon their own heads. And he declared that thenceforth, in that city at least, he should go unto the Gentiles only. This may remind those amongst us, who are tempted to delay repentance towards God, that there is a time at which our privileges will fail, when the voice of warning will sound in our ears less loudly, when the words of mercy will be less urgently pressed on our affections, when the Holy Spirit, who now strives with our spirit will strive either less powerfully or not at all. Surely on our own heads our blood will rest. We have no one to find fault with but ourselves. We must each feel within ourselves that we might have turned ere now ; or that we might now turn truly, if we would, to God.

In this emergency, the apostle was encouraged by a vision of the Lord in the night, saying, "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace : for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee : for I have much people in this city." This was a most seasonable assurance, when the Jews had proved themselves unfit for any further exhortation, and when St. Paul might have naturally feared that he should meet with few converts among the Gentiles. But often in cases which seem to us least hopeful, God designs to work more than ordinary good. Whosoever therefore we are most tempted to despond, either for our brethren or for ourselves, let us lay to heart the comfort which Christ offers in this text ; "Be not afraid." "I am with thee." And if He be with us, who can be against us ? Who can be so against us, as to prevail, if the Son of God Himself take part with us against those who are the enemies of our soul's salvation ? No, let us persevere as did St. Paul, who upon the strength of this assurance, "continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them." Let us persevere in whatever duty God has given us to do, not afraid, for Christ is with us.

Paul is brought before Gallio; goeth to Ephesus.

12 And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat, 13 Saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you :

15 But if it be a question of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it ; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And he drave them from the judgment seat.

17 Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat. And Gallio cared for none of those things.

18 And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila ; having shorn his head in Cenehrea : for he had a vow.

19 And he came to Ephesus, and left them there : but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews.

20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not ;

21 But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem : but I will return again unto you, 'if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

¹ 1 Cor. 4. 10. Jam. 4. 15.

§ 412. That we ought to care for all men.

The temper of Gallio is no uncommon one. To care for none of these things is the disposition with which a great part of mankind regard matters of most importance to their eternal welfare. And it is painful to reflect how greatly this indifference is promoted by its being known that those who seem intent upon religious truth, often dispute vehemently about trifles. It is because we are apt to waste our time and thoughts, and also to violate our charity, upon words and names of least importance in our law, therefore many men are apt to doubt whether we are in earnest at all, in the weightier matters of the Gospel. Let us then for the future care less for trifles, and more for the great realities of our faith. Let us care less for words and names, and more for things ; less for questionable points, and more for those great doctrines which are generally agreed upon. Let us shew that our hearts are set on heaven, that it is our earnest care not to perish everlastingly, that it is the whole study of our lives to love each other, and to serve our Lord. And then how would the most indifferent be awakened ! how would the most thoughtless think ! how would the most careless care !

We have a vow ; let it be heard in our speech, let it be seen in our conduct ; we have a vow, and we must act as they who are pledged to God, who are bound by a most solemn obligation to devote their whole hours to Christ. Wheresoever we have to go, and how much soever we may be pressed to stay, we must consent to nothing which is inconsistent with our duty. We must by all means do that which God commands. We must at any cost of profit, pleasure, character, or convenience, avoid sin and follow after holiness. Let these feelings be ever uppermost in our hearts, let them be manifest in the conduct of our lives ; and we may then reasonably hope of the most negligent beholders, that they will see far more than they now do the necessity of caring for the soul.

Some however will not see in any case. Gallio cared not even for the preaching of St. Paul. And though he professed to despise the matter in dispute, as being a question of words and names, he shewed afterwards that he cared as little for things of evident importance, such as the beating of Sosthenes before the judgment seat. And thus it often happens that they who cover an indifference to religious truth under the pretence of being averse to controversy, are at the same time indifferent to justice and to humanity. For nothing can permanently secure a lively sense of the wrongs of others, and an active benevolence in redressing them, except true love of God, and true faith in Christ, and true desire to love all men for his sake. With this desire in our hearts we shall never fail to care, we shall never fail to feel deeply, and to act resolutely, when we see any one, or hear of any one, being beaten or oppressed, reviled, insulted, or in any way ill used. To be kindly affectioned towards each other, this is the Christian's rule. See Rom. 12. 10. This spirit, the very opposite of selfishness, makes us feel for each sorrow of our brethren, as deeply, as forcibly, as if it were our own. It makes us count for brethren the most remote in country, the most estranged in language, kindred, or religion. And however different from our own be the laws or customs, the habits or pursuits, the joys or sufferings, of those whom thus we love, our charity constrains us, or rather inclines us of ourselves, to care for all these things, even for all things which can befall any one whom God has made, any one for whom Christ has died.

Only let us never so care for our brethren, as to forget that before all we must love our Lord. However earnest be their desires, we must by all means prefer to theirs the pleasure of our Father which is in heaven. And when we engage to comply with their requests, it must be always with this reserve implied, "if God will."

St. Paul strengtheneth the disciples. Apollos preacheth.

22 And when he had landed at Cæsarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

24 And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25 This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John.

26 And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue: whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

27 And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace:

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the scriptures that Jesus was Christ.

St. Paul had answered the Ephesians, when they desired him to stay, that he “must by all means keep the feast at Jerusalem.” Ver. 21. And here we read of his landing at Cæsarea, and going up. By which is meant that he went up to Jerusalem, and kept the feast. This renders it probable that the Christian festivals which we now observe were sanctioned by apostolic practice. For the Christians who kept the passover at Jerusalem were well aware that Christ was their passover, see 1 Cor. 5. 7, and must have celebrated at that season not only the rites ordained by Moses, but also a thankful remembrance of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Let us therefore gladly set apart in each year the time appointed by the church, for calling to mind the chief facts in the history of our Lord, and in the Gospel which He gave to be our guide unto salvation. Let us be thankful both for the things which happened, and for the ordinances by which they are kept fresh in our remembrance, to our great and endless comfort.

Of Apollos it is recorded that he was an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures. This shews us that the gifts of learning and of natural ability were of use and honour in the service of the Gospel, even whilst the preachers of it were in many things miraculously endowed. Much more therefore now, when we have miracles no more, much more should the best of human faculties, and the best of human learning, be devoted to teaching diligently “the things of the Lord.” But in order to success, there must be added to these abilities and acquirements, there must be added that they who teach should be what is here called fervent in spirit. And therefore as we are expressly taught to pray for ministers of the Gospel, let us pray that God may make those we pray for, both eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures, both fervent in spirit, and acquainted with the way of God perfectly.

Here we see further how all Christians may be in some sort ministers. For all may, like Aquila and Priscilla, expound to their neighbours, acquaintances, and friends, what they know of the way of God themselves. And let us note, for our encouragement in so doing, how this labour of love in Aquila and Priscilla redounded to the comfort of many others, to whom Apollos was afterwards of use. In Achaia he “helped them much which had believed through grace; for he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the scriptures that Jesus was Christ.” Who shall say then, in the multitude of connexions which bind us to each other, who shall say how large might be our influence for good, if only we would diligently improve each offered season for speaking a good word in behalf of Christian truth? What we say may be the means of moving others, whose words may again move the faith and awaken the love of many more. Gentiles and Jews also in distant lands may thus profit to a degree we little think of. And the most humble and lowly Christian, who watches out of love to say what may minister grace unto the hearers, may be counted in the world which is to come for one of those who “turn many to righteousness.” Daniel 12. 3.

Only there is great caution needful, and great warning is afforded by the instance of Apollos, lest the zeal of individuals exceed the bounds of order, and minister not to the prevalence of truth, but to the increase of a spirit of party. “One saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos;” 1 Cor. 3. 4; this was the error of the Corinthians, amongst whom these great teachers ministered. This is an error into which many are often tempted to fall, either by their own perversity, or by their teacher’s pride. Let us therefore hold stedfastly to this one profession, I am of Christ. Let us teach Him only, and learn only Him. Let us honour teachers for his sake, receive them in his name, and obey in them that authority which comes of Him. And whereinsoever we ourselves are teachers, let it be the earnest desire of our hearts to magnify not ourselves, but Him, and to promote his honour by the suppression of our own.

The Holy Ghost is given to the disciples at Ephesus.

1 And it came to pass, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples,

2 He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism.

4 Then said Paul, ¹ John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

10 And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

The disciples at Ephesus had not so much as heard whether there were any Holy Ghost. And upon their saying thus St. Paul replied, "Unto what then were ye baptized?" For had they been baptized as Christians, they would not only have heard that there was a Holy Ghost, but would have been baptized in his name. Whereas they had been baptized only "unto John's baptism." And therefore the apostle explained to them, that John's baptism was designed to prepare men by repentance for believing in Jesus Christ. "When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Here then we see the importance of Christian baptism, the importance of being baptized as Christ ordained, "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matth. 28. 19. This ensures that we shall at least be informed that there is a Father, that there is a Son, that there is a Holy Ghost. And further it makes it probable, that we shall feel how deeply we are bound to believe and do, according to what then was promised for us. Happy are they whose baptism is straightway followed by the gifts of the Spirit, who listen to the apostle's teaching, and profit by his powerful persuasion, in "the things concerning the kingdom of God."

Let us then put to ourselves this question of St. Paul, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" He meant it of such gifts as prophecy and tongues, things needful at that time for establishing the Gospel. We may apply it to the Spirit's influence on our hearts, to his moving us unto holiness and love. "Since ye believed." We profess to be believers now. And in some sort we were made to be believers, when we received the Holy Ghost at baptism. But have we received the Holy Ghost since we believed? Have we found in our hearts the testimony of the Spirit, the fruits of the Spirit? Should we find them if we were to examine now? They are, as St. Paul has told us, "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5. 22, 23. Are these fruits now in our hearts? Are they manifested in our lives, in our words, in our thoughts? Or might we not in some cases almost truly say, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost?"

Into his name we have been baptized. In Him we profess our firm belief: I believe in the Holy Ghost. But do we believe? What then do we believe? Let us note what it is that we ought to believe, that for the future we may know better and believe more. We ought to believe that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and from the Son; see John 15. 26; that our Lord Jesus Christ sent Him to be our Comforter, to abide with us for ever; see John 14. 16; that He helps our infirmities; see Rom. 8. 26; that He makes intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered; see Rom. 8. 26; that He bears witness with our Spirit that we are the children of God; see Rom. 8. 16; that He teaches us to cry, Abba, Father; see Rom. 8. 15; that He sheds abroad in our hearts the love of God; see Rom. 5. 5; that He makes our bodies a temple for Himself; see 1 Cor. 6. 19; that He works in us his manifold gifts, dividing to every man severally as He will; see 1 Cor. 12. 11; and that to Him as well as to the Father and to the Son there should therefore be glory in the church, which is in Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. See Eph. 3. 21. We must be aware we cannot believe in Christ, and come to Him, by our own reason, and strength, and might. But of the Holy Ghost we must believe, that He enlightens us by the ministry of the word; sanctifies and preserves us in the true faith of Christ, and in the right practice of his will; helps us to love each other, to bear with each other's infirmities, and to have peace and joy in believing. To Him then let us offer praise and thanksgiving; to Him let us devoutly pray.

Holy Spirit, direct and rule and guide our hearts! Let no sin reign in our mortal bodies, that we should fulfil the lusts thereof! Make us to be temples worthy of thy presence, casting out each evil spirit that would defile the soul! Help us to be holy as Thou art Holy! Help us to be pure as Thou art pure!

The exorcists are put to shame.

11 And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul:

12 So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13 Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

18 And many that believed came, and confessed, and shewed their deeds.

19 Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

20 So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

21 After these things were ended, Paul purposed in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see Rome.

22 So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season.

§ 415. Good brought out of evil.

The miracles here reported of St. Paul are called "special," being in some measure distinct from any that have been before recorded. And this variety of miracles might probably be intended to suit the various dispositions of mankind; some persons, as we still see, being struck by one kind of proof, and some by another. And in these "special miracles" there was a propriety at that time, because what was done was neither more nor less than what the priests and prophets of false gods used then to pretend to do. It was well therefore to shew that the apostle of Jesus Christ could actually do the very things to which these false teachers made pretence, and which the people were accustomed to consider as a proof of more than human power. For truth might be thus more profitably compared with falsehood, idolators more powerfully convinced, and the reign of Satan in a corrupted world be more speedily and signally overthrown.

Here we have an account of some of the pretenders to supernatural power. Exorcists they were called. That is to say, they professed to cast out devils. And they were Jews of the number of those who were dispersed among the heathen. And these having some knowledge of the true Jehovah, were more likely to be regarded, and to regard themselves, as qualified for casting out evil spirits. But how great was their mistake in thinking that by the mere name of Jesus uttered, they could do all that St. Paul had done, whilst they were without the faith he had within his heart, or the gifts with which he had been entrusted! And how great must have been their wonder, when those who were possessed replied, at the suggestion of the evil spirit, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" In vain should we attempt to cast out of our hearts any evil spirit who there moves us to transgress, by merely repeating the words of prayer, whilst we neither desire those things for which we pray, nor believe that for Christ's sake they will be given us. In vain should we contend with Satan for the mastery, except by help of the Holy Spirit of God. Else must we expect, like these exorcists, to be overcome by our spiritual adversary. Else may we be sure that our resistance will end only in the more utter subjection of the soul.

The tidings of this discomfiture of the exorcists caused a fear to fall on all, and the name of the Lord Jesus to be magnified. It brought also into discredit these pretended curious arts, and made converts of many who used to practise them. They "brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver." Have we then books which lead us into sin? Have we instruments of iniquity, or implements of any art or trade which conscience will no longer allow us to make use of? Let us not sell them for others to possess, let us not say within our hearts, that with the price of these we might buy what we may safely use. Let us not reason that others will be sure to sin, whether we minister the opportunity or not. But let us burn, or otherwise destroy what we dare no longer use ourselves. And if we count the price, let it be not to measure what we gain, but what we gladly lose for Christ's sake.

"So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed." By the ignorance and perversity of the exorcists the falsehood of their whole system was exposed. The books were burned. The price was counted. And God, who out of evil can still bring good, made the fault and folly of these Jews the means of bringing glory to the Gospel. And this, we doubt not, is the case with all the evil, which we see around us in the world, or which we feel in our own proud and wilful hearts. There is no sin we can commit, and God shall not turn it to some good end, either for the benefit of man, or for his own glory. But does this make it to be the less sin in us? Far from it. Sin it is, because God has forbidden it. It is that which brought death into the world. It is that which cost the death of Christ. It is that, which if we persist in doing it, will compel us in the last day, and in the presence of the assembled world, to flee naked and wounded before our enemy.

The Ephesians are set against St. Paul by Demetrius.

23 And the same time there arose no small stir about that way.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen;

25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.

26 Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands:

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth.

28 And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

29 And the whole city was filled with confusion: and having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not.

31 And certain of the chief of Asia, which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

This history gives us some insight into the many kinds of opposition which the Gospel at first had to encounter, and over which it so signally prevailed. The most enlightened nations of the world, as they were then generally esteemed, and as we still acknowledge them in many points to have been, these people, so eminent in arts, so studious in philosophy, were notwithstanding beguiled by the worship of vain idols, gods of gold and silver, of wood and stone. And this worship, besides the strength of custom, was connected with their feelings of pride and patriotism. Each separate nation had some one god or other, whose name, attributes, and imaginary favour, served to swell their own weight and reputation. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians. And the whole city was filled with confusion." And further, their interest, no less than their pride, was deeply concerned in the established worship. Many persons were engaged in the craft of making images, as well as in the service of the several temples. These easily prevailed on their relations and friends, and as we here see, on their fellow citizens, to take part against a religion which would spoil their trade. Yet the word of God grew mightily and prevailed. See ver. 20. It prevailed so as to be very generally acknowledged for the truth throughout the chief of these idolatrous nations.

What a victory this was we might more easily conceive, if we were to fix our attention on one point only, and observe how great a hinderance to the prevalence of truth the love of wealth still is. For though all, or nearly all, profess belief in Christ, it cannot be denied of very many that they live the life of unbelievers. And what is it which mostly hinders them from adopting true religion in their hearts? What is it which makes them put off their amendment, or in other words, persevere in their impenitence? Is it not that repentance would cost too much, would require them to renounce what they cannot bear to part with, either an unlawful calling, or unlawful gains made in a lawful calling?

Certainly no small stir would arise in any city, where on a sudden the whole Gospel truth should be at once faithfully preached, and faithfully practised. How many would have to give up their whole business at once! How many trades, which minister to mere vanity, must at once be utterly renounced! How many fortunes, which are swollen by pampering the most gross excesses, must straightway cease to be amassed! How many lands and houses gained by fraud or by oppression, must be restored, if it were possible, to the poor! Many books must be closed, if not absolutely burnt; many arts no longer practised; many sports forsaken; many joys renounced; many sights visited no more. These are the chief things which make men now reluctant to believe, reluctant to act as real believers. "By this craft we have our wealth." By thus refusing to believe we save a liberty to enjoy the pleasures of the world, which true faith would constrain us to renounce. "By this craft we have our wealth." This men often feel, when the truth is forced on their attention. "By this craft we have our wealth." This is the answer often given, almost in as many words, to the urgent exhortation of the Gospel, that we should renounce all which Christ forbids. I cannot give up this trade, it is so gainful. I cannot cease to traffick on the Lord's day, for I make more on that day than on any other. I cannot decline this pressure of worldly business, which prevents me from attending to my eternal interests. For it is by means of these manifold engagements that I am amassing a splendid fortune. These are the current arguments of practical unbelief. Nor can any thing prevail against this sordid reasoning, but a preference for the treasures of eternity; a conviction that there is no gain this world offers, no splendid fortune this world contains, which is worthy for one moment to be compared to the riches of God's mercy in his Son our Lord.

The tumult of the Ephesians allayed by the magistrate.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and some another: for the assembly was confused; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

35 And when the townclerk had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is † a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly.

37 For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, ‖ the law is open, and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

§ 417. How we must appease the storm of passion.

This account of the assembly of the Ephesians shews us, how much a great portion of mankind are disposed to follow the few who are inclined to lead. "The more part knew not wherefore they were come together." Hence we learn how much it is our duty to endeavour to lead others for their good, how great would be our influence in leading them, if only we would sincerely try. The more part act they know not wherefore. They then who know what they ought to do, and why, should lead those who know neither, into the ways of truth. They should both teach others to do right, and explain the grounds of doing right. And this consideration should further put us on our guard, that we be not led so easily and with so little reason, as we are naturally apt. For as no man ought to go into an assembly, of which he knows not why they are met together, so neither ought one to go into any company, where one is more likely to be led for evil than to lead for good.

The Jews put forward Alexander to speak in their behalf, lest it should be thought that they were the cause of the tumult. For as St. Paul was a Jew, and as the Gospel in each city was first preached to the Jews, it might probably be thought that they chiefly were concerned. And in truth their own doctrine, as they were Jews, was no less inconsistent than that preached by St. Paul, with all the practices of idolatry. So much the more should they have been willing not to shift the charge upon the Christians, but to share with them the duty and the risk of preaching against idol worship. In any case of danger, especially when that danger is incurred for the sake of truth, let us be more anxious to defend our brethren, than to excuse ourselves. Let us be willing to take up the cross of Christ; who suffered in our behalf, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us nigh unto God. See 1 Pet. 3. 18. Never are we more near in likeness unto Him that ruleth over all, than when we risk our own safety, ease, or gain, in order to ward off evil from our brethren, to rescue the oppressed, to defend them that are reviled, or to maintain the cause of the fatherless and the widow.

The chief magistrate of the city first appeased the people, made them quiet, so as to listen to his words. He then induced them, by reasons of sufficient weight, to return peaceably to their homes. How he first appeased them is not mentioned. But we may conclude that it was by means of his office as a magistrate, and by the respect which was paid to his authority. This shews us one great use of such authority, entrusted as it is to lawful magistrates for the common welfare. For till peace can be first obtained amongst a multitude, the voice of reason is lifted up in vain. And what can be more frightful than assembled numbers, under the influence of ill directed passions, ready to tear to pieces them that speak for good? When violence takes place of reason, when justice is set at nought, and mercy forgotten in the prevalence of wrath, what can be more terrible than man to man?

Like to these also are those tumults in our own hearts, which grief or passion are too apt to raise. Whilst they last, in vain is reason urged on our attention. In vain do we ourselves urge upon ourselves reasons and resolutions oftentimes before reviewed, and reviewed in vain. First we must be appeased. First the storm of passion must be laid. And for this we must apply to some one higher than ourselves. For this we must apply to Him who has authority. For this we must ask in prayer of God, that He will be pleased to give us quietness and peace. In the midst of such commotions, may God make us ever sensible, that for these things we must expect to be called in question! May God help us, when we pray for his assistance, and help us also to be inclined to pray! May God remind us, the very next time our pride is mortified, our hope disappointed, our anger stirred, or any evil passion roused within our hearts, that it is from Him alone that we must look for peace, and that when we cannot reason we yet might pray!

St. Paul preacheth at Troas.

1 And after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece,

3 And there abode three months. And when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together ¹ to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

Seven persons who accompanied St. Paul from Greece into Asia are here mentioned by name. And this mention of names served for reference when first the history was published, whilst it was likely that many of these persons would be alive. It could easily be learnt of them, or of their friends, by Christians in any of the neighbouring countries, whether they did thus accompany the apostle, and whether they knew of the things here set down as having happened in their presence. And further this serves to make the history more interesting to us, as well as the doctrines and duties with which it is connected; when we are reminded, by the mention of these early converts, that they who beheld the miracles which were wrought, and believed the Gospel which was preached, were men of like nature with ourselves. And thus also we do well to mention by their names, those for whom we pray in the congregation of the church. Whether it be for the sick that we intercede, or for kings, and them that are in authority, our attention is more fully directed by this method to those in whose behalf we pray; and our hearts are more likely to be affected, so as to pray with faith and love.

Such we doubt not were the prayers of the early Christians, often put up for one another by name, at their assemblies for public worship. And of these assemblies we here learn that they took place on the first day of the week; that is to say, the first according to the reckoning of the Jews, the day which we call Sunday, or the Lord's day. This was the day on which the disciples came together to break bread, to celebrate the communion of Christ's body and blood. How probable does it hence appear that these primitive Christians passed no single week without thus celebrating on the first day of it, the thankful remembrance of the death of Christ! This was the day on which St. "Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." What earnestness did such long preaching manifest in the apostle! What zeal in them that listened! What a lesson to us not to limit either our speaking or our listening for good, to such stated days, or short intervals, as are commonly considered to be enough! What a proof that on due occasions, and on a subject of so deep concern as that on which St. Paul discoursed, it would well become the preacher to speak till midnight, and the hearers to be glad to listen!

But let us take heed how we hear. Let us watch, lest whilst we listen to the word of God, we suffer the weakness of the body, or the enemy of the soul, to beguile us into sleep or inattention. It was after listening for many hours, it was at midnight, that Eutychus fell into a deep sleep. It is at midday, and during a discourse of scarce half an hour, that many hearers are now found to slumber. What would be their condition, if whilst thus they are asleep, they were to fall down, and be taken up dead? With no apostle at hand to embrace them, and restore their life, with no moment for repenting of this their latest sin, with no pause between the act of irreverence to God, and the summons to the judgment seat of Christ, who must not tremble to think it possible that he might in this way breathe his last?

May God make us watchful when we hear his word that we listen with all our power! * May God make us anxious to be instructed by them whom He has sent to preach! May God guard us whilst we sit to hear, that we be not overtaken by sleep or death! May God save us, whilst we listen wide awake, from that fearful lethargy of the soul, which makes us dead whilst yet alive, and which when we die is death eternal!

St. Paul sendeth to Ephesus for the elders of the church.

13 And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia: for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.

17 And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house,

21 Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

22 And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there:

23 Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions shall abide me.

24 But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

St. Paul we see was anxious to be at "Jerusalem the day of Pentecost." This might be partly because of the number both of Jews and Christians, whom he was likely to meet there at that time. And partly, we may suppose, his anxiety to be there arose from a wish to keep the Christian festival, which we still celebrate at the same period of the year. For it was on the day of Pentecost that the gift of tongues was first vouchsafed to the apostles. And there is no doubt that this manifestation of the Spirit has been commemorated ever since, at the same season, in the Christian church. Let not us then neglect to observe either this or any other holy day, appointed to help us in remembering the chief facts of the religion we profess. For the birth and for the death of Christ, for his resurrection from the dead, and ascension into heaven, for these things, and for the gift of the Holy Ghost, let us be thankful that there are appointed seasons, which may help to keep them in our remembrance.

Though St. Paul would not stop to call at Ephesus, he was not willing to pass that district without a parting admonition to the elders of the church there planted by himself. He therefore sent for them to come to him at Miletus; and there addressed them in terms most full of comfort and encouragement to Christians of every age and country. He reminded them how diligently he had taught amongst them, how he had kept back nothing that was profitable unto them. He told them that he was now going "bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem," meaning, that he knew by the Spirit that he should there be cast into bonds. But chiefly he insisted on those points of doctrine which had been most prominent in his ministry amongst them. And in his teaching we here see that "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," were set forth as of the first importance. And afterwards he added, as another important part of the ministry, which he had received of the Lord, that it was "to testify the gospel of the grace of God." By which expression he intended both God's mercy in forgiving, and his goodness in continuing to help those whom He forgives. These then should be the first and foremost matters in the ministrations of the Christian pastor. These should be at the foundation of our own notions in religion, of what we think and feel, believe and do. Not our own good works, but repentance from our sins, faith in our Saviour Christ, reliance on his merits, and confidence in the help of the Holy Ghost, these form the chief testimony of the apostle. On these it is indeed our urgent duty, and it must be our perpetual delight, to build up also holiness of life. But the foundation must first be laid aright, or the building will be neither safe nor serviceable.

Let us then be first convinced of sin. By careful study of God's holy word, let us learn how far we are from what we ought to be, how far from what He would have us be, how far from what He would help us to become. Next let us feel sorry for our misdoings, grieved at having offended God, shocked to think how ill we have requited the love of our Saviour Christ. Thence let us proceed to hate the sins we used to love, and to love the holiness which we used to hate. And as we can make no progress in this Christian course without frequent and earnest prayer, let us pray with the most firm persuasion that for Christ's sake our prayers are heard, our sins are forgiven, and that through the power of his atonement we have henceforth grace to live unto Himself, and when we die to partake of his inheritance. And what would then move us from the doing of our duty? What should we then count too dear unto ourselves, to be sacrificed for the sake of Christ? What should we then aim at in this present world, but to finish our course with joy?

St. Paul concludes his address to the elders at Miletus.

25 And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men.

27 For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.

28 Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

29 For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.

30 Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

31 Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified:

33 I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.

34 Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.

35 I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

36 And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37 And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him,

38 Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.

1 Cor. 4. 12. 1 Thess. 2. 9. 2 Thess. 3. 8.

What a delightful testimony of a good conscience, was this which St. Paul uttered to the assembled elders, "I am pure from the blood of all men!" What an object for each minister of Christ to aim at, that he may never, by any neglect of his, become answerable for the sins of those who are committed to his charge! What a fearful consideration for each single Christian, that there is risk of our being so deeply implicated in the offences of each other, as that the blood of one can be on another's head! Never may we by our ill example draw in others to offend! Never may we fail to use the gift that is in us, for improving others to the utmost of our power! And if there be any within our reach who know not of God's counsel, revealed in the Scriptures, for their eternal good, never may we shun to declare to them, what it has pleased Him to make known unto ourselves! To be afraid, or shy, or silent, is in such a case not only most unkind to them, but most perilous to ourselves. For whatever may be the grounds of our reluctance, however deeply we may apprehend our own deficiencies, yet if we know "the grace of God that bringeth salvation," Tit. 2. 11, and tell not to our neighbour who is ignorant, how can we dare to say, how hope to feel, "I am pure from the blood of all men?"

St. Paul testifies that "by the space of three years" he had "ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." This is the spirit in which we ought always to convey our Christian admonition to each other. How know we, for how seldom have we tried, how know we what would be the fruit of our advice, if we were to give it thus patiently, thus affectionately; if we were to repeat it without being wearied by former failure, and so as not to weary those whom we address; and if we were to prove by tears of heartfelt sorrow, unifying ourselves that we venture to advise our friends, but in order to save their souls from death? Let us set before our eyes a world lost in sin. Let us consider what St. Peter asks us, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" 1 Peter 4. 18. Let us remember how many risks even believers must encounter from men who speak "perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." And how could we then help to weep in earnest over the state of the unbelieving and impenitent?

At the end of his address St. Paul reminds the elders how he had supported himself, and them that were with him, by working with his own hands. Thus he had also helped to fix in their remembrance these most important words of the Lord Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." But how different is this saying of our Lord from the ordinary discourse, and from the prevailing practice, of many amongst us, his professed disciples! Who that should listen to our common conversation, or should watch our daily works, who would not suppose it to be an acknowledged truth, that to receive is more blessed than to give? Why else do many take such anxious thought for what they shall eat, and what they shall drink, and wherewith they shall be clothed; whilst few take like pains to devise how they may best feed the hungry, or clothe the naked; few labour with like anxiety to bestow their alms, as they that must give account to a Master which is in heaven? Why else are we so reluctant to propose to one another occasions of Christian almsgiving? Why are we so apt to find excuses when such objects are proposed, however urgently to ourselves? We cannot surely in our hearts believe what the apostle has charged us to remember. We do not understand, or we will not be persuaded, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." When next we are invited to bestow our alms, when next it is our duty to invite our neighbours to partake in any charitable work, let us call to mind these striking words. And the more fond we are by nature of receiving, let us be assured, for they are the words of the Lord Jesus, that it is a more blessed thing to give.

St. Paul journeyeth towards Jerusalem.

1 And it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned home again.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day, we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Caesarea: and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophecy.

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judaea certain prophet, named Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that oweth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered; What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done.

1 Ch. 6. 5*

§ 421. The use of bearing crosses patiently.

"After we were gotten from them," so hard it was for St. Paul and his companions to part from friends whom they so dearly loved, as the elders assembled at Miletus! So dearly ought we to love them who love our Lord, and labour in his work! So great pleasure ought we to take in their society! And yet so resolutely ought we to tear ourselves away, when our duty to our neighbour or to God requires it! How Christian friends might be beheld at parting we learn from what took place at Tyre: "We kneeled down on the shore, and prayed. To commend each other to the care of Him who is the Friend of all, to commend ourselves into his hands, as unto One whom above all we love, to kneel down as acknowledging his presence every where, and to pray as feeling that on all occasions his help alone can support and comfort us, these are the most fitting salutations for them who see God in every thing, this is the best Christian precedent for the parting of friends, whether our journey be from land to land, or from earth, as we hope, to heaven.

St. Paul during his voyage had many warnings that afflictions and bonds awaited him at Jerusalem. And he felt deeply for the sorrow which his friends expressed on the occasion. Nevertheless he persevered in his journey; and was willing not to be bound only, "but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." We are not required not to feel, nor not to feel deeply in affliction. "What mean ye to weep, and to break my heart?" are the words of one who was himself no less distressed than they to whom he spoke. He who elasters us for our good would not have us insensible to our chastisement. But whilst we feel it deeply, we must at the same time bear it patiently. We must be ready, however much we suffer, we must be ready to suffer more "for the name of the Lord Jesus." We must endeavour, whatever be our suffering, we must endeavour to make it tend to the glory of his name; by making the Gospel, through our patience, more known and valued, obeyed and loved.

And by no means can we more effectually make our light to shine before men, than by receiving cheerfully not only the greater afflictions of life, but also those smaller crosses, which we are daily called on to take up in the intercourse of each private family. How can we imagine that in St. Paul's circumstances, we should have been willing to be bound and to die for Christ, if we cannot now in our own case, whatever it may be, submit to the infirmities, put up with the ill tempers, of those with whom we dwell; and in the petty trials and troubles of domestic life bear each other's burdens? Let us in these, as well as in our more severe afflictions, repeat always contentedly the words of the disciples, "The will of the Lord be done." Let us be persuaded that it is his will, for our good; and that through his grace this trial of our faith will work patience and joy and hope. Let us watch that in each trial we may grow in grace, that grace, whether humility, meekness, or forbearance, whether readiness to forgive injuries, or to return blessing for a curse, that grace which the occasion seems most to offer, and which God, as we may hope, most designs to work. Let us feel that it is good for us to be thus tried each hour. Let us be glad that we have thus each hour opportunity, if not to die for our Lord yet to live unto Him. Let us endeavour so to live according to his will, and in the denial of our own corrupt affections, that we may be counted for his sake to die daily. See 1 Cor. 15. 31.

St. Paul cometh to Jerusalem.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cæsarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17 And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law:

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs.

St. Paul on his arrival at Jerusalem was received by the brethren gladly. And when he told them, as his first glad tidings, "what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry," "they glorified the Lord." There was no longer amongst these rulers of the church at Jerusalem any jealousy of the Gentile converts. They rejoiced to find that those whom they used to count for lost, were now sought for and found of God. How greatly ought we also to rejoice, when we see those who have been strangers to faith and holiness, reclaimed from a profligate or worldly life, from a careless or unbelieving mind. There is joy in heaven over repentant sinners. And the nearer our hearts are to heaven, we shall welcome them more warmly to our own society, believing them to be reconciled to God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The elders at Jerusalem had also to tell St. Paul how many thousands of Jews were become believers. "And they are all zealous of the law." This was the case with Jewish converts for many years. They conceived themselves still bound by all particulars in the law of Moses, and they held that all Gentile converts were bound likewise. Now it had been falsely reported of St. Paul that he taught the Jews who were dispersed among the Gentiles, that they ought not to circumcise their children; whereas he seems only to have claimed this exemption for the Gentiles, teaching the Jews that they were free either to circumcise or not. And therefore to remove this prejudice of the Jews, he consented to conform to their customs, in a matter of indifference, the paying the expenses of four men who had made a vow which would put them to some charge. Wherein he acted according to his own profession: "unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews." 1 Cor. 9. 20.

Hence we learn how wrong it is to stand out for our own opinions in matters of comparative indifference. We see how cheerfully, when greater harm would arise from our refusal, we must consent to do that which might else be needless. This same apostle, as we know from his Epistles, was most zealous in maintaining that the Gentiles were not bound by the law of Moses; nor, nor the Jews either. But they were free to do what they were not bound to do. They were free to do themselves, what they were not free to impose upon their brethren. And this might be an useful rule for us in any questions of faith or practice, where we seem to hold more strict opinions than our neighbours. It is lawful for us to deny ourselves the amusements, or the gain, in question. It is lawful for us to impose upon ourselves a much greater amount of self denial, a much more hard task of duty, than we are at liberty to require of our brethren.

And further we may do well in such matters to exceed the measure which we should otherwise set ourselves in, in order to conform to the opinions of others. We must not, to please them, do less for heaven than we ourselves hold right. But we may profitably do more than we should otherwise, we may profitably yield somewhat from our own opinions on this safer side. For it is one thing to be firm in our adherence to the truth. It is another to stand up for it, as if we felt only for our own credit and consistency. Let us hold fast that which is good, for the sake of Him who is all truth, all goodness; and we shall be then ready, whilst we hold it fast, to recommend it by all reasonable concessions, and to adorn it by meekness, gentleness, and love.

St. Paul is taken by the chief captain.

27 And when the seven days were almost ended, the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him.

28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut.

31 And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

32 Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him.

37 And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

38 Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying, § 423. Peace in the midst of strife.

Do what we will to conciliate opposition, the froward will oppose themselves notwithstanding. The concession of St. Paul to the prejudices of the Jews required him to spend seven days in the temple. But before the days were ended, the very sight of him in this place stirred up their malignant passions, and they "went about to kill him." And thus it often happens, that the exercise of Christian principle in one party only makes more manifest in another the height of iniquity. And this is because of the deceitfulness of sin, because of the natural depravity of the heart of man. It is because of our enemy the devil, who is constantly going about "seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5. 8. Through these means it comes to pass that the things which ought most to move us to repent, if they fail, are most apt to harden us in sin. God grant that the forbearance we meet with in our brethren, may incline us not to encroach further, but more to yield, and more to bear with! God grant that the forgiveness we have experienced at his hands may lead us not to presume, but to reform, not to think that we may continue the more safely in our sins, but to be converted and sin no more!

And here we may do well to note the temper of St. Paul, the readiness with which he used in his protection all the peaceable means of reason and of truth. "May I speak unto thee?" are the first words he utters in the tumult, words of respectful application to the person in chief authority. "I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus," is his next remark; by which he intimated that he was a citizen of Rome, and the more entitled to the protection of the captain. "Suffer me to speak unto the people." He desires to justify his conduct in their sight, if the captain would but secure a hearing. "He spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue." Having the choice, he prefers speaking in the language which is most likely to conciliate their esteem. Who then can doubt that it was no vain presumption, but a reasonable and settled conviction which animated his words and conduct? And if the facts to which he testified were such as he himself might have seen and heard and handled, who can question but that his evidence thus faithfully delivered, is sure and certain proof?

But lastly, let us from these proceedings take occasion to observe, how evenly the graces of the Gospel enable us to maintain our course through the troubles of the world, and through the disorders of our own affections. Let us compare the people, stirred up, crying out, running together, shutting up the doors of God's temple, and going about to kill the apostle, these things let us compare with the apostle's patience, his calmness, self possession, and consideration for his enemies. And let us remember that like to his should be our temper, like to his our behaviour under the assaults of violence, like to his our presence of mind, and self command, and self denial, in the most fierce onset of our most besetting sins. When provoked by insult, let us reply by reasoning. When endangered by rude or murderous assailants, let us still plead no more than, "Suffer me to speak." Though borne away by the tumult of a whole city in an uproar, let us be thinking all the while what will most make for peace. Or if it be in our own passions that the storm is stirred, let us desire still to speak to God in prayer, the language most acceptable unto Him, who alone can give rest unto our souls.

St. Paul makes his defence at Jerusalem.

1 Men, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence: and he saith,)

3 ¹ I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day.

4 ² And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.

5 As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

6 And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10 And I said, ³ What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12 And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth.

15 For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

16 And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

§ 424. The folly of kicking against the pricks.

St. Paul opens his defence with the fact that he was a Jew. This is a point worthy of our remark; because it shews, that if he uniformly advocated the title of the Gentiles to the blessings of the Gospel, this was not for want of knowing and valuing the privileges of the Jews. And further, he had been "zealous towards God," in the same sense that the Jews were zealous, to such a degree as to persecute all Christians unto death. How happy was the apostle in being able thus to turn into an argument for the truth his own errors in time past! How watchful ought we to be, like him, that we may apply to the conviction of our brethren those sins by which we once helped to lead them astray. See, we ought to say, see from what I have been converted. Once I loved the world as you do now. Once I used to obey the lusts of the flesh. Now I am ashamed of my past offences, but I am not ashamed to own that I offended. I own with sorrow and contrition for myself, I own with deep remorse, to think that I may have misled others. But at the same time I testify with joy, how great is God's mercy in forgiving, how great has been my gain in being delivered from sin, and set free to serve Christ my Saviour.

From the account of what he was by birth and education, the apostle proceeds to tell of his conversion. Like the beast of burden, that kicks against the spur applied for his correction, the persecutor of Christ had resisted all evidence offered to his mind, by the miracles and preaching of the apostles, and by the patient endurance of wrong, which he met with in those whom he persecuted to death. The more he saw of those men, of whom the world was not worthy, he was only the more resolved to put them down. Like to his is the case of every man who wilfully shuts his eyes against the truth. Like to his is the case of every man who by any perversity or error of his own, fails to be convinced by the full means of conviction. Like to his is the case of every man who refuses to listen to what conscience whispers, or to profit by those events, which God in his providence dispenses, in order to move us to repent and to amend. If we are in pain, and will not learn to be resigned, this is "to kick against the pricks." The more we refuse, we must expect to suffer more, until we learn the lesson God designs to teach. If we are afflicted with loss of fortune, health, or friends, and will not acquiesce as God would have us, will not be content as He has bidden us, this also is "to kick against the pricks." And the more we thus resist we must expect to be afflicted more, unless God give us over to a reprobate mind. Is it not thus that we treat children of our own? When they disobey we punish. And if still they are refractory we punish more. And are not we as children in God's hand? And ought we not to thank Him for his goodness, in still bearing with us in our resistance, and giving us by repeated chastisement, renewed opportunity of submission to his will? Praised be his name, whether by affliction from without, or by the stings of conscience within, He goads us on from sin to holiness, from earth to heaven! Praised be his name, that He makes it hard for us to kick against the pricks, more hard, more painful, more full of misery, to sin than to repent, to resist than to obey, to oppose and doubt than to believe and love.

St. Paul is not suffered to finish his defence.

17 And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance;

18 And saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19 And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee:

20 ¹ And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21 And he said unto me, Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.

23 And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air,

24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have || examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.

30 On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

When St. Paul was told that he should be a witness unto all men, of what he had seen and heard, sec ver. 15, it was natural for him to feel that by reason of his former unbelief, and the ill treatment which he had heaped upon the Christian church, many would not receive his testimony. The Jews might indeed have hence reasonably concluded, that this apostle had sure evidence for the change of his behaviour. And the Christians ought to have rejoiced in his conversion, to have heard him without fear, suspicion, or distrust. But he was instructed by the Lord, whilst he was praying in the temple, that such would not be the fruit of his abiding in Jerusalem. What a mortifying reflection must this be to those who have once lived an unchristian life, that however deeply they may afterwards repent, the world so hardly gives them credit for repentance, the worldly minded will so hardly attend to the words of their advice, or to the force of their example! "Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." This was the direction of our Lord to St. Paul in this emergency. And in a like cause any Christian might hence learn, that it would be better to change the place of his abode, than to dwell amongst a people to whom he could do no good. If after undergoing a change fit to be called conversion, we cannot by any measure of humility, forbearance, and moderation, suppress the scandal of our former unbelief or disobedience, let us depart far hence. Let us at all costs, as long as life endures, live where we may do honour unto our Lord, and help forward the salvation of our brethren.

When St. Paul mentioned to the Jews his commission to preach unto the Gentiles, they would no longer suffer him to speak. "They cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air." This was in token of the violence of their rage. And it shews us to what a height of madness men may come at last, who once give way to selfishness, jealousy, and pride. Let us then watch against that obstinate adherence to our opinions, which savours more of confidence in ourselves than of regard to truth. Let us hear readily, patiently, and attentively, those who offer to persuade us that we are wrong; desiring by all means in our power to be right.

The chief captain would have examined Paul by scourging, "that he might know wherefore they cried so against him." But against this degrading torture St. Paul pleaded that he was a citizen of Rome. For the Romans, who were at that time the masters of the world, gave to such as they called citizens many valuable privileges, and would by no means suffer them to be scourged. This distinction between freemen and other members of the state was no small hardship upon those who shared not the immunity. How different are the comparatively equal laws under which the greater part of Christians, in proportion to their light, have the happiness to live! How rarely amongst Christian nations is one part of the community exposed to any disgraceful punishment from which the other part is legally exempt! How much do we owe to the Gospel of our Lord for all that is just, and kind, and equal, in our laws! How much from the Gospel might we learn towards amending what is yet unequal, unkind, unjust! Let us be thankful that it has pleased Almighty God thus to rule the hearts of them that are in authority! Let us pray that He may henceforth prosper all their consultations, to the advancement of his glory and to the welfare of his church!

St. Paul pleadeth his cause before the council.

1 And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

2 And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?

5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest: for it is written, ¹Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, ²I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: ³of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 ⁴For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man: but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God.

10 And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

11 And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

What a great thing was this for the apostle to declare to his assembled brethren: "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day!" What an object for us to set before ourselves continually, in all that we ever do, or say, or think! Let us remember what conscience is: the voice of the inner man, which is enlightened and directed by the Holy Spirit of God. This is the conscience of a Christian. This is what we resist, if we act against our conscience; this is what we follow, if we live in all good conscience; the Holy Spirit of God moving our hearts to that which is good. "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that which he alloweth;" Rom. 14. 22; who allows not himself in any single action, which at the time he even suspects to be amiss. This is to live in a good conscience, if we never stifle that voice within us, which tells us, whether we will hear or not, tells us of all our actions, which be pleasing unto God, and which are hateful in his sight.

These words of the apostle provoked the high priest to order him to be smitten. Whereupon he was rebuked by St. Paul for giving this commandment contrary to law. And this rebuke was of the nature of a prophecy, a judicial sentence delivered by the prophet of the Lord, against the enemy and persecutor of the church. "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." A fearful warning this for all who abuse office and authority, who persecute or oppress their fellow creatures, instead of protecting their rights, property, and persons. A fearful warning this, not only for rulers in the state, but for masters or parents, in the treatment of their families, for brethren in their conduct towards each other, for servants in their behaviour to their fellow servants, for all who have others under them in any manner or degree; a fearful warning against the indulgence of that temper which would inflict an injury, or sanction the striking of a blow.

But this prophetic sentence was delivered by the apostle without design to bring into disrespect the high priest's office. "I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest." In what I said I spoke not of his office, but of himself. I had no reference to his station, but only to his sin, in the words which I was directed to pronounce. Otherwise I am well aware that it is written, "Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people." See Exod. 22. 28. This then is a precept of the Law, which the Gospel will by no means allow us to transgress. To speak evil of dignities is a sin. See 2 Pet. 2. 10. To talk disrespectfully of those who are in authority, to condemn their actions, to revile their persons; these are not idle words; or if they be, they are such as we shall be required to give account of in the day of judgment. Let it therefore be our endeavour to judge no man, to revile no man, to speak evil of no man, and above all, of no one of those amongst our brethren who hold office as rulers of the people.

St. Paul warded off the peril that encompassed him by dividing his enemies against each other. See herein how weak a multitude may be made by intestine discord! See how properly the best of men may use the means of human wisdom, when they are not inconsistent with Christian principle! See how graciously our Lord Himself approved of the apostle's conduct, and consoled him in the midst of his distress. "Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome." This comes of living in good conscience before God, that Christ bids us be of good cheer. He encourages us. He gives us his support. He has died to secure for us all needful help. He lives to intercede in our behalf. And if we will but live faithfully according to his will, He will make us to be of good cheer for ever.

The conspiracy against Paul is reported to Lysias.

12 And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves || under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

14 And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would enquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

20 And he said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would enquire somewhat of him more perfectly.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

|| Or, with an oath of execration.

What a wicked vow was this, by which these forty Jews had bound themselves, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul! What a warning have we here against entering into any such vows, as we may not have opportunity to fulfil! On the one hand was murder, on the other perjury. Either they must take the apostle's life, or they must violate the vow which they had made, they must fall under the curse which they had wilfully provoked. Even in a good matter a vow before God is a thing rarely to be made, and never without being first well considered. And one chief thing to be considered is always this, whether the performance of it lie wholly within our reach. Though the object of these Jews had been not a wicked one, it must have been a wicked thing to make this vow, because they could have no security that they should be able to fulfil it. St. Paul might be delivered from their snare. And they must then either eat, or become murderers of themselves. Happy is it for us, that our vows, as we are Christians, though they embrace far more than we can do ourselves, are all put within our power by the grace of God. And happy are they who thus fulfil the obligations first laid on them in Christian baptism, and then renewed when they came to be confirmed. We are to put to death our lusts, we are to mortify our corrupt affections, we are neither to eat nor drink but by the rules of temperance and soberness; to these things we are bound as Christians. And of these things we must own, against ourselves, though not by way of censuring our brethren, cursed are they that do them not.

How easily was the malice of the conspirators foiled by the activity and courage of Paul's sister's son! How readily when we know any thing that might help a brother out of danger, ought we to come forward of ourselves, and to tell it for his good! How gladly ought we always to give information of evil, to those who are in station of authority to prevent it! False is the shame which ties our tongue, and cruel is the mercy which withholds our hands, if we know of wrong without exposing it, if we witness injustice, oppression, or deceit, and interfere not to uphold truth, and right, and justice. In such behaviour we forget that our forbearance, whilst it screens the guilty, and encourages them in sin, hurts those who are already injured, and deprives them of that help, which, if we were in their case, we should be thankful for ourselves. Let us do therefore as we would be done by. And whether it be for the rights of our neighbour, or what is nearly the same thing, for the laws of our country, that we have opportunity to give help or information, let us be forward to tell all we know, and to do all we can, towards exposing wickedness and upholding truth.

But chiefly, if we desire to prevent evil in the world, and to promote the growth of all that is most good, we should rejoice to spread abroad the tidings of salvation through Christ, we must endeavour to impress the truths of Christian doctrine on those who are lying in the prison house of sin, and in jeopardy of death eternal. Brother, we must say to such an one, I have a certain thing to tell thee. Thine enemy is going about seeking whom he may devour. He is lying in wait for thee, even for thy soul. He desires to have thee lost for ever. Watch therefore for thy life. Awake from sin. Have recourse to the great Captain of thy salvation. He alone can give thee safety, liberty. This message it is my duty to deliver. It is for thy sake that I deliver it. It is to save thee, if it be possible, from the pit of destruction. I gain nothing for myself, but am concerned for thee only. Or rather I gain every thing, if I should gain thee. If I should convert one sinner from the error of his way, I should be honoured as an instrument in the hands of God, to save a soul from death, and to hide a multitude of sins. See James 5. 20.

Lysias sendeth St. Paul to Felix.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast shewed these things to me.

23 And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Caesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting.

27 This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman.

28 And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.

31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle:

33 Who, when they came to Caesarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia;

35 I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come, and he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.

The young man who had given notice of the conspiracy to the chief captain was charged with most entire secrecy: "See thou tell no man." For the success of the measures afterwards adopted might depend much upon their being unknown to the conspirators. Hence we may take occasion to observe on the importance of being silent in due season, on the great risk there is of our doing harm to others, as well as to ourselves, by talking, as many do, for talking sake. To know when to be silent, is almost as great a gift as to know what we ought to say. By both means, in their several seasons, we may be enabled to serve our brethren, to signify our concern for God's honour, to baffle the designs of the ungodly, or to put to silence the folly of the profane.

Upon receiving this information, the chief captain appointed several hundreds of soldiers, horsemen, and spearmen, to escort Paul safe to Caesarea. This is the right use of training men to arms, that they may serve to protect the peaceable from the violent, to save the property, or laws, or rights of those, who are compassed about with cruel enemies. The magistrate, we are told, "beareth not the sword in vain." Rom. 13. 4. And it is undoubtedly his duty to wield it with decision, when it is needful for the maintenance of good government and peace. But how different is the common use of arms and soldiers, even amongst Christians! How different from the humane precaution of the captain, who by secrecy would prevent the assault of the conspirators, rather than subdue it by the sword and spear! How different from the injunctions of our Saviour, that we should put up the sword into its place, that to him who smiteth us on the right cheek we should turn the other also! How different from the ease supposed by the apostle, that the magistrate has the power of life and death for the punishment of evil doers! How often are the weapons of warfare employed, for no such holy ends as these, and within no such Christian limits, but to further the forbidden purposes of pride, anger, covetousness, or ambition! When we think of all the evils which spring from war, when we consider how few wars which have been ever waged, are free from the stain of wrong on either side, we may well pray, in the words of our affecting Litany, "that it may please God to give to all nations unity, peace, and concord."

At Caesarea the soldiers delivered Paul to Felix; who, having inquired of what province he was, settled to wait before hearing him, till his accusers should appear. This was a plan worthy of a more upright judge than Felix. This is a rule which we might profitably adopt in such judgments as we have sometimes need to form of matters reported in our company. Let us be careful to hear both sides, before we decide in behalf of either, much more before we decide against any one. Let us never condemn unheard. Or rather let us not condemn at all. Whomsoever we hear accused, let us suspend our opinion, let us believe that they are innocent, till we cannot help knowing that they are guilty. Let us think of the apostle kept in Herod's judgment hall. Let this instance of impartiality in Felix weigh with us, that we may also be slow to speak, swift to hear, anxious to learn all that is in favour of the accused, reluctant to express any thing that amounts to condemnation. Some opinions we must form sometimes of each other, for the guidance and direction of our own conduct. God help us in such cases to judge aright! God help us to think no evil, to hope all things, to believe all things; to hope and believe any thing of our brother, rather than that he is worse than ourselves; to judge nothing, if we can help it, before the time; and where we must needs judge something, there to judge charitable judgment!

St. Paul is accused by Tertullus.

1 And after five days Ananias the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes :

6 Who also hath gone about to provoke the temple : whom we took, and would have judged according to our law.

7 But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8 Commanding his accusers to come unto thee : by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.

9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself:

11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.

12 And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city :

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.

14 But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets :

15 And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

16 And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

St. Paul and Tertullus his accuser are now both before the governor. Let us compare the manner of their address. Let us observe how Tertullus begins with flattering the judge, and goes on to revile the accused ; while St. Paul speaks respectfully towards Felix, takes no notice of the hard names employed by his accuser, and yet firmly maintains his own innocence, in respect of the things laid to his charge. "We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness:" these are the words of fulsome praise, by which the orator hoped to influence the judge. For St. Paul he had no better names than "a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Let us be watchful, if we ever have occasion to express an unfavourable opinion, let us be watchful that we use no words of harshness. If it be our office to report or to reprove a fault, let us do it with words of meekness, and in tones of gentleness and love.

And when we are ourselves accused, when any fault is found with our behaviour, let us be careful that we answer not with words of anger, that we hear not with feelings of revenge. Let us lay to heart attentively the charge preferred. Let us well consider whether it be not grounded in the truth. Few faults ever can be found, to which we might not every one of us in some degree plead guilty. Though the things have not been done, the feeling may have been felt. The pride which it implied, the deceitfulness, the folly, the uncharitableness, these we have abundantly by nature in our hearts. And of these there remain in most of us very ample traces, of which we might be thankful to be reminded, which we ought to be glad of a warning to amend. To confess our faults one to another is a part of our Christian duty. He who helps us to see them, helps us to confess them, and is therefore entitled to our cordial thanks. He helps us to confess them to each other. He helps us to confess them unto God. He helps us therefore towards attaining one great object of our daily prayers, forgiveness of sin. I thank you, let us answer, by our manner or by our words, I thank you for your faithful admonition. My own heart is, I know, deceitful. My own eyes, I am well aware, are blind. If the charge you bring against me be correct, I am indebted to you for convincing me of sin ; I own you for an instrument in the hands of God, to help forward the salvation of my soul.

But though the charge brought against us should be utterly unfounded, though it be false as well as cruel and unkind, if we have not moved the sedition, not been ringleaders of the sect, not been parties to whatever act of evil has been done, then there seems to be even less room if possible for wrath, because there is more of peace within the soul. Let us therefore, like St. Paul, exercise ourselves "to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men." Let us watch that we do wilfully no wrong to any one ; that we neither deal dishonestly, nor think unkindly towards our neighbours ; and that we neither obey God negligently, nor dare to disobey his will. Then whatever names we may be called, whatever sins may be laid to our charge, we shall have hope toward God, that at the resurrection of the dead, we shall be counted just in his sight, through Christ.

St. Paul before Felix.

17 Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 ¹ Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult.

19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me.

20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council,

21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, ¹ Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul² and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.

24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

25 And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

26 He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

At the conclusion of his defence before Felix, St. Paul turned his discourse towards a subject, which he much wished to impress upon the attention of his hearer, the resurrection from the dead. By this means the governor understood at once the nature of the charge which was brought against him. For having been some years governor of Judæa, he must have heard much of the doctrines of the Christians, and must have been aware also of the enmity entertained against them by the Jews. And therefore he dismissed the charge for the present, keeping the apostle still in custody, but allowing him to enjoy the society of his friends. This large degree of liberty, with which the Roman governor indulged his prisoner, should be a profitable lesson to Christians, as to the humane consideration which is due to those, who for their offences are confined to the walls of a prison. From these outcasts of society how seldom can it be useful to shut out such few friends as they still have left! How seldom can it be humane or charitable to refuse them that intercourse with their kind, which is among the chief means ordained by the providence of God, to alleviate the sorrows and to enlarge the joys of life, to soften the heart to good impressions, and to make the soul ashamed of its iniquity. Let us learn to look not with horror, but with compassionate concern, on those who suffer the sad penalties of the law. Let us hope, and pray, and labour in their behalf, that their punishment, besides preventing others from offending, may be made effectual to turn their hearts.

Felix, with his wife Drusilla, "sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith of Christ." This would have seemed to many a fitting opportunity for a prisoner to win the favour of the governor. But what topics shall we reckon that the apostle will select for his discourse before the guilty Felix? Assuredly nothing less than those important truths which he must have known to be most unwelcome to his hearers. "Righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come;" these were the things of which he thought fit to reason, to one who was an unjust judge, to an adulterer and adulteress, who lived only for their pleasure in this present world. For such were Felix and Drusilla; Felix, a judge so profligate, that he kept Paul the longer in prison in the hope that money would have been given for his deliverance; and Drusilla, "which was a Jewess," of whom it is known from history, that she had been another man's wife, seduced; Felix living with her in defiance of that law against adultery, which as a Jewess she must have known to be from God.

Whilst St. Paul thus reasoned, "Felix trembled." But to what little purpose was his trembling! "When I have a convenient season I will call for thee." How long was this convenient season ere it came! How little do we hear of its ever coming! How much have we cause to fear that it never came at all! If like Felix we tremble, let us not like Felix delay. Let us hold the present to be the most convenient of all seasons for repentance and amendment of life. Let righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, be the matter of our daily meditation, the object of our hopes, the topic of our discourse, or the welcome employment of our lives. Most grievously must the sin of Felix have been increased by his frequent communing with St. Paul. To send for the apostle, and to hear him, for no end but for the love of money, what a hardness of heart does this argue, what a deafness to the voice of truth! The more occasions we enjoy for spiritual instruction, how much the more must we have to answer for hereafter! And what must be our condition in the judgment which is to come, if we now listen for no other object than our credit's sake in the world, if we frequent God's house, and read his word, only to please our friends and neighbours, only lest we lose their good esteem?

St. Paul is accused by the Jews before Festus.

1 Now when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Cæsarea to Jerusalem.

2 Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them || more than ten days, he went down unto Cæsarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove.

8 While he answered for himself, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?

The high priest and the chief of the Jews would have St. Paul sent for to Jerusalem, in order that they might kill him by the way. See how greatly the case is now altered! What city in our Israel, what nation of all those, the most enlightened in the world, who now hold the Christian truth, would not gladly seize on an opportunity, if any such could possibly be offered, to entertain the great apostle of the Gentiles! How would the roads be crowded, not with enemies lying in wait to take away his life, but with friends craving to do him honour! How would the most mighty in the land, no less than the most poor and needy, desire favour, not against him, but from him! How little then need we care for the present judgment of the world, when we consider how easily it is changed! How little should we be guided by what men now think of us, when we reflect how soon they will be apt to think far otherwise! How little should we be disturbed by what here we suffer, or what here we are in danger of suffering, when we see one of whom the world was not worthy, and whom it would now most highly honour, thus held in bonds by the rulers, and waylaid for his life by the chief of the people!

Festus seems to have been aware of the design against Paul's life. For he "answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea." And as he intended to depart thither before long, he bade the accusers follow him, that the cause might be determined. And yet presently we read that he was "willing to do the Jews a pleasure." So that after the apostle had declared his innocency, the governor notwithstanding asked him, "Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?" How worthless was his precious care for the safety of St. Paul, whom he was now willing to expose to risk of harm! And yet how common is this infirmity of purpose, to resolve aright to day and to do wrong to morrow, to wish to do a pleasure to those whose good opinion would be profitable to ourselves, even at the risk of doing injury to our neighbour, and doing wickedly in the sight of God! Never let us be prevailed upon either by the fear of man, or by the desire to please his evil passions, never let us be prevailed upon to do that which we know to be wrong for us to do, or which we even suspect might be hurtful to our brethren.

"The Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove." Here we have a lesson against the practice, so common in our daily conversation, of finding fault with each other, of making complaints against each other, which we cannot prove. Let us call to mind how many things we hear, how many things we are tempted to say, which amount to censure of each other. Let us examine how few out of these numerous charges we should be able, if called upon, to prove, in how few instances we know the real facts, in how few we know those who know them; how many of these complaints are mere guesses, surmises, suspicions; reports, handed on from one to another, altered, exaggerated, embittered, according to the temper of those through whose lips they pass. We should then find ourselves in more instances than we think of, very like unto these malicious Jews, and very like also unto that "accuser of our brethren," "which accuseth them before our God day and night." Rev. 12. 10. But he at least, it may be thought, can prove his accusation! He can point to the books which shall be opened, and there find set down against each Christian brother the sins we have committed against God. Far from it. God be praised, there is assurance in his word, not only of pardon, but of oblivion for sin. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow." Isa. 1. 18. "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Jer. 31. 34. "All that believe are justified from all things." Acts 13. 39. The judgment is indeed set. The accuser stands nigh. The books are opened. But his malice is defeated. The handwriting he would refer to is blotted out by the atoning blood of Christ. And through the righteous offering of that spotless sacrifice the repentant sinner is borne out in declaring, to the confusion of the enemy of his soul, neither against man, nor yet against God, "have I offended any thing at all."

Festus telleth king Agrippa concerning Paul.

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

11 For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Cæsar.

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

13 And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cæsarea to salute Festus.

14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15 About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

16 To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.

17 Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth.

18 Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed:

19 But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

20 And because * I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the \parallel hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

* Or, I was doubtful how to inquire hereof.

"I appeal unto Cæsar," were the words which delivered Paul from the fury of the Jews. Being a citizen of Rome he had a right to appeal to the judgment of the emperor. And this is no small confirmation of what is related in this history. These things were not done in a corner. Governors, and kings, and emperors, were concerned. The facts were entered into public records, and could there be verified. It could be known by enquiry, for hundreds of years afterwards, whether St. Paul had indeed stood before the judgment seat of Festus, had been examined in the presence of Agrippa, and had appealed to the emperor of Rome. Thankfully we thus reflect of our religion, that it asks for no concealment, but invites us to prove all things, whilst it commands us to hold fast that which is good. See 1 Thess. 5. 21.

This account, which Festus gives to king Agrippa, differs widely from the history of the facts. In the one case the chief priest and the elders are represented as "desiring to have judgment against" St. Paul. In the history we are told that they "desired favour against him." Ver. 3. They asked not for equitable judgment, but for a partial sentence. In the one case Festus represents himself as proposing to send St. Paul to Jerusalem, because he "doubted of such manner of questions." In the history we are told that it was because he was "willing to do the Jews a pleasure." Ver. 9. So mean and disingenuous are the most mighty of mankind, if they desire to please men rather than God! So apt are all men to distort the truth, when they speak of their own motives or behaviour; so ready to see themselves, and to represent themselves, in a light more favourable than they ought. Let us on the contrary own freely to our faults and frailties; and whilst we are ready to esteem others better than ourselves, see Philipp. 2. 3, let us at the same time be inclined to esteem ourselves worse, if it be possible, than we really are. For so only can we esteem ourselves aright, if against our natural inclination to justify ourselves we set our conscience most diligently on the watch for our offences; and if to balance the many sins which we are never able to discern, we repent of some which may be more than we are really guilty of.

And yet we may not listen in despondency or despair to those many and fearful charges, which oftentimes the evil spirit, the accuser of the brethren, raises up to the discomfiture of the soul. When he would torment us with thoughts of sin, when he would fain have us, as he desired to have the apostles, that he might sift us as wheat, when he is laying wait for us by the way to devour us, we may apply in our distress St. Paul's appeal to Cæsar, we may appeal for our deliverance to the King of kings. "Judge me," we may say with David, "O Lord my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not triumph over me." Ps. 35. 21. They suggest to me my sinfulness. Help Thou me to think of thy forgiveness. They press upon my mind the depth of my iniquity, the utter worthlessness of even that which I do best. View Thou, rather, and help me to keep in view, the merits of my Saviour Christ, the righteousness of his life, the atoning power of his death. I appeal, O God, to Thee. I appeal in hope. I appeal in confident persuasion that through thy mercy and the merits of my Saviour Christ, I shall be justified in thy presence and clear when I am judged.

Lord, when at thy judgment seat we shall hereafter stand, give us, we pray Thee, confidence to appeal to Thee. Enable us to say of the talents which Thou hast given us, that we have put them to the use Thou didst design! Enable us to plead of the death Thou didst die for us, that we have had faith in it according to thy will!

Agrippa and Bernice attend to hear St. Paul.

22 Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer.

25 But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

27 For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

King Agrippa's inclination to hear St. Paul's defence, led to his being almost persuaded to be a Christian. See ch. 26. 28. So at least he professed, and so probably he felt at the time; though it is not impossible that his words may have been designed for no more than civility to the apostle. It is a great point gained to be disposed to hear at all. Only we should not hear out of mere curiosity. Only we should not go to the place of hearing, like Agrippa or Bernice, with great pomp, as if it were rather to shew ourselves to men, than to learn of God. These are two of the most common hinderances to our profiting by the ministry of the word, as it is preached in the congregation of the church. Who has not observed that both the rich and poor are apt to think very much of their appearance, when they assemble on the sabbath day in God's house of prayer? Who has not felt in himself, at some period of his life, an anxiety to shew to advantage on such occasions, a vanity altogether inconsistent with the character of a Christian worshipper, and with the holiness of the place of worship? Many amongst the poor stay away from church merely for want of clothing such as they wish to wear. Many amongst the rich had almost better stay away, than come dressed so as to attract the notice of their neighbours, and to puff up their own hearts with conceit. It is well to wear in such a place the best of dress we have. But it is well to have none better than we might there wear without appearance of pomp, or risk of vanity. It is well to have decent clothes to wear at church; it is well to work diligently that we may have them. But it is better to go thither in the meanest of apparel than not to go at all. It is better to go "clothed in humility," 1 Pet. 5. 5, and to remember that it is "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." 1 Pet. 3. 4.

Neither can we expect to profit by hearing the word of God, if we go to hear it out of an idle curiosity, merely to please what the apostle calls "itching ears," 2 Tim. 4. 3, without any desire for edification in our hearts. This seems to have been Agrippa's chief motive for coming to hear St. Paul. "I would also hear the man myself." There is no reason here assigned beyond his own inclination. Nor did he take any pains afterwards, as far as we are told, to inquire into the apostle's ease, or to see justice done to him. If we resort to preaching for amusement only, in that amusement we have our reward. We must not look to be edified unless we pray, and strive to profit by what we hear. We must listen as to the words of life. We must feel that our own life eternal is at stake. We must consider ourselves as studying how best we may escape the wrath to come. We must attend to preaching as to an ordinance of God. We must look for profit because it is his ordinance. We must have respect not to the person of the minister, but to his appointment as the servant of the Lord. We must remember that whoever plants, whoever waters, it is God who giveth the increase.

Festus first determined to send his prisoner to Rome; and afterwards sought for something to write against him. This testimony to the innocency of the apostle may remind us of what Pilate was forced to own of our Lord, "I find in him no fault at all." John 18. 38. Happy was St. Paul in being thus like unto his Master, in thus suffering wrongfully for his Master's sake! And happy are we also if like St. Paul, and like our Lord, we can be clear when we are judged. But, alas! we are well aware that it can be no hard matter, to find much to be set down against us. We must feel often, that for our sins it would be no more than true that we "ought not to live any longer." How great is God's goodness that He still spares us to repent! How precious is the sacrifice of our blessed Lord, that by reason thereof it is agreed in our behalf that our sins on our repenting are remembered no more!

St. Paul answereth for himself before Agrippa.

1 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself:

2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:

3 Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently.

4 My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews;

5 Which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.

6 And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers:

7 Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

8 Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?

9 I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.

10 ¹ Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them.

11 And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.

St. Paul thought himself happy in having an opportunity of answering before king Agrippa, touching the things whereof he was accused of the Jews. It should be a pleasure to any one who is under accusation to answer his accusers, and to satisfy the beholders that he has given no offence. For it is a part of our Christian duty to "provide things honest in the sight of all men," Rom. 12. 17, and to make our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven. See Matth. 5. 16. And for this end we must be willing to take great pains, explaining patiently at length, as St. Paul does here, the whole matter laid to our charge, grudging no weariness we can have to undergo, or may risk imposing on our hearers, if we may thereby escape giving offence unto our brethren.

For this is the object we ought to have in view, in any such explanation of our conduct, not to justify ourselves, but to avoid scandalizing one another. And so St. Paul puts the matter to the Corinthians, "think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? we speak before God in Christ: but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying." 2 Cor. 12. 19. Otherwise we should but humour our own pride, and harden ourselves in sin, instead of saving our brother from offence. To harden ourselves in sin is the very height of sinfulness. Whilst to defend what we have done aright, may come of that most excellent of gifts, the charity which is not puffed up. For in such a case pride and selfishness suggest that we need not stoop to offer an explanation. Pride and selfishness in such a case would say, that it is not worth our while, being right, to take the pains of proving that we are so. Pride and selfishness would have made the apostle sorry, instead of glad, to be called upon to answer before Agrippa, content with the consciousness of being innocent, and indifferent as to what was thought of his conduct, either by Agrippa or by the Jews. But charity required him to take every opportunity of pleading the truth of Jesus Christ. Charity made him long to convert his hearers. Charity makes us anxious to consider, in every thing we have to say or do, how we may do most good to those with whom we live.

And with charity must go hand in hand humility. For thus we find it in this case of the apostle. He was not ashamed to own how far he had done wrong, whilst yet he knew no better. He was not ashamed to plead guilty to that which many are more ashamed of than of wickedness, namely ignorance, which is indeed when wilful amongst the worst of sins. In the midst of his defence, St. Paul acknowledged it as a sin, that he used to persecute the church of Christ. And this he mentions as a reason of probability to his hearers, that they might hereafter come to hold for truth what then they esteemed incredible. Thus he would turn his past errors to account in the propagating his present convictions. Like the water which was poured over the sacrifice of Elijah, he would have the former coldness and aversion of his heart, to the cause of Christian truth, add intensity to the proof which that truth derived from his present zeal and fervour of belief. And this further shews that it was not for his own character's sake, but for the edifying of his hearers, that he was glad to make this defence at all. Let us therefore be as willing to own what we have done amiss, as to repel an unfounded accusation. Let us do both for the same single object, the edifying of our brethren. This it is that solves all difficulties; the love of each other. This it is that fulfils every law; the love of each other. And thus, whether we defend or accuse ourselves, if we do it not to please ourselves, but only out of love for each other, we follow the example of St. Paul, and do the will of our Saviour Christ.

St. Paul relateth his conversion.

12 'Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests,

13 At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.

16 But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee;

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee,

18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision:

20 But shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judæa, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

21 For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

St. Paul, for the chief point in his defence, relates to king Agrippa the history of his own conversion. For this was a thing ever present to his memory. And so also the chief mercies we have received ought to be the subjects of our frequent mention, and of our continual thankfulness. And further this conversion of St. Paul was a thing most likely to assist in converting the hearts of his hearers. And what indeed can be better fitted to affect our own reluctant hearts with hope, and thankfulness, and joy, than the account which is here given of God's goodness, towards the most determined of his enemies. Have we ever been like Saul at enmity with the religion of our Lord? Have we ever been in a state that is little less than enmity in us who are baptized Christians, have we been ever strangers to the power of the Gospel in our hearts? And will it not now move us, to consider how He whom we thus persecute and crucify afresh, is still ready to receive us to Himself, still grieved to think that it is hard for us to kick against the pricks?

"Why persecutest thou me?" is what He kindly asks in each sting of an awakened conscience. "Why persecutest thou me?" is what He graciously inquires each time we are convinced of sin, each time we do wrong, and feel that it is wrong, each time we neglect to do right, and feel that we ought to do it. "Why persecutest thou me?" He mercifully repeats, as long as life and grace continue; when at each repeated sin we might more reasonably expect, for we much more deserve, that He should say: Depart from me thou heedless sinner; thou shalt resist my will no more. Yet the more we have resisted our Saviour's will, and we probably know in ourselves of many more such instances of sin than we can possibly be aware of in any other, the more we have opposed our Saviour's will, we see here a way in which we might, the more assist, so great is his mercy, if henceforth we serve Him truly, in which we might the more largely help, to shew forth and promote his glory.

To open the eyes of others, to turn them from darkness unto light, this should be the constant study of those who feel that they have themselves been once in darkness, and that by grace they have now been brought from the power of Satan unto the knowledge of God. And they have herein some fitness for the work, they know the condition from which they wish to save their brethren, they are sensibly alive to the misery of a state of sin, they can tell by what means they have been themselves recovered out of the snares of Satan. Let him therefore who regards himself as a sinner saved, be zealous for the salvation of his brethren. And if there be no one that can hope to be saved at all, who has not this view of his own condition, who is not sensible of many sins of his own against God, who has not felt himself repentant, reconciled, renewed let there be no one who does not also strive to make manifest the power of religion in his own heart, with a view to its having influence on all those who as yet neither repent nor believe.

"To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," these are the objects which we should aim at in our conversation with them, who love this present world. "To repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance," these are the things to which we should exhort each other. "That they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in" Jesus Christ, these are the precious privileges, the exceeding great reward, by which we may stir up others to repent, by which we ought to be ourselves most deeply moved. For to these things we are called. We are invited, urged, almost constrained, almost compelled, to come in and to possess them. Shall we not then according to our ability invite and constrain our neighbours? Shall we not without ceasing bear testimony unto them, both of all that we have hitherto experienced, and of all that we hope hereafter to enjoy?

St. Paul replieth to Festus, exhorteth Agrippa.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come:

23 That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

24 And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely: for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

27 King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest.

28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.

29 And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.

30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them:

31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death, or of bonds.

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Cæsar.

§ 436. That it is most reasonable to be pious.

St. Paul's account of the help which he had obtained from God, and of the testimony which he had borne to the truth of Christ, made Festus suppose him to be beside himself. "Much learning doth make thee mad." This was no more than had been said against our Lord Himself; and that even by his friends, his kinsmen, and acquaintances according to the flesh, "He is beside himself." Mark 3. 21. And so it must often seem to those who know nothing of the power of religion, it must seem as if the more zealous and affectionate of Christians were little better than out of their minds. To deny ourselves, when we might please ourselves; to give, when we might withhold, or even when we might receive; to bear with an affront, which we might easily resent; to requite evil with good, when we have opportunity for revenge; to spend, and to be spent, and to count all things but loss, for the sake of Christ, when we can neither see Him, nor hear his voice, nor handle the wages of his work; all this must seem like madness to the worldly minded. And it does indeed prove beyond dispute that we are out of that mind, in which we by nature are.

And yet these are the words of soberness and truth. It is really better thus to speak, and thus to do. It is better for us here. It is better for us hereafter. It is more wise, if we look to our own interest. It is more reasonable, if we have regard to God's honour. We do but as the worldly wise would counsel in their own generation, we spare to day that we may abound to morrow. We waste not, that we may want not. We spare our present pleasure, that we may have joy for evermore. We waste not our present opportunities, that we may not have to long in vain for time misspent, when time shall be no longer. And like them also, we have present pleasure in our present self-denial. We enjoy the prospect of our gains. We delight in counting up the riches of our heavenly inheritance. And we are more than content, we are thankful, in the loss of all we have on earth, that can help us by its loss towards gain eternal.

Thus much of our own interest. Nor is it otherwise of our devotion unto God. Here also we speak the words of soberness and truth. Here also we act as reasonable men are wont to act, with those to whom they are indebted for kind regard. God has loved us; therefore we love Him. He created us. He preserves us. He has redeemed us, forgiven us our sins, created us anew in Christ Jesus unto good works and unto a hope of heaven. Therefore we hope. Therefore we work the works of Him who has redeemed us. Therefore we have pleasure in obeying Him, in yielding up to Him our whole hearts and lives, in denying ourselves that we may do his will. And however great be the sacrifice we have to make, however different from the practice of the world may be the conduct we are called upon to pursue, however extreme the difficulty of the path we have to take; we count it no more than reason to endure all trouble, to make all sacrifices, and to risk all loss, and shame, and suffering, for the sake of Him, who in our behalf left the glory of his Father in heaven, and submitted to die in agony on the cross.

Would to God then that we might be altogether such as was St. Paul, even bonds and all, if it be needful! Would to God that we may be not almost but altogether persuaded to be Christians! We cannot serve God by halves. We cannot love Christ or do his will by halves. We cannot by halves enjoy the fulfilment of his promises, his grace on earth, his glory in heaven. To attempt to do so, this is madness. To think that we can thus serve two masters, this is to be beside ourselves. Let us not therefore ever be of two minds, but of one only. And let the mind we are in be that mind, which was also in Christ Jesus. Let it be the mind which the world counts madness; but which sense and reason and religion, unite to urge on us, as being nothing else than soberness and truth.

St. Paul setteth sail for Rome.

1 And when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.

2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under * Crete, over against Salmone;

8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called the fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with || hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

* Or, Candy.

St. Paul in the character of a prisoner, and on his voyage towards the judgment seat of Cæsar, may remind us of our own pilgrimage through life, how like it is to this launching and sailing of a ship, how we are born in bandage to sin, how many are the perils which surround us in our course, how fearful is the judgment which awaits us at the end. Rocks there are beneath, around us storms and tempest; the many stumbling blocks which the world continually presents, the many snares which Satan is ever laying for our souls, the many cares and sorrows or tumultuous joys, which tend to turn aside our hearts from heaven. Whilst in the current of our own rebellious thoughts, in the force of our own corrupted will, in the flesh lusting contrary to the spirit, we have as it were an adverse wind, which suffers us not, however fully we resolve, to make good speed unto the harbour where we fain would be.

Thankful we ought to feel, that in this our heavenward voyage, we have friends on earth who courteously entreat us, we have the many comforts of kindness and affection, we have liberty to refresh our weary spirits with the converse of those we love. Let us never forget how much we owe to God, for giving us this great help under all our trials, this resource in the pains of sickness, in the visitation of sorrow, or in the approach of death. And yet even on these best of earthly joys we may not too deeply fix our affections, nor devote to them too large a portion of our time. The fast is past, and sailing is now dangerous: this is what we ought to feel at all seasons of our life, that the time is short, that no one moment must be wasted, that we are daily compassed around with hurt and much damage, or at least much risk of damage, to the great object of our life. It is our eternal venture that is in jeopardy. Whether we shall live for ever with God in glory, or with the devil and his angels in the pit of destruction, this is what we risk each day we are on earth; this it is which should make us earnestly desirous each day to redeem the time.

Never then let us give heed to those, who would persuade us that all is safe. Never let us believe the words spoken by the world, more than those things which are declared to us by Christ and his apostles. It is with fear and trembling that we must work our own salvation. See Philipp. 2. 12. It is through much tribulation that we must enter into the kingdom of God. See Acts 14. 22. The righteous scarcely will be saved; where then will the ungodly and the sinner appear? See 1 Pet. 4. 18. To be aware beforehand of our risk, this is our greatest wisdom. To watch, and to be always on our guard, to waste no time, to spare no pains, and to follow ever the best counsel we can obtain, these are duties to be always borne in mind, if we would arrive in safety at our journey's end. How great is God's goodness, in giving us his word, for a guide in all our wanderings, for a compass that never fails in the darkest seasons of our voyage! There we may consult his prophets, there we may read what his apostles wrote, there we may hear what was spoken by his ever blessed Son. If heretofore we have spent much time, without due attention to this heavenly teaching, let us now at length resort to it with joy, and do devoutly as we are therein directed.

May God herein give us the counsel we require! May God impart to us the strength we need! May He protect us in our voyage, and bring us safe unto the harbour of his heavenly kingdom, there to dwell with Him for ever!

The ship is overtaken by a storm.

12 And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west.

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

14 But not long after there || arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.

15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

See how surely the word of prophecy is fulfilled, how exactly the things spoken by St. Paul came to pass! See how much better it is to believe the few who speak advisedly, than to give heed to the more part, who know not what they say! "The haven was not commodious to winter in." The place assigned to us by the providence of God, seems, oftentimes, in our erring judgment, not suitable to our wants and wishes. The business or profession, the state or condition of life, the dwelling place or country in which we might most securely weather the storms of passion or adversity, these we are often tempted foolishly to leave, because we trust more to our own wisdom than to God's direction. "The south wind blew softly." Our prospects are flattering. Our worldly counsellors assure us of success. We set sail on some ungodly course, and suppose that we have obtained our purpose. "But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind." And thus frequently, when all seems most fair, our hopes are crossed by disappointment, our affections chilled by unkind treatment, our worldly wisdom baffled by adversity, or our best intentions frustrated by our own corrupt propensities. Who then would not rather ask of God? Who would not rather take from Him, and from his word, direction for all the exigencies of life?

And seeing that we are thus beset by sin and sorrow, seeing that we are thus frequently beguiled by the cares, and riches, and pleasures of the world, might we not also take an useful lesson, from the measures used by these mariners towards lightening the ship? Is there no treasure which we should do well to throw away? Is there no fond affection, no eager hope, no project of pride or of ambition, to which we cling as to our most dear possession, and which we must first necessarily part with from our hearts, before we can have any ground to hope for safety? See what pains are taken by those who sail upon the seas, to secure, if it be possible, their lives! See how readily, when life is at stake, they cast out with their own hands, not the lading only, but the very tackling of the ship! The very means of sailing they throw overboard, to prevent the risk of sinking. Not only therefore our superfluities, but the very necessities of life, we must now rather part with, than perish in the world which is to come. If we are living by means of an unlawful trade, if we are thriving by any means which God has forbidden, if our consciences are convinced that the food we eat is the fruit of robbery or wrong, that the clothing we put on is wrung by oppression from the labours of the poor, or gained by fraud from the abundance of the rich; we had better cast it out than wear it; we had better cast it out than feed on it; we had better be naked and hungry in this present life, and learn to beg or dig for our subsistence, than fare sumptuously for the present, and perish miserably in the end.

And is it not most strange that men should so clearly see all this in the case of present perils, and so rarely feel the force of the same reasons, in the risk of eternal shipwreck? That they should count it madness to spare the lading of a ship, when they are exceedingly tossed with a tempest, and should yet pass for wise, if they heap up riches upon earth, if they spare to spend, refuse to give, and fear not to exact oppressively; when each single hour of their lives they are confessedly exposed to risk of death, liable to lose at once their goods, and also their own souls? Never may we thus madly hoard what only aggravates our danger. Never may we thus lay up store of wrath, against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Never may we hesitate to make any sacrifice on earth, which God's word and will demand of us. Never may we fail to use all helps for heaven, which our Lord in his mercy has placed within our reach. And then, whatever tempest may befall us, though neither sun nor stars in many days appear, though no prospect of present comfort open to our view, all hope that we shall be saved in the end will never be taken away from us.

St. Paul exhorteth the ship's company.

21 But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer; for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

23 For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve,

24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.

25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship,

31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

"Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me;" what a bitter thought must this have been to those, who were now in jeopardy of death; who must have felt that had they followed the advice of the apostle, they might have been safe in harbour for the winter! And what a bitter thing will it be hereafter, to such as now despise the ministry of the word, when all too late they shall find its truth fulfilled, in the sentence of their own condemnation. Then will they call to mind what now they make light of; then wish in vain that they had listened with attention to the truth which at present they neglect. All their gain will then prove harm and loss. All that they now most highly value will be then abomination in their sight. For then will be brought to pass what is written in the book of Proverbs, concerning the wisdom which is from on high: "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof: I also will laugh at your calamity, I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind." Prov. 1. 24—27.

But though this must be the case with all who remain impenitent unto the end of life, it is God's gracious assurance in the Gospel, to repentant sinners, that notwithstanding their past disobedience and perversity, they need not fear, there shall be no loss of the immortal soul, if they truly believe in Christ. Wherefore let us be of good cheer. Let us believe God, that it will be, even as He has told us. Let us found our cheerfulness upon his promise. Let us trust in no power of our own, but in his only. Let us feel that we are saved not for our own sakes, but for the sake of Him who took on Him our flesh, and became as one of the same company in the ship. "Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island." Shipwreck must take place. The ship must be lost, though not the lives of the crew. Death must be encountered even by those, whose eternal life is safe in God's keeping, according to his word. Here we must still suffer sorrows and adversities. Here we must still undergo disease and death. The ship is wrecked, but yet the lives are saved. "God hath given thee all them that sail with thee." All they that are in Christ, all they that live by faith in Him, all they that love as He has loved them, these though they die shall live, these shall not die eternally.

And now having these promises so gracious and so sure, may we safely remit our own exertions? Far from it. Hear the warning of St. Paul: "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." Had the shipmen made good their intended desertion of the vessel, had they, who were most skilled in the management of the ship, not stayed for the assistance of the rest, notwithstanding the assurance of St. Paul, notwithstanding God's word spoken by his angel, all must have perished. God's promises leave us bound by his commands. God's mercy makes us only so much the more obliged to do what He has revealed of his will. We must work, as if all depended upon our working; though we know, and believe, and feel, and own, that when we have done all, we are unprofitable servants, and are saved only through the merits of our Lord.

Least of all must we think ourselves at liberty to neglect those most urgent of all duties, which we owe to each other as brethren of Christ, those which arise from Christian love. Love is the fulfilment of the Law. Love is the fruit and proof of faith. And love to man, out of love for God, is most utterly incompatible with every form of selfishness. We must not get any thing for ourselves, to the detriment of our neighbour. We must not seek even our eternal safety, by any means which might hinder his. We must not flee out of the ship in its extremity, till we have waited and laboured for the saving of all them that are in it. Let us therefore, whilst we flee from sin, still seek to convert the sinner. Whilst we renounce the world, and abhor the evil that is in it, let us cling to the hope of saving it from perishing; and rather slightly share its risk than not largely help in its deliverance.

St. Paul and the rest come safe to land.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

thrust in the ship.

40 And when they had || taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape.

43 But the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land:

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.

We have read before of the long abstinence of this ship's company. See ver. 21. And here we learn that for fourteen days they had continued fasting, having had neither time nor appetite for their ordinary meals. And thus the Psalmist describes the extremity of trouble: "My heart is smitten down, and withered like grass: so that I forget to eat my bread." Psalm 102. 4. But the apostle would have us take all needful nourishment, even in the time of extreme distress. "He took bread, and gave thanks to God in the presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat." This is a pattern for us to imitate in our trials; let us never forget the thanks due to God, the duty and advantages of giving praise unto his name. Though our meal should be interrupted, let our prayers at least not fail. Though we have to eat the bread of affliction, let us eat it with thankfulness unto God. And this will be one chief advantage of a settled habit and order in our devotions. It will constrain us, as the appointed time comes round, to think of Him who visits us for our good. Whether it be sorrow or joy which breaks into the usual course of our employments, let us but be accustomed to a fixed time of prayer, and it will be the less likely to interrupt our prayers. We shall feel that we have an engagement which we are bound to keep, if we feel engaged to ask of God for his gracious help, and to thank Him for his abundant goodness. And when we kneel down or stand up, to do honour to his name, we shall be reminded of a world, which is ever nigh at hand; with which neither this world's sorrows, nor its joys, are fit to be one moment compared.

"And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea." This was no more than necessary for their safety; though it proved also great confidence in the assurance of St. Paul, that there should not an hair fall from the head of any one of them. And how well may this remind us of the duty, recommended in the book of Ecclesiastes: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." Eccles. 11. 1. When we have eaten enough, let us be free to bestow on others; let us be free to give, both for their relief in this world, and for their help in preparation for the world which is to come. More than enough it is useless to try to keep for our own selves. Death comes, and we cannot consume it. Or death cuts off those from whom we would amass it, before we die and leave it for their use. To cast it out first would both lighten our own load, and be of benefit to them that dwell around us. So much the less we should have ourselves to answer for. So much the more good we should have done unto our brethren.

"And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape." What ignorance of the value of man's life, what fearful indifference to the guilt of bloodshedding is manifested in the counsel of these soldiers! What selfishness is this, that to save their own credit in the custody of the prisoners, they would put to death their fellow creatures uncondemned, one of whom at least might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Cæsar! See chap. 26. 32. Let us in our own difficulties have an eye always to the interests of those committed to our charge. Let us not, to save our own credit, or property, or life, do any thing which might injure theirs. And let us remember that to our charge are committed all whom we can help, even the least of our brethren, even the most abject and abandoned of mankind.

God make us thankful for all the blessings we enjoy! God make us anxious to impart them as far as possible to all those who are in need of our assistance! God teach us to feel responsible for all we have; and when we have eaten enough ourselves, or sooner, to cast out even all that we can spare, and more, to those whose wants are more urgent than our own!

St. Paul at Melita.

1 And when they were escaped, then they knew that the island was called Melita.

2 And the barbarous people shewed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

5 And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god.

7 In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

10 Who also honoured us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.

"The barbarous people shewed us no little kindness." This is the way in which the inhabitants of Melita treated St. Paul and his companions, when shipwrecked. And this is a thing which we should be glad to hear of, that the most uncivilized of mankind are capable of much kindly feeling; that they who know the least of what we call the arts of life, and who have the least acquaintance with religious truth, can yet shew on such an occasion as a shipwreck, humanity to the needy and forlorn. How much more then ought we Christians, who enjoy so many blessings, who partake of so many comforts here, and have such ample hope for the world which is to come, how much more ought we to feel for the wants of others all around us, who suffer by cold or rain, by nakedness or hunger, by ignorance or sin! Some of these evils we have never felt. Others we might avoid easily if we would. Let us receive kindly all those who in such matters have fared worse than ourselves. Let us kindle in our hearts that fire of love, which will warm at once both them and us.

And least of all let us ever venture to reflect on them, as if the sufferings of the most abject of mankind were any sure sign of their being more wicked than ourselves. This is a thought more fit for a barbarian than a Christian: "No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live." The vengeance which we as Christians must expect to follow sin, is not in this world, but in that which is to come. Whether the wicked are exempt from trouble, or whether the evil and the good both suffer here alike, in either case we should turn our thoughts to that appointed day, when God will judge the world in righteousness. See Acts 17. 31. We see enough, in his dealings with us here, to assure us that He is merciful, and longsuffering. We see enough also to convince us, that He will make those suffer who obstinately resist, and that He will make their sufferings end, as even here they often do, to his own glory, and to the advantage of his people.

In what follows there is remarkably fulfilled the promise of our Lord to them that believe: "They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Mark 16. 18. St. Paul shook off the viper into the fire, "and felt no harm." And as the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux, "he laid his hands on him, and healed him." When he shook off into the fire the venomous beast, and fell not down, as they expected, dead suddenly, the barbarians, who just before had taken him for a murderer, "changed their minds, and said that he was a god." For this was all their notion of a god, some one like unto themselves, but more powerful, more wise, more good. Whilst however we think of God as being good, and wise, and powerful, let us remember that his goodness, wisdom, and power, are far above all comparison with ours, far out of all reach of our conception. And this is in some measure signified to us, by the ability to work signs and miracles, which He has occasionally committed to the hands of men. In the instant healing of a lingering disease, and in the casting off without harm a venomous beast, we see instances of power altogether unlike to any thing which we can conceive to be possessed by mortal men. And however great might be the mistake of the barbarians, in hence concluding that St. Paul was a god, their convictions, and the honours which they paid to him, will rise up in the judgment against those, who will not be hence convinced that God did really interfere. Let us therefore in these miracles own the hand of Him, who maketh sick and maketh whole, who created all things for his glory, and who can subdue, unto the obedience of his will, the most fierce or the most venomous of his creatures.

God help us to overcome in our own hearts the venom of sin! God prosper our endeavours to save ourselves, and them that dwell around us, from that old serpent the devil! See Rev. 12. 9.

St. Paul arriveth at Rome.

11 And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.

12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli:

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and The three taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.

17 And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

19 But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Cæsar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.

20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain.

21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judæa concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came shewed or spake any harm of thee.

22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.

The particulars of this journey are minutely set down; by which means every fact might be more easily verified, by those who first read this history. This, no doubt, is the chief reason for the mention of the ship's sign, the country it came from, the ports it touched at, as well as the very direction in which the wind was blowing the day before they came to Puteoli. And here let us consider how acceptable in this journey, to Paul the prisoner, must have been the kindness of the brethren, both at Puteoli and at Rome! How welcome to his heart must have been the thought, that they were indeed Christian brethren, believers in the same Saviour Jesus Christ! How constantly should we endeavour to communicate this comfort to our fellow-prisoners in the bondage of the flesh, the assurance that we are partakers of their faith, that we love the same Lord, and hope for the same heaven! How earnestly should we desire this encouragement above all others for ourselves, in the converse which we hold with our fellow creatures, to find that they have the evidence of things not seen, the firm persuasion of things hoped for! In our pilgrimage we are not alone. And it is delightful to think that we have so large a company. It is delightful, it ought to be most gladdening to ourselves, to see, in those we live with, the love, and peace, and joy, which are the fruit of God's Spirit in the heart. And in our behaviour, we ought to convey to such as these, and to all of whom we can have the slightest hope that they fail would serve God through Christ, we ought to convey the same impression as if we were to say, Take courage, Christian brother, in thy heavenward course; fear not to speak the truth; fear not to uphold the honour of our Lord; there are many with thee who have renounced the world, many who resist the devil and the flesh, many who are resolved to count all things loss, so they may but in the end be saved.

The first business of St. Paul, on his arrival at Rome, was to explain his situation to the chief of the Jews. This shews us, that though he had turned to the Gentiles, he had by no means renounced the hope of making converts amongst his kinsmen, the children of Israel. And no doubt he was well aware, that often through their means it was the intent of God to introduce the Gospel unto the Gentiles. And therefore in this city, the metropolis as it then was of the world, he explains first to the Jews, that it was "for the hope of Israel" that he had been bound with chains. In their reply they express their ignorance of his case. And indeed they seemed to know nothing of the Gospel or of Christians, except that they were everywhere "spoken against." See then how little signifies an ill name amongst mankind! See how the hope of Israel was known unto the Jews at Rome only as the object of universal scorn! See how probably that which now mankind most lightly value may be that which deserves our most devout regard! The hope of heaven, the graces of a heavenly life, a meek and quiet spirit, contentment with a low estate, a frame of mind like this, founded on a deep conviction of our sinfulness, on the persuasion that all our sufficiency is of God, that when we have done all we are unprofitable servants, and that only for Christ's sake we can any of us be saved; a frame of mind like this, adorned with a corresponding conversation and life, this is still spoken against by the greater part of mankind; but this is that which God esteems; this is the way to dwell with Him for ever.

St. Paul preacheth Jesus to the Jews at Rome.

23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers,

26 Saying, 'Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive:

27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

The chief of the Jews at Rome took some pains to make themselves acquainted with what it was that St. Paul preached. They "appointed him a day." And "there came many to him into his lodging." And he explained to them at great length the doctrines and duties and evidences of the Gospel, "from morning till evening." This is a degree of attention which few of either Jews or Christians are willing now to give, a degree of pains which few are willing now to take. Few now set apart a whole day to inquire of the apostles in their writings, or of the ministers who are appointed to preach and teach the things that pertain unto the kingdom of God. Let us grudge no time that we can thus profitably employ. Let us prefer this employment of our time to any other which this world offers. Let us set apart whole hours, whole days, if it be possible, for learning God's will, with a view to doing it. Let us watchfully employ the days and hours, which are purposely set apart for this holy use.

And here we learn what are the chief things to be studied; "the kingdom of God," and all that concerns Jesus Christ, "both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets." It is our duty therefore to know, if possible, the whole of Scripture, the Old Testament and New. We must not neglect the law of Moses and the prophets, whilst we give our chief attention to what is more fully revealed of God's kingdom in the Gospels, and Epistles, and Acts of the Apostles. From all of them taken together, studied together, and explained by one another, we must endeavour to understand aright God's dealings with mankind through Christ, how they prove Him all great, all good, how they bind us to be in all things devoted to his service. May the study of these Acts of the Apostles, which we have now nearly read to the end, help to work in us this love and reverence for God, this devotion of our lives to Him! May it help to convince us that his word is sure, that his designs cannot fail to be accomplished, that his church cannot be overthrown on earth, that his saints, whatsoever they may suffer here, are heirs of endless glory!

St. Paul continued his exhortation, "from morning till evening. And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not." Little therefore need we wonder that when uninspired ministers now proclaim the truth, there should be many who turn away without attention or belief. If some of those who heard St. Paul for a whole day long, after all believed not, little need we be surprised that many now do not believe. Rather we might be astonished, considering how offensive the truth is to our pride, how painful to our passions the duties of the Gospel, and considering how full of frailty those who teach us must needs be, how liable to error in their judgment, and to transgression in their lives, rather we might well be astonished that so many believe, as we trust do, through God's most gracious help. Great is his power that He subdues our will. Great is his wisdom that He informs our minds. Great is his mercy that He bears with our delays, our neglect, and disobedience; that after our oft repeated sins He still invites us to believe and to be saved.

Before the Jews departed, St. Paul reminded them of the prophet's most fearful warning against all who were disposed to unbelief. See Isaiah 6. 9, 10. There is no passage of the Old Testament more frequently referred to in the New, than those words of Isaiah, which describe the common condition of unbelievers. They hear the same as others hear; and yet they hear not to the same purpose. They see the same as others see; and yet they see not to the same good end. And this comes of the grossness of their hearts. It is because a man will not see, therefore he cannot. Therefore his understanding is obscured, because his inclination is corrupt. May God, who has given us a capacity so excellent, remove the dimness which we have brought on it ourselves! May He quicken the affections and enlighten the faculties, with which He at the first so bountifully endued us, and which, after all our sins, He still suffers us to retain! May He move our hearts and mind, that we may both know and love his will!

St. Paul for two whole years teacheth at Rome.

30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him,

31 Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

§ 444. The things which concern Jesus Christ.

The history here ends, the history of the Acts of the Apostles, the history of some chief things done, by some of the chief of those holy men, things which it was most important for us to know, most important for our instruction and edification. And amongst the many miracles of grace which are here related, this is not the least important, that St. Paul should for two whole years preach at Rome the Gospel of Jesus Christ. For Rome was at that time the capital of the whole civilized world. It was the city which gave laws to all the rest, and from which there went forth, in every direction, information on all subjects of importance. And therefore it seems purposely to have been ordered, that by the malice of the Jews the great apostle of the Gentiles should be carried thither as a prisoner, and that there he should be permitted, notwithstanding the spirit of persecution which afterwards burst forth from Rome, "to teach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him."

And here we may do well to observe the chief reason of so much having been foretold in the Old Testament relating to earthly monarchies, and especially to this empire of Rome. In the book of Daniel, in particular, we find express reference to the succession of events which should take place in the kingdoms of the earth, from the time when it was written until the coming of Christ. The empires of Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome, are there plainly described, under the likeness of a great image made of several parts; see Daniel, chap. 2; and also under the figure of four great beasts, diverse one from another. See Daniel, chap. 7. And all this is set forth, in order for us to know, that things on earth are ordered by Almighty God according to his will and pleasure; and also that we may see how in all it was his design, to bring into the world the Gospel of his Son, in such times and seasons and circumstances as might be best for its general reception. Let us not wonder then that it seemed good to God, to suffer the world for so many years to be in ignorance. Let us not be perplexed by the painful thought, that during the many hundred years since the Gospel was first preached, God should still have suffered many to be unacquainted with these most excellent of tidings. Let us remember that it is his view, and not ours, which is the true measure both of times and things. From Adam to the birth of Christ, and from thence to our own existence, is not so long for God to wait, as some few single days might seem to us. Empires in the meanwhile flourish and decay. Churches are planted, and bear fruit; grow corrupt, wither, and are rooted out. Patriarchs live hundreds of years. Their children enfeebled by disease soon reckon the days of their ordinary pilgrimage to be but threescore years and ten. But what are these in respect of that eternity where God continually dwells? There to be good, is to be great. There to be at all, is to be for ever. There the main end of this world's continuance is seen to be the redemption of mankind through Christ. And if we could but be there assured of salvation, how all too long each moment would appear, that stays us from entering into heaven; how almost too short eternity itself for the praise of God our Saviour!

This long abode of St. Paul at Rome was not only well fitted to give currency to the Gospel throughout the Roman empire; but we know that in point of fact it produced a great effect in Rome itself. For in his Epistle from this city to the Philippians, he thus writes: "I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel; so that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace, and in all other places." Phil. 1. 12, 13. And again to the same Philippians, "All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Caesar's household." Phil. 4. 22. So that there were not only many Christian converts at Rome, but some among them were in stations of considerable eminence. And his Epistle, written to the Romans before he had seen them, shews that he considered the church of Rome to be one of great importance to the rest, one to which it was expedient to address the most full statement of Christian doctrine, and the most affecting exhortation to Christian practice. At Rome there is still a church remaining; but how greatly fallen away from the apostolic doctrine, how greatly corrupted from the simplicity which is in Christ! At Corinth too, and at Ephesus, at Philippi and Colosse, in Galatia and Thessalonica, at all the places to which St. Paul addressed his letters, and of which we read in this history of his labours, at all these, or at nearly all of them, there are still found professing Christians. But how has their light been dimmed, how has their candlestick been removed! See Rev. 2. 5. God grant that we, who now enjoy the fulness of the light of Christian knowledge, may walk more worthy of our calling, more according to what the apostles did, more according to that which they have written for our good !

Our great rule and guide towards this end is, that we never cease to learn and teach "those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." This is the short description of the Gospel with which the Acts of the Apostles are concluded. "Those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." They are in truth things which concern ourselves. But our Lord is pleased to have them spoken of as things which also concern Him. It is about ourselves that the Gospel speaks, in all that it tells us about Him. It was for us and for our salvation that the things here recorded were done and spoken, written and endured by Him and by his apostles. His death, his resurrection, his ascension into heaven, his sending to us the Comforter, his being rejected by the Jews, preached to the Gentiles, these things are most intimately connected with the forgiveness of our sins, and with our inheritance of everlasting life. And yet are they all "things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." They relate to Him. They pertain to his honour, majesty, and dominion. We can neither sin, and He not grieve; nor repent and amend, and He not glory. We can neither grow in grace, and He not be thankful in our behalf; nor be saved in the end, and He not be honoured in the salvation of our souls. In all we now enjoy of good, it is He who gives the increase. In all we hope to have for ever, it is He that will make it good.

Oh that we in like manner might be glad to feel that all which relates to Him relates to us, that all which concerns Him concerns also ourselves ! Oh that we may ever bear in mind that there is nothing of such deep interest to our salvation as the redemption which is through Him; that there is no one so entirely every thing to us as our Saviour Jesus Christ !

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE ROMANS 1. 1—7.

St. Paul declareth to the Romans his call to be an apostle.

1 Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, ¹ separated unto the gospel of God,

2 (Which he had promised afore by his prophets in the holy scriptures,)

3 Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh;

4 And † declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead:

5 By whom we have received grace and apostleship, || for obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name:

6 Among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ:

7 To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints: Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the absence of a friend whom we love, what can be more welcome than to receive an epistle from his hand? What can more shew his lively regard, his unabated concern for our welfare, than for him often to write such letters as give us comfort and instruction, in the way that leads to everlasting life? Such a friend did St. Paul shew himself to the Romans. Such friends have all the apostles proved themselves to be, all who have written the Epistles which we are now to read; such friends, not to those only who first received these letters, but to all Christians every where, unto the end of time. For not only do the matters here treated of very deeply concern us all; but also it was the design of the apostles, or rather of Him under whose guidance the apostles wrote, that these writings should become profitable to all churches, always. And thus it is written in the first Epistle to the Thessalonians, the very first in point of time of all which St. Paul wrote; “I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.” 1 Thess. 5. 27. And to the Colossians the same apostle afterwards writes thus: “And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans.” Col. 4. 16. Let us then read as we would the words of one who loves us dearly. And let us read under the conviction, that what the apostles wrote was written by the guidance of the Holy Ghost. Let us read with a view to learn God’s will. Let us read with a view to doing what we learn.

But in applying to ourselves what is here written, we must bear in mind the nature of an epistle, and the circumstances of those to whom these writings were first addressed. Now a letter consists frequently of replies to questions; and usually it supposes many things to be already known, between the parties who correspond. And in order to understand the allusions of a letter, we ought to be acquainted with what has passed previously to the writing of it. This it is which makes the Epistles difficult. We know not readily to what it is that the writer is alluding. But by comparison of the several parts of each Epistle, of one Epistle with another, and of all of them with the Acts of the Apostles, enough of these particulars is known to throw considerable light on the meaning of the most difficult passages. And especially we must be aware that in all cases they were written whilst the Gospel had been but lately introduced into the world, whilst the profession of the faith exposed believers to persecution, and whilst a great part of Christians were persons who had been not baptized in infancy as now, but converted in maturity of years.

These circumstances, and others like to these, account for many expressions in the Epistles, which in our own times, and in our altered situation, can no longer be literally applied. And another separate consideration, of great importance for the right understanding of these letters, is this, that so large a portion of the first converts were Jews. For the chief part of them were prejudiced in favour of their Law, supposing that every letter of it would remain in force under the Gospel, and maintaining that every convert to the Gospel, whether Jew or Gentile, was obliged to observe every particular of the Law. These opinions were the earliest source of variance and strife in the infant churches. And especially at Rome, if we may judge from the pains here taken by St. Paul to refute them, they must have threatened very serious injury to the truth. But though this dispute, and the other points above referred to, were confined to certain times and places, the principles on which they are decided, by the inspired writers of the Epistles, are of universal application in the church of Christ. These principles therefore let us watch for. These let us carefully ascertain. These let us fix firmly in our memories. These let us apply to our own personal character, to the formation of our opinions, and to the correction of our hearts, to the strengthening of our faith, to the quickening of our love, and to amending the conduct of our lives.

St. Paul begins his Epistle to the Romans with declaring that he had been himself "called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God." He tells them of this Gospel, that it had been promised afore by the prophets of God, and that it was "concerning his Son Jesus Christ." He adds, that by this same Jesus he had received "grace and apostleship." And he sets forth that the end of his commission was no less than "obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name," for the name, for the honour, of Jesus Christ. We see then that this apostle, though he speaks elsewhere of himself as "one born out of due time," 1 Cor. 15. 8, was no less certainly commissioned than the rest, by the Lord Jesus to teach his will. We see that the Epistles no less truly teach "the gospel of God," than that part of the New Testament which we call the four Gospels. We may expect to find herein the prophecies fulfilled, and their fulfilment pointed out and proved. We may expect to see a reference to the genealogy of our Lord, to his being "made of the seed of David according to the flesh," that amazing instance of condescension, with which the first of the four Gospels opens. We may expect to see it at the same time declared with power that He was the Son of God, proved so to be by his own holy Spirit or divine nature, by the perfect excellence of the life He led, and by his resurrection from the dead.

And since "obedience to the faith, among all nations" was within the scope of St. Paul's apostleship, we may take unto ourselves, and apply unto ourselves the name, and salutation, which he gives to all the members of the church that was then at Rome. Called we have been of Jesus Christ, "called to be saints." Invited we have been, and are, to believe and to obey, to be saved from the wrath to come, and to partake of the inheritance of the saints in light. And unto us is proclaimed "grace," "and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." Grace and peace; not the one without the other; not help to holiness without also help to happiness, not happiness without first holiness in the heart, implanted and nourished by the Spirit of the Lord; not the one without the other, but both together does St. Paul desire for the Romans, both together would he pray for us, and help us to attain. May the words of this his letter to the Romans minister at once to our growth in grace, and to our establishment in peace! May the doctrines herein revealed, and the commandments here enforced, at once add speed to our proficiency, and give rest unto our souls!

St. Paul desireth to preach the Gospel at Rome.

8 First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.

9 For God is my witness, whom I serve || with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers;

10 Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you.

11 For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

12 That is, that I may be comforted together * with you by the mutual faith both of you and me.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have some fruit † among you also, even as among other Gentiles.

14 I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise.

15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also.

16 For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

17 For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written,—"The just shall live by faith."

18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness;

19 Because that which may be known of God is manifest ‡ in them; for God hath shewed it unto them.*

|| Or, in my spirit.

* Or, in you.

† Or, in you.

‡ Hab. 2. 4.

§ Or, to them.

Most joyful it must be and pleasant for a Christian minister to give thanks unto God for the faith and holiness of those, whom he prays for without ceasing. And the people also should be thankful for the help they have of ministers, and should pray for them, as St. Paul bade those whom he addressed pray for him, and for his fellow workers in the ministry. See 1 Thess. 5. 25. For the benefit, as it is here expressed, is mutual; "that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith of both you and me." Carefully we must avoid that dependency on the ministry of man, which would lead us to forget the ordinance of Christ, and which amounts to what St. Jude in another case describes, the "having men's persons in admiration because of advantage." Jude 16. But with this caution, and with a deep conviction that we owe to the appointment and authority of our Lord all the help we have from the ministry of men, we cannot too highly esteem them that minister, for the sake of the holy work they have to do. See 1 Thess. 5. 13. Nor can they, for their part, be too deeply impressed with the obligation they lie under, to preach the Gospel, unto every creature; see Mark 16. 15; to be instant in season, and out of season, that they may have much fruit among their people.

This was the heart's desire of St. Paul towards the Romans. He resolved to know nothing amongst those whom he visited, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. See 1 Cor. 2. 2. And full as Rome was of idolatry, and of false philosophy, full of the pomps and vanities of the world, he was not even there "ashamed of the gospel of Christ." He desired to go and preach it in the capital of the world. He longed to see the converts who were already there. He felt himself in debt till he had made known this truth "both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise." And this was the ground of his anxiety: the Gospel "is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." These words deserve our particular attention. For as they set forth the chief motive of the apostle, in wishing to preach the Gospel at Rome, they express also his chief intent in writing to the Romans, the chief subject of this whole Epistle.

Here then we shall find these two fundamental positions particularly set forth; first that the Gospel is "the power of God unto salvation," that it is mighty through God's grace to save us from sin, and from eternal death; and secondly, that it is able to save all, that it is God's design to extend this salvation, through the merits of his Son, unto all, of whatever family or nation they may be, unto "every one that believeth."

What an enlivening thought was this for St. Paul, that he was a chosen vessel in the hands of the Almighty, to make known such gracious tidings; and that by declaring them to the capital of the world, he might help many in all nations to believe! On the one hand he beheld the world lost in sin. On the other he saw mankind redeemed through Christ. On the one hand there was revealed the wrath of God, "against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," against all who did wrong, whether Jews or Gentiles, having had it in their power to know better. On the other hand was revealed, no less clearly, "the righteousness of God," his settled purpose to pardon sinners for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. But this righteousness was revealed "from faith to faith." They only who believe in it, are sure to profit by it; they only who believe so as to grow in grace, so as to go on from first believing in this righteousness of God, unto believing all, and loving all, and doing all, that He has been pleased to tell us in his word. Oh how eager ought this to make us, to hear the truth ourselves, how anxious to have it preached unto all mankind! God grant that we who know the truth may never hinder it by unrighteousness! God grant that both to us, and to all who know the Gospel, it may prove, by means of faith, the power of God unto salvation!

How the Gentiles were without excuse.

20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head; || so that they are without excuse :

21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

22 Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools,

23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible ¹ God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things.

24 Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves :

25 Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen.

26 For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections : for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature :

27 And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet.

28 And even as they did not like * to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to † a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient;

29 Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers,

30 Backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents,

31 Without understanding, covenantbreakers, ‡ without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful :

32 Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but ¶ have pleasure in them that do them.

St. Paul stated as one ground of his anxiety to preach the Gospel, the revelation of God's wrath from heaven against sin. See ver. 18. He here shews how large a portion of mankind were liable to this wrath, how grievously they had sinned against light and knowledge, how much they might have known and did not, how unthankful they were with such knowledge as they had. For what could be more gross unthankfulness, than to give the glory which was due to the Creator, sometimes to the most abject of his creatures, and sometimes to idols, the work of their own hands? What could argue more utter falsehood in their hearts, than when they knew who it was that made all these things, to bow down before "birds and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things," or to "an image made like to corruptible man?" And what could be more fitting punishment, for those who thus changed the glory of God, alienated from Him the honour due unto his name, than that they should be given up to dishonour their own bodies between themselves? The vile affections to which God gave up so large a portion of mankind "for this cause," should make us sensible of the great sinfulness of idolatry. And the fact that it was "through the lusts of their own hearts" that they were thus given up, should lead us to reflect with shame and sorrow, on the grievous wickedness of which we all are capable, to which we all are prone, and from which nothing can render us secure, but the knowledge and the love of God.

"Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient." Here we are plainly told what was the root of the whole evil. It was the corrupted inclination of mankind. It was their loving darkness rather than light. They preferred to have for gods, such beings as might be supposed to look favourably upon sin; this they preferred to owning themselves the servants of One who is of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look upon iniquity. See Hab. 1. 13. And this we know is still the root of unbelief. This is at the bottom of all the various corruptions of the truth, which have prevailed to a great extent amongst professing Christians. Men do not like to retain in their knowledge that true doctrine, which allows not the very least of sin; that genuine Gospel of God, which represents Him to be so holy, and just, and good, as to have required no less than the death of his ever blessed Son, to atone for the iniquity of mankind.

In what a hateful light do even the least of our transgressions appear, when they are seen to have added agony to the sufferings of our Lord! What monsters of unthankfulness ought we to seem in our own eyes, if we are still guilty of any of these more gross offences, when we know that they have cost even the death of Christ! How apt shall we also be to disbelieve the judgment of God, if we are aware that besides doing such things ourselves, we "have pleasure in them that do them!" But in vain should we disbelieve. The judgment will come. The wrath of God is revealed and will take effect. Let us therefore fly for refuge to that righteousness of God which is by faith. From the terrors of his justice against ourselves, let us appeal to his justice satisfied in the blood of Christ. Let us believe that it is satisfied. Let us believe so as to love. Let us believe so as to obey. Let us believe so as to love to obey, so as to like to retain God in our knowledge, so as to delight in loving God in our hearts.

The Jew also inexcusable.

1 Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things.

2 But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things.

3 And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?

4 Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

5 But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;

6 ² Who will render to every man according to his deeds:

7 To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life:

8 But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation, and wrath,

9 Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the * Gentile;

10 But glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the † Gentile:

11 For there is no respect of persons with God.

12 For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law;

13 (For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.

14 For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves:

15 Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, || their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts ¶ the mean while accusing or else excusing one another;)

§ 448. That there is no respect of persons with God.

The Gentiles having been already brought in guilty of sin, St. Paul turns in this chapter to the Jews; who were accustomed to count other men at enmity with God, and themselves comparatively safe, even when they committed the very same offences. These were the notions which most hardened their hearts against receiving the Gospel of Jesus Christ. For as they did not apprehend that the wrath of God was revealed from heaven against unrighteousness of theirs, see ch. 1. 18, they could not see the necessity of the Gospel, nor feel that it was unto themselves "the power of God unto salvation." Ch. 1. 16. And therefore they were here reminded, that for this very reason they were inexcusable, because they enjoyed the light of revelation, whereby they were able to judge others. For the judgment of God is according to truth against all evil doers, without respect of persons. And the riches of God's goodness, and forbearance, and long suffering, are manifested on purpose to lead men to repentance. And if they who know not the Law were to do the things enjoined therein, these would come to "glory, honour, and peace." Whilst they who know it, and do it not, will receive "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish."

What a striking account is here given us of the day of judgment! It is "the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." It is the day when the justice of God's sentence against sin will be made manifest to the world. Already has that sentence gone forth. Already does God see the wickedness of the wicked; and determine of the soul which sinneth that it shall die. The opening of the books will be required, not by way of informing Him who now knows all, but for the justifying of his judgments to his assembled creatures. Again, St. Paul describes the end of all things earthly, as "the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel." Not only they who are seen to do evil, but they who in their secret hearts act contrary to the will of God; they who cherish in the soul thoughts of sin, which nothing hinders them from committing but the fear of man, these also must then be put to shame. "By Jesus Christ;" He is to be the Judge. He who died for us on the cross will then call us to account, how we have requited his inestimable love. "According to my gospel;" according to the Gospel which St. Paul was commissioned to preach; with no allowances for frailty, yet with free pardon on repentance; with free justification for faith, but with no excuse in sin.

"For there is no respect of persons with God." The Jew might not boast against the Gentile, neither may the Christian boast against the unbeliever, neither may one Christian boast against another, as being chosen out of any personal favour unto life eternal. The Gentiles which have not the Law are a law unto themselves. Their private estimate of right and wrong, and their public laws for the repression of crime, these shew some discernment of the will of God, whereby they must be judged in the end. How much more then have we to answer for? How much more sore punishment must we, when we sin, deserve! We know that the goodness of God ought to lead us to repentance. We know that the very wrath which He has revealed against unrighteousness is designed to make us righteous. How then dare we any longer resist his will, when the punishment of disobedience is as sure as that God is good? How can we refrain from repenting, and loving, and obeying, when our forgiveness is as certain as that Christ has died?

The privileges of the Jew contrasted with his practice.

17 Behold, thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God,

18 And knowest his will, and || approve the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law ;

19 And art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness,

20 An instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law.

21 Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?

22 Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?

23 Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God?

24 For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is ¹ written.

25 For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision.

26 Therefore if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?

27 And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

28 For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh:

29 But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God.

¹ Is. 52. 5. Ezek. 36. 20. 23.

The privileges of the Jews led them to put their trust in their Law, to make their boast of God, that they were his chosen people, that they knew his will, that they could discern right from wrong, and were competent in this matter to be guides to the blind, and instructors of the foolish. Thus they became at once proud and censorious, whilst their own conduct was no better than that which they condemned. "Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself?" This faithful reproof St. Paul follows up by pointing out some of the sins most common among the Jews, stealing, adultery, and sacrilege. These offences had been previously noted by our Lord. For He laid it to their charge that they made his Father's house a den of thieves. See Matt. 21. 13. And He pointed out how they were guilty of adultery in their ordinary practice of divorce. See Matt. 5. 32. Thus whilst they made their boast of the Law, they were dishonouring God by breaking the Law. And thus the name of God was blasphemed among the Gentiles through them.

This is one of the most grievous consequences of being enlightened in the truth of God, without growing in the love of Him and in the doing of his will. And grievously is this consequence still at work amongst them who know little of Christianity, except what they see in the lives of professing Christians. Idolaters in distant lands, not unfrequently behold in those who bear the name of Christ, a degree of profligacy which is shocking to the law written on their hearts. Nor is it otherwise amongst ourselves, in this Christian country, where unhappily there are still many who remain strangers to the power of religion in the soul. And there is no one thing that more hardens them in unbelief, than the inconsistent lives of professed believers. It is for us therefore to remember, that what was true of circumcision is true of baptism, that what was true of the Law is true of the Gospel, and that he is not a Christian which is one only outwardly, neither is that baptism which is only outward in the flesh. But Christian baptism and Christian religion, is "of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God."

And in these expressions we would by no means disparage the outward ordinance of baptism, any more than did St. Paul mean to deny the importance of circumcision to the Jews. That which God has ordered, man is bound to do, whether it be inward in the spirit, or outward in the flesh. Only we must not mistake the intention of God's ordinance. We must never suppose that we have in any degree fulfilled his will, by doing outwardly what we feel not inwardly. No, it is in the heart that He requires our obedience, in the soul within the heart, in that which lives and feels when the heart has ceased to beat. There it is that God sees whether we believe in Christ, whether we repent and obey the Gospel.

And this is the way in which men estimate each other. They look to motives and intentions, as far as they can reasonably infer them. They expect of the professors of religion somewhat more than decent outward conduct. And if they find us no less covetous than themselves, no less vain, proud, irritable, or revengeful, the name of God will be blasphemed through us, and the Gospel of Christ dishonoured. What a weighty consideration is this for us, not only as we are Christians compared with heathens, but as we are Christians possessing eminent advantages, compared with other Christian countries, families, or sects! How surely will God's name be blasphemed through us, if we shew not in our lives that we largely profit by our intimate acquaintance with the truth! And how greatly will our own glory and our joy be multiplied, if we so make our light to shine before men, that they learn from what good works they see in us to glorify our Father which is in heaven!

The advantage of having the oracles of God.

1 What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?

2 Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

3 For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, 'That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

5 But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man)

6 God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world?

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?

8 And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.

9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before *proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin;

10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one:

11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

13 Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips:

14 Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness:

15 Their feet are swift to shed blood:

16 Destruction and misery are in their ways:

17 And the way of peace have they not known:

18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.

* Gr. charged.

St. Paul having shewn how much the sinfulness of the Jews was aggravated by their light and knowledge, declared that in respect of liability to punishment there was "no respect of persons with God." Chap. 2. 11. "What advantage then hath the Jew?" might be reasonably asked, or what advantage has the Christian, if according to our greater talents we must expect to give account hereafter? In either case the answer is strictly true, "Much every way." In either case it is an eminent advantage to have the oracles of God committed to us, to know what the will of God is, to be taught how good He is, how great, how sure to punish, how willing to forgive. And how much greater every way is our advantage, to have also the covenant of grace, to be assured of help that we may do what we know, to have access unto the Father through the Son, by the Spirit which He has given us! See Eph. 2. 18.

"For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?" Can it derogate from the glory of God's faithfulness and truth? It is our own fault. It is the fault of them which believe not. We are guilty, and we must answer for the sin. The righteousness of God still stands good. The righteous method, by which He has decreed to save the children of men, is still deserving of our utmost thanks. God is true, though we are false. God is good, though we are wicked. And the more we are wicked, and false, and faithless, we do but prove the more his wisdom, goodness, and love, in offering to redeem us from iniquity. But may we hence conclude that we shall therefore not be judged as sinners? May we hence argue, "Let us do evil, that good may come?" May we suppose that our sin is not sinful, because it is made to redound to God's glory in the end? By no means. The apostle positively assures us of all who would thus reason, and thus act, that their "damnation is just." God's goodness does but make our sin more sinful; especially if we sin the more because we count upon forgiveness. To sin no more for very shame, to obey with zeal out of thankfulness and love, this is what ought to come of our knowing from God's word the riches of his mercy in Christ Jesus. And this was the use which the Jews, according to the measure of their knowledge, might have derived from their acquaintance with the oracles of God.

But might they therefore argue, as they used commonly to do, that they were better than the Gentiles? "No, in no wise." For the apostle had already shewn, that in point of fact they were guilty of the like sins. They had advantage in the Law, but they abused it. They had profit in circumcision, but they turned it into loss. And therefore instead of being better they were worse. And here St. Paul confirms from their own Scriptures this grievous account of their delinquency, for the truth of which he had before appealed to the consciences of the Jews. "As it is written." What a fearful writing this must seem to Christians who still practise what is here set down! What a faithful picture do these words present, of what still commonly prevails in the Christian community! Who is there that is now righteous? who that seeketh after God? who that is profitable unto Him? How many tongues now use deceit! How many mouths are full of cursing and bitterness! How many feet are swift to shed blood! How few know the way of peace! Never may we cease from that fear of God, which is most closely connected with the love of Him, from that fear of transgressing his commandments, which is all one with the love of his word and will! Never may we mistake the way of peace, nor in the end fall short of that "righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ!"

God's method of justification in the Gospel.

19 Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become || guilty before God.

20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.

21 But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets;

22 Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference:

23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;

24 Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:

25 Whom God hath † set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the ‡ remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;

26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

27 Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.

28 Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also:

30 Seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.

31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law.

|| Or, subject to the judgment of God.

† Or, fore-ordained.

‡ Or, passing over.

The Jews were convicted of sin by the oracles of God committed to their charge; "for by the law is the knowledge of sin." All the passages above quoted from the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and many others like to them, ought to have convinced the Jews of their manifold offences. Thus every mouth should have been stopped. For thus all the world stood guilty before God. And thus the world was more deeply in need of that way of salvation through faith in Christ, which the apostle here so earnestly recommends. This he had before called "the gospel of Christ." Chap. 1. 16. Here it is "the righteousness of God without the law;" and "the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ." And what this means we shall understand aright, if first we feel that "all have sinned," next that we are "justified," counted righteous, and this freely by the grace or free gift of God, and next that it is "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus."

There is no difference: "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." This ~~let~~ us first feel deeply of ourselves. Let us lay to heart how greatly we have sinned, and against a law how manifest and true, against a God how great and good! Next let us believe that we are justified, or counted righteous, sinners though we are, regarded as righteous by Him who is of purer eyes than to behold evil. See Hab. 1. 13. "Justified freely," not for any worthiness of our own, but "by his grace," by the free gift and mercy of God, "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:" "whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation," to be a sacrifice for our sins, to reconcile us to the Father, "through faith in his blood," through our believing in his sacrifice, through our believing that by his stripes we are healed. And this is in order to declare the righteousness of God, to make it manifest that He is righteous in forgiving us our sins, to satisfy all who are capable of observing what He does, that He is just in justifying the ungodly.

This then is one great end and use of our believing in the atonement once made upon the cross by the death of Jesus Christ. It satisfies our minds, of what otherwise we could scarcely have conceived, that God can, consistently with his perfect goodness, blot out and utterly forgive those many most grievous sins, of which our consciences accuse us. Oh how could we dare to live in his presence, how much less could we bear the thought of dying, if we had not this firm assurance in our Lord, that through Him we are reconciled to God? Another chief use of this great doctrine is, that it humbles the heart of the believer. "Where is boasting then? It is excluded." We can no longer be proud of our own doings. For here we learn that it is for no worth of ours, but only for the sake of Jesus Christ, that God can ever look on us as righteous. We can no longer be proud of our own privileges. For here we learn that God is the God of all, circumcision and uncircumcision, Jews and Gentiles, Christians and heathens. To all He offers graciously the same terms of love, that they may be saved through faith in Christ. Oh how can we who know these gracious offers be so slow to make them known to others? How, if we care not to declare them to our brethren, how can we be valuing them ourselves? Lastly we here learn that this doctrine of salvation does not make void the Law, but establishes it. It establishes the law written on the hearts of men, for it confirms and enlightens the conscience. It establishes the Law written in the Old Testament, for it fulfils every type and prophecy, and enforces every duty due to God and to our neighbour. And above all it establishes that most perfect of all laws, "the law of liberty," as St. James calls it, 1. 25, 2. 12, the law of God's way and will revealed in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. For what can so strongly bind us, what so effectually move us to do what God would have us, as the persuasion that through his free gift we are counted righteous though sinners, and also enabled by his grace to sin no more?

The Gospel doctrine foreshewn in Abraham and David.

1 What shall we then say that Abraham, our father as pertaining to the flesh, hath found?

2 For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God.

3 For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

4 Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness.

6 Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works,

7 Saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.

9 Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

11 And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also:

12 And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

13 For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.

14 For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect:

15 Because the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no transgression.

That we are justified through faith is a doctrine as old as David, as old as Abraham. It was the way in which God dealt with Abraham, in justifying him. It was the way in which David felt that he had been dealt with, when he described his own blessedness in the forgiveness of his sins. These are the points on which St. Paul here dwells, by way of satisfying the minds of Jewish Christians, with whom the authority of David and of Abraham had the utmost weight. And thus he argues: "if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory." For if any man could by his own strength do works acceptable unto God, works, such ~~as~~ would entitle him to a reward from God, this reward would be a debt due from God to man, and man would have to glory, not God. But Abraham had no such ground to glory "before God." For the Scripture expressly testified that it was his believing which was counted unto him for righteousness. See Gen. 15. 6. And this exactly agrees with the description given in the last chapter, of God's justifying them that believe in Christ. And therewith agrees, in like manner, David's description of the blessedness of the man, "whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."

And further from the case of Abraham it is argued, that this blessedness belonged not to them only who are the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, but to all also who should be heirs of his faith, Gentiles as well as Jews. For it was whilst Abraham was yet uncircumcised, that his believing was counted to him for righteousness. Circumcision was a seal or sign of his faith, and of the promise of God made to him on believing. But this seal was not ordained till after he had believed. So that he could not have been counted righteous by virtue of circumcision; nor could the Jews be so esteemed, as they vainly thought they could, through means of this or any other legal ordinance. For if it had been so, "faith is made void." The promise of God, to justify them that believe, would be "made of none effect," either if any works, such as men can do, would justify them, or if none could be justified without that perfect obedience of the heart, which no man can make good. "Because the law worketh wrath;" the law convicts every man of sin. The law, whether it be written on our hearts, or revealed by Moses, or confirmed by Christ, convinces us of what otherwise we should never know, that we are sinners in God's sight, liable to his wrath for ever.

Let us flee then to the promises of God. Let us take shelter in the refuge of his mercy. Let us, when most we feel the consciousness of sin, cling most closely to the hope of his forgiveness. Let our highest object of desire be "the blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works." Not to be counted righteous for our own deservings, not to earn the crown of glory by any work or worth of ours, let not this be what we aim at, think of, wish for; this let us not deem possible, or count to be desirable. No, certainly God's way is better far than ours. Sinners we are. Sinners we always have been. Sinners we shall continue to be as long as life shall last. And can it be that our iniquities are forgiven? Can it be that our sins are covered? Can it be that God sees them not, remembers them no more? Oh, the goodness of Him who thus forgives! Oh, the boundless love of Him who thus pleads for our forgiveness! Oh, the hardness of our hearts that we can forget our Master and only Saviour, Jesus Christ, thus dying for us! Oh, the joy and peace of believing that Christ died for us, that Christ lives to make intercession for us, that Christ gives us freely all things to enjoy, and that God has for Christ's sake forgiven us our sins!

Abraham the father of them that believe.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all; *

17 (As it is written, 'I have made thee a father of many nations,) || before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were.

18 Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, 'So shall thy seed be.

19 And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb :

20 He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God;

21 And being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.

23 Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;

25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

|| Or, like unto him.

Faith, we know "was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness." Ver. 9. And it is to them which believe that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Why this is the case is here set forth; in order that it may be by grace, in order that the salvation of man may be the free and gracious gift of Almighty God. Here therefore we must observe that it is not for our faith's sake, any more than for our work's sake, that we are justified in the sight of God. No; it is his free gift. He freely forgives us all. It is for Christ's sake. And Christ is God. The Father and the Son are one. See John 10. 30. Let us take care then that we trust not in our faith, that we ascribe not to our faith that worth which belongs to no one thing in us. The very reason of our salvation being connected with our faith is that we should ascribe the whole to God. Let us then believe that the whole is God's work; and let us believe that He will do it all. Let us trust that all unworthy as we are, we may be counted worthy for Christ's sake. And when we thus really trust, how can we help to love? And were we thus to love in earnest, how could we be reluctant to obey?

And not only is it helpful to the glory of God's goodness that we should be justified freely on believing; it is no less necessary for the manifestation of his truth, "to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed;" Gentile as well as Jew. Only by this means could be fulfilled the promise of God to Abraham, the father of the faithful. "For it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him." It was not promised to Abraham alone, that his faith should be reckoned for righteousness. Nor was it promised to the Jews alone, as they vainly imagined; though they might have known the reverse, from what was written, "I have made thee a father of many nations."

But in him it was also promised to all, of all nations, who should become inheritors of his faith. And therefore it was useful to the fulfilment of God's promise that their faith should also be counted to them for righteousness. And therefore to us it will be counted "if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences," put to death by reason of our sins; "and raised again for our justification," or, because by his death our pardon had been secured. For it was for this cause that death had no more dominion over "the Lord's body," 1 Cor. 11. 29, and that He arose again from the dead.

These then are the chief things we have to believe. And how we must believe in them we may learn further from what is here set down of Abraham's faith. He believed in God "who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." He was aware, it seems, that what has once been uttered by God's word is the same as if it were already done. He "against hope believed in hope;" against his wish that Ishmael might find favour in God's sight, see Gen. 17. 18, he believed in the birth of another son. He considered not the improbability of the circumstances. He reasoned not that it was against the course of nature. Or if he reasoned, he subdued the inclination to doubt; and was fully persuaded that what God had promised, he was able also to perform." Such must be the vigour of our faith, such its firmness, such its fullness of persuasion. Has God told us of forgiveness? Let us feel ourselves forgiven. Has He spoken of life and immortality? Let us live as though we were now in heaven. Has He assured us of grace sufficient for us? Let us work as though we felt Him working with us. Has He promised the Holy Spirit to make us holy? Let us regard ourselves as already holy unto the Lord. Weak though we be, and conscious of infirmity, ashamed of our many past offences, and ill qualified by natural ability to influence the conduct of our neighbours, has God bidden us to edify one another, and to love no less than all men? Then let us not doubt that through his blessing on the means we use, we shall become as spiritual parents, fathers in the Lord, to many who might else not know his love.

The blessedness of being justified through faith.

1 Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

2 By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

5 And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without strength, || in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.

8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.

10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

11 And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.

|| Or, according to the time.

§ 454. That we have peace and joy in believing.

In order to impress on us the value of those benefits which we derive through the mercy of God in Christ, the apostle here divides them into several sorts, and distinguishes the one from the other. We are justified by faith. We are counted just, though sinners; our sins, though they were as scarlet, become white as snow; the record that was against us is blotted out; and this upon our believing in the atonement of our Lord. How this is, has been already shewn. Here we see, that besides this first great benefit, we have also "joy and peace in believing." Ch. 15. 13. "We have peace with God." We no longer feel at enmity with our best of friends. We are no longer at variance with our Maker. We no longer desire to do the very reverse of that which He would have us. We no longer regard with fear the day of his appearing. "We have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." For it is through the Son that we are thus reconciled to the Father, enabled to approach unto Him as sons, and to "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." This is the second chief advantage here insisted on, our spiritual joy. And this joy we have in many ways, even here on earth, where we should else have only sorrow. First, we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. We have joy in the promise of God's glory, in the confident expectation that we shall soon enter into heaven, there to dwell with Him in everlasting joy. The prospect of this inheritance, the conviction that it is ours, the feeling that each day and moment of our lives brings us nearer and nearer to enjoying it, how light must this make our present sorrows, how must it fill our hearts with gladness. "And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also." We have joy not only notwithstanding our sorrow, but in our sorrow. We are glad to be afflicted. For now we know that pain is sent us for our good. And now we know how to use affliction for the increase of patience, and patience for the growth of experience, and experience for the enlarging of our hope, and hope for our assurance against the risk of shame. Thus the more we suffer, we are the more assured that when this light affliction, which is but for a moment, shall be over, we shall be brought not to shame but unto glory, when the day of the Lord shall come. And this blessed fruit of our afflictions, that they minister to the increase of our joy, comes of the love of God being "shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us." It is not our doing, but God's. It is not our work, but the work of the Spirit. And therefore, as St. Paul has elsewhere written, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." 1 Cor. 1. 31.

A third and chief subject of our spiritual rejoicing is the sacrifice of the death of Christ; "we have joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." We are to conceive ourselves helpless through sin, and hopeless, sentenced to endless misery. We are to think of the love of Him who in this our lost estate submitted to die in our behalf. We are to note how He died for us while we were yet sinners. We are to remember how hard we find it to be kind to the unthankful and evil, how strange we should suppose it, and incredible, that one man would die for the benefit of another. We are to know that Christ did thus die for us, that by his death we were reconciled to God, by his blood justified; and that by his living, rising again from the dead, giving us his Spirit, and ever living to make intercession for us, we shall be made holy, and so saved from the wrath to come. And then we shall feel what it is to have joy in God through Christ, then we shall "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." 1 Peter 1. 8. For what can more gladden the heart, than to feel, that however far we have been estranged from One, who is our Master, Friend, and Father, we have been now restored to his affection, by means no less strange, and sure, and powerful, than the death of his own Son, as our all sufficient sacrifice?

Lord, help us to believe that thus it is! Lord, help us to have peace and joy in our belief! Lord, help us, by thy grace, to that holiness of life, without which there can be no peace nor joy in believing!

The extent of redemption through Christ.

12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, || for that all have sinned:

13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come.

15 But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many.

16 And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

* Or, by one offence.

17 For if * by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

18 Therefore as † by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so ‡ by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life.

19 For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

20 Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound:

21 That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

† Or, by one offence.

Thus far St. Paul has proved, what at the outset of this Epistle he declared, that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. But there was no question more agitated amongst those to whom he wrote than this; unto whom this salvation belonged? And therefore as he had before declared, that it is "to every one that believeth," ch. 1. 16, so he here maintains that the atonement wrought for us by the death of Christ, extends as widely as the guilt entailed on us by the fall of Adam. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." This was the commencement of our misery. "And so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." This was what followed. The children of Adam, though they did not all transgress as he did against a law most manifestly revealed, yet all sinned, as may be known from this fact, that all became subject unto death. "For until the law sin was in the world," even before the written law was given from on high; only it was not then so plainly charged against man; "sin is not imputed where there is no law." This then was the extent of misery which through one man entered into the world. All sinned. All died.

Hence we may learn the extent of those benefits which are revealed in the Gospel. It is as large as the injury we had met with. It is larger. For "not as the offence, so also is the free gift." Through Adam, sin and death entered into the world. But through our own sins also, all of us become subject unto death. Whereas "the gift of grace which is by one man Jesus Christ," or as it is in the original, by "the one man," this without any corresponding worth of ours, "hath abounded unto many," or rather "unto the many," that is to say, unto all except "the One." And herein is another difference, another point in which the gift of God is shewn to be more extensive than his sentence of wrath. For not only is this sentence blotted out, not only is all sin forgiven up to the moment of the sinner's coming unto God by faith, but ever afterwards there is forgiveness for our manifold transgressions assured to our sincere repentance; there is "abundance of grace," there is "the gift of righteousness;" not merely not to have our sins imputed to us, but to be actually counted righteous through God's free gift; there is not merely not to die, but to "reign in life," to live for ever in glory. All this, far more than we all lost through Adam, have we all gained, all at least who effectually believe, by One, Jesus Christ.

Thus we see in how large a sense the many are made righteous by the obedience of the One, by his being obedient unto death, by his dying for us on the cross. But still further to extol the extent of the free gift, the apostle adds; "moreover the law entered that the offence might abound." Not only was sin prevalent in the world up to the period when the law was given, but when the will of God was revealed from heaven, when the wrath of God against the disobedience of man was certified by signs and wonders, was declared in express articles of charge against each particular head of our offences: even then did man continue to transgress; and then was his transgression so much the more sinful, as he sinned more against the knowledge vouchsafed to him by God. "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." The more thoroughly, the more largely all mankind are thus proved guilty before God, so much the more abundantly is God's goodness made manifest in forgiving them, for the sake of Jesus Christ. "Death reigned." And "sin hath reigned." But more wide is the reign of grace, more large is the free gift of God, than the loss and injury sustained by man. Are we then aware of our dishonour, of our danger, of our fall? Let us become alike sensible of our recovery. Are we sure that we are sinners? Let us be no less sure that in Christ we have redemption, even the forgiveness of our sins. Let us feel as they that are free from sin, nay more, as they that are counted righteous. Let us live as they that are set at liberty from the power of death, nay rather are assured that they shall live for ever "by Jesus Christ our Lord."

That we may not sin for grace to abound.

1 What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?

2 God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?

3 Know ye not, that so many of us as || were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

5 For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection:

6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin.

7 For he that is dead is  freed from sin.*

|| Or, are.

 Gr. justified.*

+ Gr. arms, or, weapons.

8 Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him:

9 Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

11 Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

12 Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.

13 Neither yield ye your members as † instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

14 For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

§ 456. That we should reckon ourselves dead to sin.

St. Paul was aware that the doctrine he had to preach was liable to abuse. It had already led to the slanderous report, that he had taught, "Let us do evil, that good may come." Ch. 3. 8. He would now therefore shew us how far it is from loosening the bonds of duty. He would prove that the faith which justifies, affords the best of all security for the love which obeys. Let us remember that his reasonings apply not to those only who mistake his doctrine, and hold that it is consistent with continuing in sin, but to them also, who, holding the reverse, do continue in sin notwithstanding.

"What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?" This is the first form of the objection. This is the pretext on which many from that early day till now would evade the force of Christian duty. This is the plea which had been previously exposed, that "if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God," ch. 3. 5, then the more we do evil, there would come of it the more good, and thus we had better sin than not. But see in what solemn words St. Paul protests against such gross abuse of Gospel truth. "God forbid." Never do Thou, who rulest over all, permit this delusion to deceive! Never wilt Thou allow such wilful self-deceit to pass for an excuse in sin. "God forbid. How shall we that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" This is the first ground of reason against this wicked and absurd objection. We Christians are dead to sin. At our baptism we were baptized into the death of Jesus Christ. We were devoted to a life of self-denial. We were bound to live henceforth even as Christ lived, and to be ready even to die as He died. This must have been a striking argument to the primitive believers, who were for the most part converted in maturity of years, and baptized by complete immersion in the water. For to them such baptism must have most aptly signified the being "planted together in the likeness of" the death of Christ, and also of his resurrection. If we through God's mercy have been in infancy made partakers of the same inestimable gifts, and if in our climate there is allowed a method of applying water more safe for the health of the body, let us remember that the ordinance of baptism has still the same influence on the soul, that we are still baptized into the death of Christ, and ought still to be so dead to sin as to be unable to live therein any longer. "Our old man," "the body of sin," the sinful body, the lusts of the flesh, and the fleshly lusts of the soul, all these we must consider to be crucified with Christ. All these we must count for dead, so that they can no longer serve sin. To that tyrant they are naturally slaves. But death sets the captive free. And he that is as dead to sin, will serve sin no longer. And as Christ "being raised from the dead dieth no more;" so we, if we have truly risen with Him to newness of life, must live unto God for ever. The slave is not only set free by death from the bondage of his master upon earth. He is admitted into a new life where sin reigns no more, and where "death hath no more dominion over him."

"Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Here we see how we are to apply this reasoning to ourselves. It is by faith. We are to reckon ourselves dead to sin. This is the way to be so. We are to reckon ourselves alive unto God. This is the way to live to Him, through Jesus Christ our Lord. To believe that we are free is the first point in our deliverance. To act as if we were free is the second. "Let not sin therefore reign." "Neither yield ye your members." "But yield yourselves unto God." These are our directions. And these directions prove that we have power to act. We are slaves no longer. "Sin shall not have dominion over" us. And why? Because we are "not under the law, but under grace." God's love has set us free. God's help can keep us free. Our chains are broken. Our prison doors are opened. Our liberty is secured. And our deliverance is no less than this: we are free to sin no more.

That we may not sin because we are under grace.

15 What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine || which was delivered you.

18 Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

19 I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness.

20 For when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free † from righteousness.

21 What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death.

22 But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

23 For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

§ 457. How zealously we ought to serve the Lord.

“What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.” Here is another pretext, like unto the one last answered, and both put forward to uphold the same fatal falsehood, that under the Gospel we may sin in safety. How common is this fallacy amongst ourselves! How many count it for the chief of Christian privileges, that they may sin with more hope of mercy! How many have no other notion of Christianity at all, than that it opens to sinners a wider door of forgiveness! How few seem to be aware that it has for a higher object to sanctify us unto God a peculiar people, zealous of good works! See Tit. 2. 14. Sin is not to be desired, even if we might sin safely. Sin is to be abhorred, even if it were not sure to lead to punishment. The hatefulness and sinfulness of sin are to be estimated by the value of the sacrifice which it cost, the sacrifice of the death of Christ. We are to set his form before our eyes, his visage so marred more than that of any man, his crown of thorns, his cross, his dying agony. We are to remember that He was God manifest in the flesh. We are to set before our thoughts what love this needs must be, that such an one as this should die for us. We are to know that by virtue of his death we enjoy, if we believe, eternal life. And we shall then feel what is meant by being under grace. And can we then think this a reason for continuing in sin?

No, we shall rejoice to think that we are no longer servants “of sin unto death,” but “of obedience unto righteousness.” We shall be thankful for ability to obey as well as believe, that form of doctrine which has been delivered to us. We shall be willing “servants of righteousness.” And we shall yield our members servants “unto holiness,” with at least as much alacrity, affection, and desire, as by nature we manifest for uncleanness and iniquity. “Even so.” This the apostle speaks “after the manner of men, because of the infirmity” of our flesh. Else, if we were not frail, and fallible, and foolish, he might justly have said, Much more. And thus doubtless he would have us to apply what he has said; that we should now devote ourselves to the work of God with tenfold diligence, beyond what we ever exercised in the work of Satan. But how far is this from wishing still to sin! How far from arguing that by reason of our privileges, therefore we might sin safely!

And further to carry on the comparison, and to satisfy us that the service of the Lord ought to raise in us not merely as much zeal, but infinitely more, than the service of iniquity, we are here referred to the wages of the two opposite situations. “When ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness.” We cannot at once serve God and mammon. When we are servants of righteousness we are also free from sin. Which had we rather serve? Which rather be free from? Let us look to the fruit of each, to the end of each, to the wages of each. The fruit of sin is shame, the end and wages, death. The fruit of righteousness is that we are made holy. The end is everlasting life. The wages, no, not the wages, but the gift of God, his free and gracious gift, is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. See then how much is here to win our preference. To be made holy instead of to be made ashamed. And instead of death to have life eternal. God not only counts us just; He makes us holy. He gives us grace to serve Him in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life. He gives us at the end of life, not death, but an eternity of happiness, to leave this world for one that is far better, to be with Christ where He is. And this is his gift, his free gift; even unto man for the sake of Jesus Christ; not by virtue of any good that we can do, and yet not without our doing what good we can. Let us therefore do good, not grudgingly or of necessity, but cheerfully, joyfully, affectionately. Let us serve out of love unto our Lord. The more we believe in God’s goodness, let us the more strive to be good like Him. The more fully we are persuaded that Christ died for us, let us the more heartily endeavour to live to Him.

Our deliverance from the Law; which however is not sin.

1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth?

2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God.

5 For when we were in the flesh, the  motions of sins*, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death.

* Gr. passions.

6 But now we are delivered from the law, || that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.

7 What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known † lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet.

8 But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead.

9 For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died.

10 And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

11 For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.

12 Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

That holiness is necessary under the Gospel, and more attainable than under the Law, these things are here further set forth, first by its being shewn that henceforth we are exempt from the Law, and next by a declaration of what effect the Law has actually produced. It may help to a right view of the apostle's argument if we consider the latter point first. If then our being "delivered from the Law" is a reason for our no longer serving sin, must we not hence conclude that the Law is sin? "God forbid." The sin is not in the Law, but in us who sin against the Law. The Law, whether it be that which the Gentiles were unto themselves, or that which was revealed by means of Moses to the Jews, "the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." The Law came down from heaven. It was given unto man by God. It is the expression of that which God would have us do. It is the distinction of what is right from what is wrong, of what is evil from what is good, of what is true from what is false; of what is so, has been, and ever will be so; of what God so counts for ever. Never therefore may we refuse to honour and obey the Law of the Lord! Never may we hesitate to love that which God commands, nor fail to obtain that which He has promised!

But can we obtain the joys of heaven by obeying the commandments? We cannot. For we cannot obey. "This do, and thou shalt live," Luke 10. 28, is undoubtedly true of the Law. But it is no less true, that through the corruption of our nature, we cannot do this, and therefore cannot by the Law have life. On the contrary by the Law we die. For it is the Law which convicts us of sin before God. It is the Law which convinces us within ourselves. It is the Law which makes us to be aware how surely we deserve eternal death. It is the Law which, by revealing to us what we ought to do, thus aggravates the sinfulness of all we do amiss. The Law then is from God. But the sin is ours. The Law "was ordained to life." But we found it, nay made it, to be unto death. The Law is holy. But sin is for that very reason tenfold sinful. And so deceitful is sin within our hearts, so deceitful is the heart of sinful man, that the more we are commanded to do aright, we desire so much the more to go astray. We delight in disobedience. We glory in our shame. Thus sin took occasion by the commandment to work in us more of lust against the will of God. When we knew with fulness and certainty, by the revelation of God's written Law, sin revived, and we yet more deserved death. For now entered the proud thought that we could earn our own deliverance. Now sin deceived us by the notion of self righteousness. Now sin took occasion by the commandment, not only to add to our concupiscence but to confirm our pride.

This is the state to which sin had brought all mankind under the Law. This is the bondage from which the Gospel is able to deliver all mankind. And from this bondage it delivers us by delivering us from the Law, not from the obligation to be holy, but from the curse which the Law awards to the slightest transgression. Transgress, and thou shalt die, is the sentence of the Law. Believe, and thou shalt live, repent, and thy sins shall be blotted out, is the gracious assurance of the Gospel. The Law therefore is dead. Or rather it lives anew in the Gospel. We are still bound as in marriage. But our spouse is Christ. We are "married to another." Through that other we must "bring forth fruit unto God." For the end of our deliverance is this, "that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."

Guard us then, we pray Thee, most gracious Lord, from abusing thy great goodness made known to us in the Gospel. The more Thou hast set us free, let us the more freely, cheerfully, and thankfully observe thy pleasure and obey thy will.

That it is not the Law which is made death to us.

13 Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

14 For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin.

15 For that which I do I *allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I.

16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good.

17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not.

19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me.

22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man:

23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from || the body of this death?

25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

* Gr. know.

|| Or, this body of death.

"God forbid," was the answer given by the apostle to the question, "Is the law sin?" Ver. 7. And he declared that to the contrary "the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." Ver. 12. But if the law be not sinful, it seems to be the cause of death, or at least an objector might so suppose. "Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid." Most solemnly St. Paul again protests against any interpretation of his doctrine, which would in the least degree disparage the law of God, or lessen our respect for his commandments. The law is not made death to us. It is not the law written on our hearts, it is not the law revealed to patriarchs of old, it is not the law written by Moses, it is not the law enlarged upon by the prophets fulfilled by Christ, and again set forth by the apostles, it is not this pure and perfect will of God most high, it is not that which has been made death to us. Thus much we may know from our own conviction, that the law is spiritual: from our own conscience, which hates the very things we do, and thus consents unto the law, that it is good. No, it is our own inbred perversity, it is the lust of the flesh that is made death unto us, and that takes occasion by the commandment to deceive and slay us. See ver. 11. It is "I am carnal, sold under sin." Or rather, it is not I, but that which is the worst part of me, though not usually the weakest part of me, "it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me."

We are as it were two men, each one of us. We are as it were two wills; one which consents to sin, and one which allows it not: one which is greedy of iniquity, and one which hates it; one, which is or ought to be, which is sin that dwelleth in us. The corrupt condition of this our sinful self, own conscience and to the law of God, the war which it carries on within us, a the miserable captivity to which it is continually bringing us; these are what St. Paul here sets forth to us, by telling us how he affected himself. "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing." He tells us which self he means, his flesh, that in him which was carnal, that which whilst he knew not Christ, presided over all, that which even in them that are regenerate, still struggles for the mastery. In this our flesh still dwelleth no good thing. The good that we would, we still do not. The evil which we would not, still we do. "To will," to will aright "is present with" us. But "evil is present with" us also. Even when we "delight in the law of God after the inward man," when we have learnt from faith to love, when we feel affection for God's will, and for Himself, still we "see another law" in our members in painful conflict with the law in our minds, ever at work to bring it into captivity under its own degrading power.

O wretched men that we are, if subject to this agony of inward strife, bound daily to resist, in danger of defeat each hour of our lives, and in jeopardy of shame and discomfiture up to the very moment of our departure. O wretched men that we are, "who shall deliver us" "from the body of this death," who shall save us from this carnal self of ours, which self or flesh, and not the law of God, both is sin, see ver. 7, and is "made death unto" us? "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." He shall deliver us. He has delivered us. He shall save us. He is our Saviour. He is therefore also our Lord. His Gospel is the power of God, to save us, both from sin, and from death. "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." This is the conclusion of the whole matter. In the Christian, in proportion as he is established in the faith, in the Christian it is the mind and not the flesh, that is "I myself." And therefore it is the law of God he serves, and not the law of sin. He draws daily more nigh to the one and further from the other. Daily he does more work for the one and less for the other. Or if it may be, and as far as it may be, he serves the one continually, and the other not at all.

The believer safe from condemnation.

1 There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

2 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh:

4 That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

5 For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit.

6 For * to be carnally minded is death; but † to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

7 Because ‡ the carnal mind is enmity against God:

for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness.

11 But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies ¶ by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12 Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

13 For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

¶ Or, by a sacrifice for sin.

The apostle here continues the distinction, which in the last chapter he had made, between our two selves, or the two parts of each man's own self, there called, the one the law of sin in our members; the other the inward man, but here, the one "the flesh," and the other "the spirit." And he assures us that under the Gospel "there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." And this is because they who are in Christ Jesus, they who are baptized according to his ordinance, and live according to their baptism, these are made "free from the law of sin and death," made free from that Law which uniformly declared, transgress, and thou shalt die. This Law, though it also offered, obey and thou shalt live, yet could not give us life. For "through the flesh," through our propensity to sin, we never could sufficiently obey. God therefore sent his Son, "in the likeness" of that flesh of ours, which is so prone to sin; sent Him "for sin," even to die for it; and thus by his death "condemned sin in the flesh," executed the sentence of condemnation against our carnal and corrupt propensities.

Hence we are no longer under that fearful sentence which rendered all exertion hopeless. Hence the righteousness of the Law may be fulfilled in us; for we can now walk after the spirit, and not after the flesh. This is now within our power. Let us take heed then, that we now attain to it. We have seen how it is that we receive this redemption, through the death of Christ. Let us observe how we are to turn it to good account, namely, by using our liberty for his honour, by fulfilling his will to the uttermost. "They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh." But if in us the flesh is mortified by the death of Christ, if we are "after the spirit," if the spirit in us has the mastery over the flesh, we shall mind "the things of the spirit." The one state is to be already dead; the other is to have life and peace. In the one case we live not to any profit, we derive not any benefit from the death of Christ. In the other we enjoy, through his redemption, a new life of holiness and peace. For in the one case we are still at enmity with God, still perversely bent against obeying his law. In the other, we feel that we have been reconciled; we desire to love Him who has so greatly loved us; and we try to please Him, because we know that now we can; and we succeed, because now we try.

But is our trying all that is required? May we be sure by our own exertions alone, to subdue the flesh unto the spirit, and thus to know that we are "in the spirit?" Far from it. God still must help us. It is the holy Ghost, here called "the Spirit of God," and "Spirit of Christ," it is the Holy Ghost who alone can make us holy. And as it was said of our offending flesh, "it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me;" ch. 7. 17; so it is now true of the same mortal body, that when it is become dead to sin, it is the Holy Spirit that leads, and guides, and rules it; it is God who quickens us by his Spirit that dwells in us. And thus the same apostle has elsewhere written, "nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2: 20.

This then is the kind of life to which the Gospel is to bring us. How far from a life of sin! These are they to whom there is no condemnation. How far from such as count the law for sin, how far from such as would continue in sin, in order that grace may abound! Debtors we are still, bound not by terror, but by love, not so much by the apprehension of how God will punish us by the conviction of how utterly He has forgiven. Debtors we are still, but not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. Else even after all that God has done for us in Christ, we still shall die. But it is through the Spirit of God to mortify the deeds of the body, and to bring the flesh into subjection to the spirit of the inner man, and to Christ whose Spirit is one with ours, this is what we owe, not to the flesh, but to the spirit. May God help us to pay the debt!

The believer liable to sufferings.

14 For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

15 For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

16 The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God:

17 And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

18 For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

19 For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

20 For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope.

21 Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that || the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

24 For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25 But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

27 And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, † because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God.

“As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.” Under the Law we were not sons, but servants, or rather slaves. For the Law gave sentence of death on disobedience; and even for them that should obey it, the Law had no decided revelation of eternal life. Thus under the Law we had the spirit of bondage. But under the Gospel we have the spirit of adoption, or sonship. For the Holy Spirit of God, who leads us to obey, “beareth witness with our spirit,” joins with our own conscience, or inward man, to assure us “that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.” Yes; we must suffer first. We are heirs, not owners. We are children, not yet men. We are not of age to be yet masters, till first we have been chastened; not fit to be trusted with the crown of glory, till first we have been tried in the furnace of affliction. Christians are not exempt from that subjection unto vanity, that liability to decay and death, which attaches to all things here below. The grass that grows up and is cut down, the flower that soon withers, the beasts that perish, the sun that shall be turned into darkness, and the heavens that shall vanish as a scroll; these things, and such as these, do most aptly represent that misery and mortality of ours, to which they owe their own sentence of destruction. They suffer; but the fault was ours. For our sake the ground was cursed. See Gen. 3. 18. Ours was the will at enmity with God; ours the sin for which “the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together.” And now that the woman’s seed has bruised the serpent’s head, ours it is to wait as long as these things last, for the manifestation of the sons of God. The times of restoration of all things cannot be hastened for our present satisfaction. Even those who in the fruits of the Spirit have the earnest of eternal life, must be content to stay, till all God’s purposes are fulfilled on earth, ere they enjoy “the redemption of the body.” But then, how short is time at the very longest! How utterly unworthy are the utmost “sufferings of the present time” “to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us!”

“For we are saved by hope.” The Gospel “is the power of God unto salvation.” Ch. 1. 16. But we are not to enjoy at once the whole weight of glory, which belongs to them that shall be saved. The life which we chiefly look for is to come. The inheritance to which we now become entitled is “eternal in the heavens.” 2 Cor. 5. 1. Now that which is not yet present we can only hope for, not possess. And in the meanwhile, we must wait for it in patience. We must not be surprised if we are called upon to suffer. We must not be weary in well doing. We must not be ashamed or discontented at delay. And here also it is not in strength of ours that we wait. Herein we are not left comfortless. Herein the same Holy Ghost, the Comforter, gives us confidence in our conflict, and in our weakness, strength. “Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities.” And how He helps us is here abundantly declared. He helps by helping us to pray, by praying in us, with us, for us. “We know not what we should pray for as we ought.” And if we ask amiss we have not what we ask. See James 4. 3. But if “the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us,” with such earnestness and force as no tongue of man could else express, then God knows our meaning; for “He that searcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit.” God knows our meaning. God hears our prayers. Then we know that He hears us. “And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.” † John 5. 15.

God designs for us to be conformed to the image of his Son.

28 And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren.

30 Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

31 What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?

32 He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth.

34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.

35 Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

36 As it is written, ¹ For thy sake we are killed all the day long: we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.

37 Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.

38 For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Most gracious order of Him that ruleth over all, that the very things which make us groan within ourselves do also help us, if we love the Lord, towards receiving joy for ever! Most gracious purpose of our Father which is in heaven, that He should beforehand know and predestinate, settle and determine, to conform us to the image of his Son, to make us, like that first born among many brethren, "perfect through sufferings!" Heb. 2. 10. God be praised that He has thus predestinated us! God be praised, that He has called, justified, and glorified us; called us by the preaching of the Gospel, called us by the knowledge of the truth; justified us "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," ch. 3. 24, "through faith in his blood," ch. 3. 26; glorified us by making us first to suffer here, as our way to glory everlasting! Our sorrows, our pains, our diseases, our death, our agony of conflict with sin that dwelleth in us, our work and labour of love, and the earnest groanings of our desire to be clothed with our house from heaven; see 2 Cor. 5. 2; all these things are no more than He who is all wise, has allotted unto those whom He most highly favours, no more than He will make to work together for good, to them that love Him.

"What shall we then say to these things?" Not as Jacob in the hour of his affliction, "all these things are against me." Gen. 42. 36. Far other wise. God makes the worst that can here befall us minister to the best that we can enjoy hereafter. All these things are for us. He spared not his own Son. Christ suffered. And shall not we also suffer gladly? Christ suffered for us. And shall not we rejoice to suffer for his sake? It was good for Him to bear the agony and to despise the shame of the cross. And must it not be profitable to us to take up our cross and follow Him; to encounter for his sake rebuke and shame, the loss of friends, the enmity of the world, and the malice of our adversary the devil? In vain do men accuse us; in vain does our evil enemy seek our condemnation. We are elect, called to salvation, counted just, however great have been our sins; counted just, if we believe, for Christ's sake. God counts us just; it is enough. Christ died for us; it is abundantly sufficient. Nay, not only did He die, He "is risen again," He "is even at the right hand of God." He "also maketh intercession for us." This is more than abundantly sufficient to assure us, that notwithstanding our present sufferings, our inheritance is for ever safe; the joys we long for, hope for, wait for, are as sure as we can desire, as well as greater than we can conceive.

For hence we know the love of Christ. We know that He loved us, for He gave Himself for us. See Gal. 1. 4. And "who can separate us from the love of Christ?" Which of all the evils that here we apprehend can make "him that loved us," love us less? "God is not a man, that he should lie; nor the son of man, that he should repent." Numb. 23. 19. Christ, though He be man as well as God, though He delight to call Himself "the Son of man," can neither repent nor lie. He will only love us more, for He has said He will, the more we love Him, and suffer for his sake. Thus "in all these things we are more than conquerors." For in all He loves us more. Thus neither death, nor any thing we can endure in life; neither angels, the evil angels which seek our ruin; nor principalities and powers, the same wicked spirits, which are elsewhere described as the rulers of the darkness of this world; nor things present, nothing we meet with here; nor things to come, nothing that can befall us in the valley of the shadow of death; "nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature;" nothing, no, nothing but our own wilful sin, nothing can separate us from the love of God, "which is in Christ Jesus." Oh, let not us then separate ourselves! The Father loves us. The Son died for us. The Holy Spirit helps us. Therefore to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost be glory henceforth for ever.

St. Paul is grieved for the rejection of the Jews.

2 That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart.

3 For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh :

6 Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel :

7 Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children : but, ¹ In Isaac shall thy seed be called.

8 That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God : but the children of the promise are counted for the seed.

St. Paul had said in the outset of this Epistle that the Gospel is “ the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth ; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.” Ch. 1. 16. This was the privilege of the Jews, precedency in point of time. Afterwards he adds, that in point of terms “ there is no difference ; ” “ the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ,” being assured in the Gospel “ unto all and upon all them that believe.” Ch. 3. 22. It is the object of these three next chapters to shew that in point of fact the Jews were in great part rejected, and the Gentiles chosen, to explain how this came to pass, and to insist upon the proofs which we might hence derive of God’s wisdom, justice, and abundant mercy. May He who ruleth over all, help us to apply aright to our own improvement this signal instance of his righteous judgment, incline us to study what He has been pleased to reveal, restrain us from all curious inquiry into that which He has thought fit to withhold, and make us at once thankful for the light which we enjoy, and anxious in behalf of those who are still in darkness !

This whole passage, however necessary for the exposition of the truth, was very likely to give offence to the Jews, in that St. Paul, himself a Jew, should thus plainly in the presence of the Gentiles, declare, in opposition to the prejudices of his people, that they were rejected, and the Gentiles chosen. And therefore he begins with a warm assurance of his own deep concern for his brethren. He protests in the most solemn manner that he has great heaviness and sorrow of heart. He declares that he could wish himself accursed from Christ for his kinsmen according to the flesh. And he sets forth in a manner most acceptable to their ears, their title, “ Israelites ; ” their privileges, “ the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises ; whose are the fathers,” those holy men “ of whom the world was not worthy ; ” Heb. 11. 38 ; and who, when it pleased God to be manifested in the flesh, see 1 Tim. 3. 16, were honoured by giving birth unto the Saviour of the world, “ of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.”

Nor does the apostle state expressly the afflicting truth which weighed so heavily on his own mind, and which he knew to be so offensive to his brethren. He left it to be supplied by the understanding of his readers, that these highly favoured Israelites were notwithstanding lost. And supposing this to have been understood, he goes on to account for it, by saying, “ Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect.” He shews that the rejection of a part of Israel was consistent with the promises of God. For this had been the case with the promise made to Abraham, whose children were evidently not all intended in what was said of the blessedness of his seed. But, “ in Isaac shall thy seed be called.” And as it was with the children of Abraham, so was it also with those of Israel, “ the children of the promise are counted for the seed.” So is it also with the Jews ; God’s word takes full effect, his covenant with them is amply fulfilled, in the salvation of all such as are Israelites indeed, see John 1. 47, of all those whose circumcision is “ in the spirit, and not in the letter ; whose praise is not of men, but of God.” Ch. 2. 29.

How unwelcome must this truth have been to that self righteous people, which trusted in the privilege of being Abraham’s children according to the flesh ! How forcibly does St. Paul, in his reasoning, remind them that all Abraham’s seed were not children of the promise ! How tenderly does he forbear to mention this conclusion, that many of themselves were aliens ! How affectionately does he express his own concern in their behalf ! How earnestly, how honestly does he wish that he might himself be lost, if they might thereby be saved ! Here we have a most memorable example of self denial and self devotion. Here we have a most effectual warning against a sin which besets many forward professors of the faith, a selfish regard for their own salvation. At all cost to others, they seem to argue, I must escape the wrath to come. Nay, it should be only at all cost to thyself. Spare thyself in nothing ; but seek not to gain any thing for thyself, by that which is thy brother’s loss. Nay, spare not thine own self, if it be for thy brother’s gain. Nothing is more safe, than that which thou art willing to risk for him. None are more sure to be blessed of the Lord, than they who out of purest love for Him, would from their inmost hearts be content, as the apostle was, to be accursed from Christ for their brethren.

The rejection of the Jews further accounted for.

10 And not only this; but when Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac;

⁶ Jer. 18. 6. Wis. 15. 7.

We have here a further argument, by which St. Paul would satisfy his brethren the Jews, that though a large part of their people should become outcasts from the covenant, yet the word of God was not without effect. See ver. 6. For not only were some of Abraham's children manifestly excluded from the promise given generally to his seed, see ver. 7, but in the case of twins also, "conceived by one," and whilst the children were yet unborn, so that no account can be given for the distinction put between them except the free gift of God, it was said unto Rebecca, "The elder shall serve the younger." That is to say, the younger represents "the children of the promise." The younger "is counted for the seed." Ver. 8. The younger shall be the father, according to the flesh, of that great Saviour and Lord of all, in whom all the families of the earth are to be blessed. And accordingly it is written in the prophet Malachi, 1. 2, 3, "I have loved you, saith the Lord. Yet ye say, Whercin hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness." The prophet argues the love of God for the children of Jacob, from the preference which He had given them in the promised land, over the desert country of the children of Esau. For that love, as opposed to hatred, means no more than preference; may be seen in the exhortation of our Lord, that in coming to Him we should "hate" in the comparison all whom we ought in reality most to love on earth.

If however under God's general promises to a whole family, He selects for their fulfilment, as the Jews could not help owning that He had, one single branch; if likewise in that single branch a large portion might still be excluded; if the seed be blessed, as assuredly it is, provided one out of twelve children, or one out of two, or one out of twins, or some thousands out of many people, enjoy the privileges proposed, and attain to the promised heaven; if this be so, yet how, it might be asked, how can the selection be accounted for, how can it be reconciled with the righteousness of God? To this question the apostle answers, that God reserves the right of choosing, in such cases, to Himself. And to the Jews in particular he replies, that God had in their Scriptures plainly taught them that this right was his, and his alone. For so He had declared to Moses of Himself, when at the request of this great prophet He proclaimed his name, and made all his goodness pass before him. See Exod. 33. 19. And so it had been the case in the choice of Jacob, which was determined not by the very earnest will of Isaac, nor by Esau's running for the venison, but by God that shewed mercy. And so in the case of Pharaoh it had been shown that God not only selects whom He will for the manifestation of his distinguishing mercy, but also raises up into pitiable eminence those, whom He chooses to make signal instances of his wrath against unbelief and sin.

"Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will?" If the perversity of our hearts we shall be apt so to construe this doctrine of God's merciful election "not of works, but of him that calleth," as if by way of excuse for our transgressions we might plead an irresistible decree of God. But this would be to reply "against God." This would be that very "answering again," which in the servant is forbidden towards his master on the earth, see, Tit. 2. 9, much more to our Master which is in heaven. "Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?" Shall the vessel question the potter's right to make of the same lump one unto honour, and another unto dishonour? Or is the potter answerable for all the evil uses to which the vessels, whether honourable or dishonourable, may be put? Far from it. Let us rather be contented that God hath made us fit for any use at all. Let us be thankful that, having been made as Gentiles to dishonour, we have been called, in default of his first chosen people, to an honourable place in his regard. Let us be watchful, that now when we have become vessels of honour, we make not ourselves only the more fitted for destruction.

The reason of God's forbearance and of his mercy.

22 What if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath || fitted to destruction :

23 And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory,

24 Even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles ?

25 As he saith also in Osee, I will call them my people, which were not my people ; and her beloved, which was not beloved.

26 ² And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people ; there shall they be called the children of the living God.

27 Esaias also crieth concerning Israel, ³ Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved :

28 For he will finish * the work, and cut it short in righteousness : because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.

29 And as Esaias said before, ' Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrha.

30 What shall we say then ? That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith.

31 But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness.

32 Wherefore ? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled at that stumblingstone ;

33 As it is written, ' Behold, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence : and whosoever believeth on him shall not † be ashamed.

|| Or, made up. ¹ Hos. 2. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 10. ² Hos. 1. 10. ³ Is. 10. 22, 23. * Or, the account.

§ 465. It is by faith that we must follow after righteousness.

The figure of the potter, and of his power over the clay, is here further carried on. And we have a plain declaration of the objects, for which God put a distinction between the children of the promise, and the rest ; for which He shews mercy on some, whilst others are hardened in their sins ; for which whilst some of the Jews believed, others were rejected, and the Gentiles called. All these things were done for the manifestation of God's wrath and power on the one hand, his wrath against sin, his power to punish it ; and on the other hand for the purpose of making known "the riches of his glory," the abundance of his goodness, greatness, and love, "on the vessels of mercy," on those whom He has made unto honour, "which he had afore prepared unto glory." And who these are St. Paul next declares, "Even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles." So that all whom God has called so as that they hear the call, all those, whether Jews or Gentiles, who believe, these are they whom out of all others God has chosen, for the manifestation of the riches of his glory. Oh how great is God's goodness that He thus has called us ! Oh how earnest should be our endeavours and our prayers that we through grace may obey this call !

Hosea and Isaiah had forewarned the Jews, that others would become beloved in their stead, that others and not God's people should be "called the children of the living God," that out of the countless multitude of the children of Israel a remnant only should be saved, and that in the summary execution of God's judgments the whole people, were it not for the remnant left, would be extinct even as Sodom and Gomorrha. These cities from which only Lot and his daughters escaped, these aptly represent to us the perilous condition of God's own highly favoured people. These shew us how few of those whom He loves the best, requite his favour with affection ; how great is the amount of pride, perversity, and sin, which He has to bear with in those whom He has most graciously entreated ; how fit for destruction those vessels may become which seem to have been made for honour.

"What shall we say then ?" Thus St. Paul at length introduces the painful statement which he was compelled to make ; "That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith. But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness." And thus he accounts for their failure, "Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law." This was the stumbling stone at which they stumbled. This is the rock of offence over which still they fall ; and which still is the cause of downfall and destruction to many who are professors of the faith. To follow after the law of righteousness as the Jews did, is the way to fail as they. To conceive that we can be saved by virtue of our works, to put our trust in what we do, to suppose that we are chosen either for our work's sake, or for our faith's sake, or for any thing save only for the sake of Christ, to suppose that we are chosen to God's exclusive favour, to suppose that we are so chosen that we cannot fall, this is the way the Jews followed after the law of righteousness ; this is the way they fell. Let us then follow after it by faith. Let us look to God's promise, and believe. Let us contemplate the riches of his glory, and be persuaded that all unworthy as we are, He is pleased to confer them on us for his Son's sake. Let us believe on his Son, that He died for our sins, that by his death we live, that by his Spirit we walk in newness of life. Lord, grant that we may thus believe on Thee ! Grant that thus believing we may not be ashamed ! Give us a holy confidence, an humble trust, both that Thou hast died for our salvation, and that we shall henceforth live to thy honour and glory !

The righteousness of the Law and of the Gospel compared.

1 Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved.

2 For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.

3 For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

4 For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

5 For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, 'That the man which doeth those things shall live by them.

6 But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, 'Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above:)

7 Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.)

8 But what saith it? 'The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach;

9 That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.

10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

11 For the scripture saith, 'Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 'For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

§ 466. Salvation, through Christ, by faith, proclaimed to all.

That "there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek," in respect to the ground and means of salvation, that only through Christ they can be saved, and that by believing in Christ both could be saved alike, this had been already hinted, ch. 3. 22, and is here fully and explicitly revealed. And here because the doctrine to be insisted on was particularly offensive to the Jews, St. Paul again declares his earnest affection for his brethren, telling them that his "heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved." Let this teach us in what method we might best express our affection for each other. Let this determine us, if there be any whom we love on earth, to pray, frequently, and earnestly, to desire whilst we pray, to desire from our inmost hearts, that they may be saved. Lord, grant to them which are most near and dear to us that they may escape the wrath to come! Lord, make us feel how near and dear to us, are all, even the most estranged of our fellow creatures! Lord, give to all in thy good time the knowledge of the truth and grace unto salvation!

The apostle further testifies his affection for his kinsmen by making all allowances for their grievous unbelief. "I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." He then describes for their information and for the lasting instruction of the Christian church, the error into which the Jews had fallen. Let not us then be ignorant of God's righteousness. Let not us go about to establish our own righteousness. Let not us refuse to submit ourselves unto the righteousness of God. What this is, we are here most plainly told. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." And in like manner the same apostle has written to the Corinthians, of our Lord, that He is "made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." 1 Cor. 1. 30. So that "the righteousness of God" is the righteousness which Christ is "made unto us," even his living and dying in our behalf, his perfect obedience unto the Law, both in his life and in his death.

And how is it that we are to profit by this righteousness of God? By submitting ourselves unto it. By humbly receiving all that God has been pleased to give us, by heartily believing all that Christ has vouchsafed to do for us. This is the distinction here insisted on between the law as revealed by Moses, and "the righteousness which is of faith." The former promised life to "the man which doeth those things;" a course beyond the compass of human strength. The latter brings home salvation close within our reach. We need not to ask, "Who shall ascend into heaven?" or, "Who shall descend into the deep?" The word is nigh to us, even in the mouth and in the heart of every one that believeth. If we confess with our mouths the Lord Jesus, if we believe in our hearts "that God hath raised him from the dead," we shall be saved. For it is not possible to believe really in the heart without peace and joy in believing, without righteousness resulting as the fruit of faith, without thankfulness, and love, and obedience. "And with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." The outward profession of the faith, maintained in the presence of the gainsayers, upheld against the fear of suffering or of death, and consisting not only in an edifying conversation, but also in a holy life, this is evidence that we are not ashamed of Christ or of his words; this is surety that He will not be ashamed of us when He cometh in the presence of his Father and of the holy angels. See Mark 8. 38. What glad tidings of great joy are these! What good news that should be communicated to all people! We need but to believe, and to believe heartily. We need but to call upon the name of the Lord, and to call with devout and earnest prayer. And behold, there is no difference, whether Jew or Greek, whether heathen or mahometan, or Christian, "The same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him." Oh, let us not then go about to establish our own righteousness! Oh, let us submit ourselves, in all humility of heart, unto this "righteousness of God."

That both Jews and Gentiles have been by God amply called.

14 How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

15 And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, 'How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!'

16 But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, 'Lord, who hath believed †our || report?'

17 So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

18 But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, 'their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.'

19 But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, 'I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you.'

20 But Esaias is very bold, and saith, 'I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me.'

21 But to Israel he saith, 'All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.'

§ 467. How neglectful we have been in our calling of each other.

The glad tidings of the Gospel, that free gift of God in Christ Jesus unto all mankind without distinction, are expressed in these few affecting words, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Ver. 13. "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" The kind of calling, the kind of devout utterance, the prayer and thankfulness here intended, require in the worshipper that he must first believe. And for this he must first hear, must be informed and exhorted by a preacher. And the preacher must be sent. The preacher must be sent by those who were sent by Christ, must bear the commission of Him who is the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. And preachers thus commissioned must be sent forth by those who know the Gospel, to those who know it not; must fulfil by their numbers, diligence, and faithfulness, by the excellence of the doctrines they preach, by the fulness of the pardon which they proclaim, must fulfil the description of the prophet: "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!"

In this way would God have all to be called. In this way would God have all to be saved. All we who know of his boundless love, are instructed, as one of our first of duties, to make that love known unto our brethren. We are bound to urge it on the attention of those with whom we live, in proportion as we have reason to apprehend that they give it not the heed which it requires. We are bound to help according to our ability, in the best of all measures that are devised for telling it out amongst strangers at a distance, and amongst the heathen in foreign lands, that Christ died to save sinners. We are bound to help in maintaining preachers of the Gospel, to be sent forth in such numbers as that all may hear, and so fitted for their holy work, that all who hear may both earnestly believe, and effectually call upon the name of the Lord. This is the provision which has been made by God for propagating throughout the world the glad tidings of the Gospel, a succession of ministers ordained to preach, a written record of what they are to teach, a commandment frequently and affectionately urged on all who hear their words, to make them to be heard still by more.

This is the way in which God calls all mankind. Though in sorrow and shame we must confess that "they have not all obeyed the gospel." And so Esaias had foretold, when he asked of the many kindreds of the earth to whom these glad tidings were directed, "Lord, who hath believed our report?" From lack of faith there has been lack of obedience. We who have first heard, have not believed so heartily as to take the pains to tell the truth to others. Hence they have not heard. Hence they have not believed. Hence they have continued strangers to the word of God. "But I say, Have they not heard?" Have the nations of the earth been altogether kept in ignorance of saving truth? Far from it. It has been spread abroad very generally through most of them, though not generally and thoroughly adopted in any. That which was said by the Psalmist of the stars in the firmament is true also of the preachers of the Gospel. There is no quarter of the earth, there is no end of the world, which their words have not reached, where their sound has not been heard. Had but their report been uniformly believed, had but they who heard obeyed, had but these been believed in their turn, long ere this must the whole world have both known the truth, and loved it, and kept it, and obeyed it. Would that we who live at the very centre of the light, may labour by prayer and faith and diligence, to maintain in purity its brightness at home, and to kindle ever in fresh vigour its warmth and radiance abroad!

"But I say, Did not Israel know?" Can the Jews complain, that whilst other nations have been enlightened, they have not had help and guidance towards the truth? Far from it. They have had both prophets and apostles. They have had both warnings and promises. They have had besides their own, the calling of the Gentiles, to provoke them to a holy emulation. Let us therefore take warning from their wilful deafness. Let us watch, that God never stretch forth his hands all day long to us in vain. And least of all let us ever plead that we knew no better, when God has given us for our lot the highest eminence of knowledge, the most pure profession of faith, the sanction of the civil power for the support of our church, and the most primitive and apostolical constitution for its own abiding strength.

That God has not cast away his people.

1 I say then, Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.

2 God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the scripture saith of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying,

3 ¹ Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life.

4 But what saith the answer of God unto him? ² I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

5 Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace.

9 And David saith, ¹⁰ Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumblingblock, and a recompence unto them:

10 ¹¹ Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back away.

If we expect too much, we are sure to be disappointed; and in our pride of heart we are then apt to complain, and to think that we have nothing, because we have not every thing. Thus the Jews were inclined to reason, If we are not to be saved by virtue of being Jews; if the Gentiles can be saved even as we, if they "which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness," whilst "Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness;" ch. 9. 30, 31; then God has cast away his people. But this follows not. God does not save them in the way they chose for themselves; but He saves them notwithstanding. "For I also am an Israelite," replies St. Paul, meaning, and yet I am a Christian, yet I am in a state of salvation, yet I trust to be saved through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ. And not I only, he goes on to argue, but many others who like me believe, hundreds and thousands of Jews, who in all parts of the world embrace the glad tidings of the Gospel, and thus constitute the very people whom God foreknew. "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew." All things, however future unto us, are always present unto Him with whom we have to do. And the many children of Israel according to the flesh, who shall be saved through Christ, by faith, fully justify all the promises and prophecies of God, against the cavils of their unbelieving brethren.

"Wot ye not what the scripture saith of Elias?" Here was a like case of human ignorance, as contrasted with the knowledge of Him who knoweth all. This prophet, like other prophets, was in error as a man. And because he knew of no other worshipper of Jehovah, he concluded that he alone was left. But neither here had God cast away his people which He foreknew. He had seven thousand reserved to Himself who had never "bowed the knee to the image of Baal." He had seven thousand, whom He knew of, though the prophet knew not, whom before the prophet knew of them, nay before the prophet or they themselves were born, God foreknew.

"Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace." There are many whom God has not cast off, many Jews who are still his people; though not as the rest expect, by merit of their own, but by the free gift of Him who has reserved them to Himself. "And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace." So that the Jews must not count themselves cast off by God, because He would not save them as they desired, by their own deservings. For this would have been no free gift from God. And the grace which has come by Jesus Christ, see John 1. 17, would be then not worthy of the name; even as work also is not work, in the sense intended by the Jews, under the dispensation of grace. And as for the discomfiture of these vain expectations, and the casting away of many, though not of all, the Jews; this was fully consistent with the promises of God. For it was no more than He foreknew, when He promised; it was no more than by his prophets He had foretold.

What folly then was this, for Israel to persist in seeking that which God never meant to give, exclusive salvation for themselves, and that by their own deservings! And how like unto their foolishness is ours, if we devise for ourselves a righteousness of our own, and if, when in this we fail, as fail we must, if we suppose, in the despair of mortified conceit, that therefore we are cast off by God! No, rather the more we fall short in doings of our own, let us the more turn our attention to what God has wrought for us; let us the more be inclined to come unto Him with faith, believing in his promises, convinced that they belong unto ourselves, glad to think that they are extended to our neighbours, and happy to find that through his help, and out of love to Him who so greatly loved us, we can do what before we found impossible.

The fall of the Jews made profitable to the Gentiles.

11 I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy.

12 Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the || diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness?

13 For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office:

14 If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are in flesh, and might save some of them.

15 For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?

16 For if the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches.

17 And if some of the branches be broken off, and hon, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in *among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree;

|| Or, decay, or, loss.

18 Boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in.

20 Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not highminded, but fear:

21 For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

22 Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.

23 And they also, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again.

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree?

* Or, for them.

§ 469. That we should be not high minded, but fear.

Though God has not cast away his people, though the apostle expresses horror at the thought, he admits that many of them had cast away themselves. And hence he supposes that an objector might next ask, "Have they stumbled that they should fall?" Is their fall helpless, hopeless? Has their stumbling been devised, as the words of David might seem to imply; on purpose for them to be cut off for ever? To this objection he again replies, "God forbid." Rather, he argues, their fall is made the occasion of the Gospel being preached abroad more widely to the Gentiles. And thence the Jews also, being provoked to jealousy, stirred up to a holy rivalry, might probably themselves become believers. And this was a consideration which urged St. Paul to more than common zeal amongst the Gentiles, the hope that he might provoke to this profitable emulation them that were his own flesh, and might be an instrument in God's hands for saving some of them. Oh how ought we in all our rivalry with each other, and in all our own success with which God is pleased to bless us, how ought we to aim at this single object, to provoke one another to Christian excellence! And how, if we were to partake of the apostle's spirit, how should we strive to turn to account our own prosperity as Gentile Christians, to the conversion of the unbelieving Jews!

Such an event is here regarded by St. Paul as no less than "life from the dead." And probably he means that it will accompany a great revival of true piety, answerable to the pure faith, devotion, and obedience, of the first converts who were Jews, and of him who was the father of the faithful. And such an event is shewn not to be impossible; considering that it was by reason of unbelief that the branches were broken off, and that if they abide not in unbelief God is able, as well as willing, to graft them in again. Nay further, it is highly probable. For if we who were but aliens, of a stock like to a wild olive tree, were yet grafted in through God's abundant kindness, "how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree?" How much more shall the seed of Abraham according to the flesh become his children according to the Spirit, become followers of his faith, and partakers of that inheritance which is no less theirs than ours!

Never then let us boast against these unhappy branches. Never let us forget how many families of the Jews became believers at the first, and are now counted amongst the families of the Christians. Never let us think more highly of ourselves than as children of perverse idolaters, most graciously received into the comprehensive love of the God whom our fathers most grievously dishonoured. Never let us suppose that we do any honour to our Lord, by treating with cruelty, neglect, or scorn, the broken branches of his beloved vine. Never let us conceive that we can more faithfully do his will, than in helping by our kindness and our zeal, by our alms and by our prayers, to prepare these estranged children of the promise, for God to graft them in. And for ourselves, as we survey these wondrous dealings of Him, who out of evil bringeth good, let us be not high minded, but fear. Let us observe both the goodness and the severity of God. Let us note how his goodness towards ourselves is guarded from abuse by the salutary caution, "if thou continue in his goodness." Let us tremble to think of the fearful alternative "otherwise thou also shalt be cut off."

The blindness of the Jews is only for a time.

25 For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that || blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.

26 And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, 'There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob:

27 For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.

28 As concerning the Gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sake.

29 For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

30 For as ye in times past have not * believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief:

31 Even so have these also now not † believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy.

32 For God hath ‡ concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

33 O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!

34 * For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor?

35 Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again?

36 For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

§ 470. That we may not judge God's ways by ours.

We have already learnt the possibility, nay probability, that the unbelieving portion of the Jews, will regain their place in the church of God. We have it here further revealed that this event will certainly take place. The blindness which has happened to this part of Israel, will cease when the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in, when there are no longer any great numbers left who would believe. And then "all Israel shall be saved." The prophecies which relate to their distinction, as the elect people of God, shall be fulfilled in the signal conversion of those many Jews, dispersed throughout the world, who have hitherto rejected the Messiah. Then shall the Deliverer "turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Then shall they no longer cleave to righteousness of their own, but learn to put their faith in Him, who according to his covenant will take away their sins.

And this mystery St. Paul reveals to us, on purpose to humble our hearts, lest we should be wise in our own conceits; lest we should imagine like the Jews, that it is for any worth or work of ours that God has chosen us in Christ unto redemption. No, as it is for the fathers' sake that this remnant of the Jews is beloved, and that, not because their fathers deserved this at God's hand, but because He shewed mercy unto them; so it is not because we deserved it, but because God freely chose to give it us; because in the enmity of the Jews He determined to make manifest his goodness to the Gentiles, therefore it is that we have now obtained mercy through their unbelief. Thus for our sakes, or at least for our gain, have they been enemies. And thus from their rejection we ought to learn how little we can trust in any deservings of our own, or in any supposed exclusive favour of the Lord. Nay, it was for their sakes rather, and not ours, it was for their gain rather than for ours, it was that they through our mercy may obtain mercy, that we in their default having been admitted to the covenant, may so much the more stir up them to receive it gladly; this we see is the object, this is the end which God in all these dealings is bringing round. "For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all." Oh how greatly must He glory in forgiveness, if He permits even the worst of evils, sin, with a view to the exercise of mercy; if He suffers his chosen people, a great part of them, to be blind to the light He sheds abroad, to be deaf to the glad tidings He declares, to abide for ages an example to mankind of obstinate rebellion against Himself; intending all the while so much more largely and freely, undeservedly and unexpectedly, to forgive their wickedness, and take away their sins!

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" What folly then in man to try to fathom all, to try to make all that God reveals agree with what we suppose to be right reason and the truth! As if we could know the whole design of God! As if we had been taken into his counsels! As if our views of justice were the standard by which his righteous dealings might be tried! As if we had done or could do any thing for Him, which makes Him owe us the recompense of reward! Nay, it is to Him we owe the faculties with which we aim to judge. It is to Him we owe the will with which we choose to serve the Lord. The hands we work with, the eyes we see with, the minds with which we know, the hearts with which we love, these are of his making, these are his free gift. And these, when we had made them perverse and at enmity with Him, these He has restored by his free gifts of grace, to the power of fulfilling all his will. Thus "of him, and through him" "are all things." Oh that all things might in us be "to him" also! Oh that all we have, and all we are, all our powers and abilities, all our zeal and affection, might be devoted unto Him, to whom we owe them all; "to whom be glory for ever. Amen."

God's mercy must move us to serve Him.

1 I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.

2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.

3 For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think † soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.

4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office :

5 So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.

6 Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith ;

7 Or ministry, let us wait on our ministering : or he that teacheth, on teaching ;

8 Or he that exhorteth, on exhortation : he that † giveth, let him do it * with simplicity ; he that ruleth, with diligence ; he that sheweth merey, with cheerfulness.

‡ Or, imparteth.

"I beseech you therefore brethren." Because of God's so great love for both Jews and Gentiles, because there is "now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus," ch. 8. 1, because the Gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," ch. 1. 16, therefore must believers offer unto God the reasonable service of a holy life. And this consequence St. Paul is not content to urge in argument, by way of answer to the objections, which were likely to be made to his doctrine of God's mercy in Christ. He devotes this whole conclusion of his Epistle, to pressing upon the consciences of believers, their several Christian duties, one by one ; by way of shewing us both how we ought to walk, and that it is on a right faith that we ought to build this holy practice. The more then we are persuaded that God has loved us, let us the more shew forth our love for Him. The more we feel the delight of being delivered from the observances of the Law, let us the more freely offer unto God the sacrifice, not of bulls and goats, but of our own bodies, whilst yet we live, to be holy, acceptable unto Him ; and of our own minds, to be not fashioned after the ways of the world we live in, but to be renewed after the image of Him who has created us anew in Christ Jesus. This is the consequence here urged by the apostle, that we should give up our whole selves to God. And this is the ground on which he urges us ; "by the mercies of God." By the abundant free gift of the Father, by the precious death of the Son, by the gracious coming of the Holy Ghost, by the forgiveness of sins, by the resurrection unto life eternal ; "I beseech you therefore brethren."

And which particular duty does St. Paul here first point out ? To which would he have us give most early diligence ? Humility. Not to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, to think humbly of ourselves as compared with one another, and yet more to humble ourselves in the sight of God ; this is a thing to be attended to at the beginning of our course, and to be kept stedfastly in view unto the end of it. Let us think therefore of ourselves soberly, according as God has dealt to each of us the measure of faith. No more. Not according to our natural abilities ; these are trifles. Not according to our earthly possessions ; these must vanish away. But according to our faith and grace, according to the measure of our holiness and love ; these are inestimable gifts ; these are beyond the highest value we can put upon them. And yet assuredly the more we have of these we shall the more think soberly of ourselves. For we shall the more deeply feel, that they are dealt unto us by God ; and that we have nothing which we have not received. See 1 Cor. 4. 7.

This instruction for sobriety of mind, is set forth by St. Paul at the outset, with especial reference to the many marvellous gifts, which at that time abounded in the church, and to the different offices of trust and authority, which the church must at all times have to share amongst its members. These would be sure to offer great temptation to the pride and passions of sinful men. And therefore they who had the gift of prophesying, or interpreting the will of God to man, are here warned not to neglect "the proportion of faith," not to fall short of the measure of their gift, which is according to the measure of their faith. And likewise ministers in their ministering, and "he that teacheth," the instructors of the young, who are so tenderly committed by our Lord to the watchful care of his disciples, see Matt. 18. 10, 14, and "he that exhorteth," whether to young or old we fulfil the duty enjoined on all, of exhorting one another, see Heb. 3. 13, and "he that giveth," and "he that ruleth," and "he that sheweth merey ;" all these in their several offices will be enabled to act with cheerfulness, diligence, and simplicity, with a single eye to God's glory, and with a kind concern for each other ; if only according to the rule here given, and on the motives here set forth, they attain to think soberly of themselves. Let us then each learn to look upon ourselves, as single and subordinate members of one body in Christ. Let us each feel that we are members one of another. Let us be aware that no one of us can be so profitable to the rest, as the rest are ever necessary to us. Let us bear in mind that we owe more to each other, than the others can owe to us. Let us above all remember that we owe all to God.

Love is what God is. See 1 John 4. 8. Love is what is revealed of God in the Gospel. Love is what in the Gospel is enjoined on man. Do we believe that God has so loved us, as to forgive our sins, to give his Son to die for us, and for his sake to count us righteous? Let then our love be without pretence. Let it be unaffected. Let it be real. Let us not be content with merely not doing evil; let us abhor it. Let us not be satisfied with merely doing good; let us cleave to it. Let us cling to doing it. Let us rather do it than not. Let us rather cut off our right hand, pluck out our right eye, than not devote hands, and eyes, and every member that we have, to proving or making manifest in our lives, "that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Ver. 2.

This love we must prove by the respect and attention which we pay to each other's wishes, at the sacrifice of our own. And in this our work of love, we must not be slothful. But whatsoever we have to do, doing it out of regard to the welfare of each other, we must do it with the ardour, zeal, and vigour, of them who are aware that they are serving Christ. What an awakening view is this of all our earthly duties! What an encouragement to perseverance! What a support in weariness! We are working the will of Him that redeemed us. We are forwarding the welfare of each other. We are doing so; if only we work in love, if only we walk by faith. We have but thus to reckon within ourselves, we have but thus to feel, to purpose, to pray that we may thus believe and love; and behold we are now counted to be "serving the Lord."

And how greatly should we now rejoice in hope, when we are convinced that we are working for a Master which is in heaven! How patient should we be in tribulation, how instant in prayer, when we are persuaded that our Master is our Saviour also, that He laid down his life to save our souls, and that He now lives to make intercession in our behalf! Our worldly goods, how little should we value them, except as they may enable us to entertain the poor, the stranger, and the fatherless; and especially to relieve the wants of those who are of the same household of faith! Our trouble, and the persecutions or wrongs we meet with, or any curses that may be heaped upon our heads, how surely would these lead us to ask a blessing from the Lord, for those who herein know not what they do; that they too may learn, ere it be too late, to "bless, and curse not!" How light would our own afflictions thus become! How deeply should we feel for the sorrows of our brethren! How really and thoroughly should we "rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep!" With sympathy in the feelings of each other, with anxiety to agree in the convictions of our minds, how ready should we be to condescend to the very lowliest of our brethren, how far from trying to exalt ourselves, how far from being wise in our own conceits!

But the triumph of true Christian temper is further to be insisted on, in respect of our behaviour towards our enemies. First we must "recompense no man evil for evil." But is this all our duty? By no means. We must think beforehand, and watch, and take pains to do nothing that shall give an enemy provocation, nothing that shall tempt our brother to be our enemy. Thus, as far as in us lies, as far as our conduct and our feelings go, we must live at peace with all, even with them that are bent on contention and strife. But it may not be always possible to prevent their violence. It may happen that whilst we are labouring for peace, they molest, insult, or injure us. Then comes in the next rule for our direction, "give place unto wrath." We must contend by yielding. We must oppose by giving way. And lastly, if we would be sure of victory, we must do more, we must return good for evil; we must "overcome evil with good." Food given to our enemy in his hunger, drink in his thirst, help in his necessity, and compassion in his distress; are not these the coals of kindly fire, which will best melt his reluctant heart? For is it not by means like these, even by forgiveness of our sins, and by counting us, though sinners, righteous, even by Christ dying for them that nailed Him to the cross, is it not by this undeserved mercy, heaped freely on our unwilling heads, that God seeks to recover our affection to Himself?

The duty of subjects to the higher powers.

1 Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are || ordained of God.

2 Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same:

4 For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

5 Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake.

6 For for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing.

7 Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

How great are the advantages of civil government! How many and grievous are the ills from which we are defended by "the powers that be;" by kings and other magistrates, who under their authority, are a terror to evil works! Let us but imagine for a moment, all law suspended. Let us but conceive all authority suppressed. Let us suppose the evil passions of the violent and profane, of the covetous, revengeful, and impure, let loose upon the peaceable and industrious, on the weak, the unprotected, the modest, the refined. What horrors unspeakable must ensue! What destruction of property, what waste of life! What losses to the rich, what aggravation of poverty to the poor! What violating of all we hold most dear on earth! What offensive blasphemy against the majesty of Him, with whom we hope to dwell for ever in heaven! From all this, civil government is the means of saving us. And therefore for this reason, though there were no other, we should be glad to "be subject unto the higher powers." But it is for conscience sake that the Christian must be subject; it must be out of love for man, and out of love for God. Subjection to the government established in the land, is a part of that service which we must delight to render to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And it is on this footing, not that of mere advantage to ourselves, that the apostle rests this important duty. "The powers that be are ordained of God." And this he declares in this Epistle to the Romans, who then laboured under the oppression of one of the worst of governors. For in all ordinances of God, it is the ordinance that we ought to look to, and not the man; not the personal character of that frail human creature, to whom an office is entrusted, but the fact that it is entrusted to him, and the evidence that it is entrusted to him by One, in whom alone is no frailty, and who alone does all things well. And here we learn from Scripture that this is the case with established governments; with those rulers, whatsoever name or title they may bear, whom we find in possession of lawful authority. Being assured therefore that so it is, let us take pains in discharging the duties which St. Paul enjoins, as following on this divine ordinance.

These duties are, subjection to the authority of rulers, and contribution to the expenses of their government. Subjection to their authority usually presents no difficulty to a Christian. "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil." Though the laws which they administer in a mixt society, can seldom be free from taint of worldly wisdom, they enjoin what in the main is good, they restrain what in the main is evil. And though the Christian might wish many things in the state to be more in harmony with the Gospel than they are, he will seldom, at least in this our country, find any thing imposed upon himself, which the Gospel would denounce as sin. And therefore he is an obedient subject, and not only so, but an attached friend, to the established government. For its many excellent uses, and yet more for its high origin from heaven, he respects it, loves it, and honestly obeys it. For its faults, if faults he cannot help discerning, he grieves at heart, he intercedes in secret prayer, and he interposes whatever influence he lawfully can for good, consistently with quietness and peace. But the issue he is content to leave with God; knowing that he is himself but a stranger and pilgrim upon the earth, happy to do what good he can, and to enjoy what blessings he may, in the land of his pilgrimage, but intent, with most deep anxiety, to reach unto that heavenly city, "whose builder and maker is God." Heb. 11. 10.

"For this cause pay ye tribute also." This is the second duty we owe to our governors. And this we owe, because they are God's ministers, appointed by his ordinance to wait on these very things, the execution of the laws, and the preservation of the public peace. Hence the rest are bound to supply their wants, to maintain them in abundance, and to provide them with such help and means, as are needful for carrying on the work they have in hand. Never therefore let us meanly avoid bearing our full share of public expenses. Never let us evade the payment of what we owe, whether it be tribute or honour, whether money or personal service, to the use of the state. Never let us pay grudgingly or of necessity. Ever let us pay cheerfully, as unto the Lord.

Love is the fulfilling of the law.

8 Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.

9 For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

10 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.

11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

12 The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light.

13 Let us walk || honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying.

14 But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

|| Or, decently.

The apostle had been speaking of paying tribute, and enjoining that we should render to all their dues, on the ground of our owing all to God our Saviour. Hence he takes occasion to add this general direction: "Owe no man any thing." Never wilfully be in debt to any one. Never contract a debt which you are likely to have difficulty in paying. Never take that which you cannot pay for. Never use that which you have not paid for, except by the full consent of him to whom you owe; except with ample security to yourselves that you could pay, and as soon as may be required. Never covet that which you cannot afford to buy. Never look at or look out for that, which you may not safely covet. This is our way to owe no man any thing. This is the way to be never in debt.

And yet there is one debt which we may be glad to owe. There is one demand which we never fully pay. And this is, that we love one another. "For he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law." And this is what we never do. This therefore is what we always owe. Always we are under covenant not to commit adultery, not to kill, not to steal, not to bear false witness, not to covet. Always we are bounden and obliged to work no ill to our neighbour, nay, to love our neighbour as ourselves. For this comprehends all the other commandments. This comprehends all those which have been mentioned. Should we wish to have our own goods coveted, our servants, our house, wife, or husband? Should we wish to have false witness preferred against ourselves? Should we wish that any should steal from us, any kill us, any inflict on us that most cruel of all wrongs which is inflicted in committing adultery? Should we wish, could we consistently with our allowable self love, could we bear to think of wishing for such harm unto ourselves? If not, let us take heed that we do no such harm, purpose no such harm, against our neighbours. For this is what we owe them, to love them as ourselves. And our love must be unfeigned, unpretended. It must be felt, and also we must act upon it. And the more we act on it, we shall still love them more. The more we pay, we shall still have more to owe.

"And that, knowing the time." Here is a new consideration introduced, one of weight, to add to the love of God and man, to the sense of God's love towards ourselves, though alone it would not be able to move our hearts unto affection, or our hands to activity and well doing. "Now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Each day, each hour, the salvation of his soul is brought nearer to the faithful convert. Each hour, each moment of our lives, shortens the remaining period of our night on earth, and hastens on the day when we shall wake in eternity. Oh, who would then be clothed in the works of darkness? Who would not, before arising in that glorious light, wish to cast off the garment spotted by the flesh, and put on the helmet of salvation, the breastplate of righteousness, the sword of the Spirit, the shield of faith? See Eph. 6. 14—17. We shall be here but a short time, at the longest. Whilst we read and listen, the time is running on. And at the end, if we be believers in God's mercy through Christ, we know that we shall dwell with Him in endless glory. And shall we not therefore walk already as they that are in the day? Shall we not at once put on as far as possible the Lord Jesus Christ? Shall we not at once both hide the shame of our sinfulness in the robe of his abundant propitiation, and also fashion the character of our lives after the pattern of his most excellent example? Far be it from us, his redeemed, to walk or to wish to walk in rioting and drunkenness, in chambering and wantonness, in strife and envying! Far be it from us to make "provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." Mercifully our Lord allows us still to minister to its necessities. He teaches us how to use its powers for his honour, even to make it a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. Earnestly let us pray for his assistance, that we may be able to make good, in all we may say and do, in all that we deny ourselves, and in all that we enjoy, this reasonable service which He requires.

God grant that we may glorify Him with our bodies! God grant that we may serve Him from our hearts! God grant that under the sense of his unbounded love, we may love Him from our inmost souls!

9 For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

10 But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for ¹ we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.

11 For it is written, ² As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.

12 So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.

13 Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.

§ 475. That the weak must not judge the strong.

"Doubtful disputations," fierce discussions on obscure points of doctrine, or the forcible imposition of indifferent matters of practice, these were among the evils which arose from the prejudices of the Jews, whether perversely maintained by them, or inconsiderately offended by the Gentiles. Would that in like trifles, often agitated with no less wrath and strife amongst ourselves, we would observe the inestimable rules which the apostle here lays down, for enlightening the consciences of the weak brethren, and for regulating the liberty of the strong! Would that we might hence learn to avoid doubtful disputations, neither by our needless scruples judging wrongfully the innocent, nor hurting the tender conscience of the scrupulous, by the wanton enjoyment of that liberty, wherewith Christ has made us free!

The points in dispute here referred to, were the lawfulness or unlawfulness of some particular kinds of food, and of esteeming some particular days one above another. First then it is to be observed that both were in reality matters of indifference. The Jewish converts probably still adhered to the distinctions in the Law between meats unclean and clean. And in order to be in any case safe, some it appears, ate herbs only. Again, it is not improbable that they persisted in observing their sabbath on the last day of the week, instead of that, or besides that, which was hallowed by the other Christians on the Lord's Day. Now there would be no harm in hallowing two sabbaths. There would be no harm in abstaining from all meats and eating herbs only. And the things would be thus in themselves matters of indifference. And as long as any one was persuaded in his mind that to do them was a duty to God, it was well to do them, it was right, nay necessary to do them, necessary in order to be able to do all "unto the Lord." And far, very far ought we to be from despising any one, who out of a sincere desire to do the will of God, denies himself ever so needlessly, abstains from food which we know, however clearly, to be allowable, or hallows a day or hour, of which we are sure, however positively, that it is open to our worldly work.

But it is chiefly the weak brother who is here first instructed that, however sacred his scruples ought to be in the esteem of the strong, he is by no means to allow himself to judge others by the same measure which he uses for himself. This is that not uncommon union of a weak understanding and a vain censorious heart, which, under the plea of zeal for God's honour, pronounces unjust sentence against man. And thus the scrupulous, who are so ready to take offence, "put a stumblingblock, or an occasion to fall," of the most dangerous kind in the way of their brethren; who seeing so little of charity in their scruples, become insensible to the beauty, excellence, and loveliness, of a really tender conscience. Let therefore the weak brother in any case beware how he judges "another man's servant." Let him remember of all his brother Christians, that it is to Christ that they must stand or fall. Let him consider how vain it is for him to censure those, whom God "hath received," whom God is able to make to stand. It is to the Lord we live, and not to each other, nay, not unto ourselves. It is to the Lord we die. "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." He is our Lord. He is our Judge also. We must all stand before his judgment seat. How then dare we presume to judge each other? How dare they presume on this most manifest offence, who are scrupulous in matters of indifference? How dare they that are less scrupulous judge these? How dare any not be scrupulous, even in small matters, where they are not fully persuaded in their minds. And, of most strange and awful case of all, how dare any, with the Judge so nigh at hand, even dare to commit knowingly, without scruple, the most gross and grievous iniquities.

Further rules for our behaviour in things indifferent.

14 I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is * nothing unclean of itself: but to him that esteemeth any thing to be † unclean, to him it is unclean.

15 But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkeſt thou not ‡ charitably. ¹ Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died:

16 Let not then your good be evil spoken of:

17 For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

18 For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19 Let us therefore follow after the things which § 476. That the strong must not scandalize the weak.

See how large is the liberty revealed to us by our Lord! "There is nothing unclean of itself." "All things indeed are pure." See how aptly this our liberty under the Gospel, compared with the restraints of the Law of Moses, signifies and represents to us, the ability of our Lord to cleanse from sin, the purpose of the Father to count sinners righteous for his sake! But note also how carefully the apostle guards us against abusing this our clearer knowledge, these our more large privileges! "But to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean." "But it is evil to that man who eateth with offence." "He that doubteth, is damned if he eat," is brought in guilty of sin. "Because he eateth not of faith," because he is not persuaded that he may eat lawfully. "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin," whatsoever we do against the convictions of our conscience, whatsoever we do without its free consent, is offence against God. And if this be true even of things indifferent, what must be the ease with things plainly forbidden? What must be the sinfulness of murder, and adultery, of covetousness, uncharitableness, falsehood, and dishonesty, known as they all are to be denounced by God, if it be sin to partake of even allowable enjoyments, so long as we do not know them to be allowable? Oh let us be sure that we allow ourselves in nothing that our consciences condemn! Oh let us spend our chiefest strength, and pray with our most fervent prayers, against those many gross and grievous offences, which all agree to be offences, to which we all are liable, and by some of which we find ourselves most apt to fall.

Uncharitableness, for instance; what a tenfold sinful sin is this! When God has so greatly loved us, when Christ has so earnestly entreated us that we should love one another, then how grievously offensive must it be for us not to walk charitably! And yet how plainly is this offence, in its most offensive form, disregard to the soul of a fellow creature, how plainly is it here brought home to those, who do what they are persuaded is allowable, so as to scandalize those who hold it wrong! "Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died." A fellow creature, nay more, a fellow Christian, one whose hope is founded on the same Saviour's blood, such an one thou hazardest, such an one thou puttest in jeopardy of eternal death, whether by thy meat or by thy drink, whether by thy business or by thy amusement, if thou doest that which, however allowable in itself is evil spoken of in thy brother's ears. And think not to say within thine heart, It is my duty to use my liberty. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink;" thy privileges, thy rights, thy glorious promises relate not to these trifles, require not for their fulfilment that thou shouldst enjoy the whole extent of thine inheritance on earth. "Righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost;" these are thy high calling, these are thy supreme enjoyments; these, involving most unquestionably charity towards man, these render thee a citizen of God's heavenly kingdom. Serve Christ in these things, and thou shalt be acceptable through Him to God, and need give no offence to man. "Follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify other." Eat no flesh, and drink no wine, rather than make thy brother stumble. Rather than make the weak weaker; rather than render narrower to the infirm the narrow path "that leadeth unto life," Matt. 7. 14, suppress within thy breast thy clearer knowledge, put not into practice thy more enlightened convictions; have thy faith "to thyself before God."

Such is the caution requisite even in doing what is right, lest, being supposed wrong, it lead others to offend. Such is the value of our brother's soul; such the care, and forethought, and anxiety, with which we ought to watch for his salvation; that in some cases we must not exercise our faith, under the sanction of our conscience, for fear of encouraging him to do violence to his! How much more then should our apprehension lest we scandalize each other restrain us from all unquestionable sin! How much more must they have to answer for, who scandalize their brethren not by doing good, but by doing evil! How many sins of friends and relatives of those we most live with and best love, may be by this means now lying at our doors! How many souls may we have helped to mislead in error, to harden in iniquity, or to drown in endless perdition!

That we must receive one another, as Christ also received us.

1 We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.

2 Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification.

3 For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, ¹ The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

4 For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope.

5 ² Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another || according to Christ Jesus:

6 That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

7 Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God.

8 Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers:

9 And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, ³ For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name.

10 And again he saith, ⁴ Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11 And again, ⁵ Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles; and laud him, all ye people.

12 And again, Esaias saith, ⁶ There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in him shall the Gentiles trust.

That the strong "ought to bear the infirmities of the weak," and that every one ought to please not only himself but his neighbour for his good to edification; these are rules which might be well applied to all matters in controversy amongst Christians. Oh that we would apply them faithfully! Oh that we would be anxious to please our neighbour rather than ourselves! Oh that we were ever ready to give up our own way, our own opinion, our own customs, for the sake of harmony with those who differ from us! Oh that we would herein follow the example of our Lord, and by learning and practising what is written in the Scriptures, might attain to the assurance of hope! There is but one limit, here set down, to the duty of conciliating our brother. It must be "for his good to edification." We must suppress no truth of doctrine. We must withhold no precept of perfect practice. For thus it was that "Christ pleased not himself." He allowed in us no evil passion. He permitted no pride, no sensuality. But he bore the reproach of the wicked, and yielded up even his life upon the cross. If then by any concession of ours we would win them that differ from us, let us on the one hand be careful that we concede nothing which it is our duty to maintain; but on the other, let us be watchful that we retain nothing which it is our duty to yield. Let us beware lest, under the plea of contending for the truth, we are contending for our own way and will. Let us examine whether it be the real desire of our hearts to be like minded one toward another, according to Christ Jesus. Let us be glad to think it possible, let us help to make it probable, that we, together with those who most widely are at variance, "may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Let us without reserve of jealousy, without assumption of superiority, with free forgiveness, and with cordial love, receive one another, even as Christ also received us to the glory of God."

There are hearts which delight in dissension. There are tempers which can only live in the element of strife. There are parties which are averse to communion with each other, as the Jews of old were towards the Gentiles. These study not to remove, but to strengthen the barriers which keep men from each other. These had almost rather not be comprehended within the pale of Christ's church themselves, than see it widened so as to embrace their opponents. Let such lay to heart the earnest appeal which St. Paul here makes to his reluctant countrymen, that they should receive with cheerfulness their Gentile brethren as fellow heirs of salvation through Christ. "I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." For this it was that our Lord was born of the family of David, of the tribe of Judah, of the seed of Abraham. For this salvation was of the Jews. For this the Saviour of mankind submitted to be circumcised Himself. God's promise must needs be fulfilled. But was this the only reason? or was it not for this cause also, "that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy?" Yes, surely, ye seed of Israel; for so it is written in your own honoured prophets. Moses, see Deut. 32. 43, and David, see Ps. 18. 49, and 117. 1, and Isaiah, see ch. 11. 1, have all very plainly told you, that the Gentiles shall become believers in the Lord. And will ye Jews alone resist his will? Shall ye persist in grudging the free bounty of his love? or shall Christians in like temper grudge each other the enjoyment of Christian privileges, the covenant of grace, the hope of heaven? Far be from us this uncircumcised heart; this exclusive, uncharitable disposition! Far be from us the weakness that would please our brother to his harm, and the selfishness that would refuse to please him for his good! Far be from us all indifference to the truth, and all aversion to those who are in error! Far be from us all prejudice, partiality, and pride, all blindness to our own faults, all bitterness towards those who most widely differ from us, all false shame in speaking the truth, all unwillingness to speak it in love!

St. Paul writeth of his ministry and of his purposes.

13 Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

14 And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given to me of God,

16 That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost.

17 I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God.

18 For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed,

19 Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyrieum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20 Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation:

21 But as it is written, 'To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand.'

22 For which cause also I have been * much hindered from coming to you.

23 But now having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you;

24 Whensoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you: for I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled † with your company.

25 But now I go unto Jerusalem to minister unto the saints.

§ 478. How we ought to hope of ourselves, and give God the glory.

To pray, and on due occasions to express our prayers unto each other, to tell each other how ardently we desire, and how earnestly we intercede at the throne of grace for each other's spiritual welfare, these are amongst the many profitable practices recommended by the example of St. Paul. Let not us then, through false shame refuse to say unto each other, in our Christian correspondence or edifying conversation, "The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." Nor let us be slow to acknowledge in each other the work of God's grace in the heart; but readily be persuaded of our brethren that they are "full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another." To suppose, either of others, or of ourselves, that God's love proclaimed to sinners is felt in all its fulness, and returned after our ability with holiness and zeal, this by some may be thought to savour of presumption. But how much greater is their boldness if they can bear to think, that when God has called they have not hearkened, when God has given they have scorned his gift! To bear the thought of standing on the borders of eternity, with heaven and hell on either side at hand, and no provision made, no assurance of hope entertained, either for others or for themselves, that they shall "escape the wrath to come," 1 Thess. 1. 10, what presumption, what hardihood, what madness is this!

And yet never let us suppose but that we need to be often put in mind, often warned, whilst we think we stand, to take heed lest we fall. See 1 Cor. 10. 12. And let us not fail on due occasions, with humility and tenderness, and full proof of love, to warn and admonish one another. This was St. Paul's method with the Romans. To his prayer he added praise and encouragement. His praise he tempered with admonition. To his admonition he added mention of his own labours in the ministry. And the mention of his own labours and success he qualified, by ascribing all the glory unto Him that giveth the increase. It was not on the strength of his own advantages, but, "because of the grace" given to him of God, that he undertook to put them in mind. The offering up of the Gentiles through his ministry was acceptable, not by reason of his ministering, but because it was "sanctified by the Holy Ghost." If he had whereof to glory, it was "through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God." He would dare to speak of nothing as wrought by himself, but only of what Christ had wrought by him. He would ascribe nothing to his own ability, but all to "mighty signs and wonders by the power of the Spirit of God." He would not "build upon another man's foundation," not preach the Gospel where Christ was known before; and this not in order to have the glory for his own, but in order to shew more plainly that it was God's doing, by fulfilling most exactly the promise of God's word; "To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand." And, in like manner, we doubt not that it was in God he trusted, to see the Romans in the journey which he proposed to take. For to God's providence, and the necessity of doing God's work, he attributed his having hitherto been hindered. And though he needed not to express always the very words, we may be assured that he felt continually aware that it was only "if the Lord will," James 4. 15, only if the Lord were willing that he should compass his desire of seeing those disciples, whom not having seen he longed to visit. May we thus ever feel, and thus frequently express, our entire dependance on our father which is in heaven, for all the good we do, or purpose! May we thus in all labours for each other, and especially in all our efforts for the prevalence of truth, ascribe all the glory to the Lord!

St. Paul requesteth the prayers of the brethren.

26 For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem.

27 It hath pleased them verily; and their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things.

28 When therefore I have performed this, and have sealed to them this fruit, I will come by you into Spain.

29 And I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

30 Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me;

31 That I may be delivered from them that || do not believe in Judæa; and that my service which I have for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints;

32 That I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed.

33 Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

St. Paul prays for his brethren at Rome; and he also beseeches them to pray for him. He prays for them that the God of peace may be with them all. He mentions the very particulars for which he wishes them to pray, that he might be delivered from them in Judæa which believed not, that his service which he had for Jerusalem might be accepted of the saints, and that by the will of God he might come unto them with joy, and might with them be refreshed. These things, therefore, or things like to these, are all fitting objects of our desire. They are all fit matter for our prayers. They are all things for which we might do well to implore the prayers of our brethren. Whether we have dangers to encounter, or duties to discharge; contributions to convey to strangers for their help, or friends to be visited for our mutual joy; we may lawfully desire earnestly to prosper in our undertakings, we do right to pray, and to ask them to pray, for our success. But whensoever for any earthly blessings we make known our requests unto God, let us not fail to call to mind that these are only to be desired, as they may help us towards attaining unto the joys of heaven.

To minister unto the saints, this was St. Paul's errand to Jerusalem. To carry to the poor Christians in Judæa a contribution which had been raised for them in Greece, this was a journey which he might well ask of God to prosper. But why? For his own gratification? Far from it. For the relief of the distressed; for the payment of a debt justly due, the Gentiles having derived so large profit from the Jews; for the establishment of this important principle, that they who derive advantage in spiritual things, should minister in things carnal unto those who thus assist them; these were the objects which the apostle had at heart; these were the motives of his going; these were the grounds on which he thought it meet to pray that his service might be accepted of the saints. Let us in like manner, when we desire of God success in any good work we have in hand on earth, let us make it always the prayer of our lips, and watch that it be the desire of our hearts, not to fulfil our own will and pleasure, but to promote God's glory, and the good of man.

To be "delivered from them that do not believe in Judæa," is another point for which St. Paul desires the prayers of the Romans in his behalf. The gifts which he had to carry for the relief of the believers, would only aggravate, he was well aware, the wrath and jealousy of his unbelieving countrymen. How fiercely on this occasion their fury raged, may be seen in the Acts of the Apostles. See chap. 21—24. There also we may see how meekly and prudently, and yet also firmly and faithfully, St. Paul behaved under the most cruel persecution. No wonder that he was enabled to conduct himself aright, when he prepared himself by praying unto God for help, and by securing the prayers of his fellow Christians! No wonder that his prayers were heard, when they were offered out of regard to the cause of Christ; when they were accompanied by prudence, fortitude, and zeal; when they were prompted not by selfish fear, but by concern for his unbelieving kinsmen, both that they might not be guilty of his blood, and that he might be spared to persuade them to believe.

"That I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed." This is the third of the requests here mentioned. And this meeting to commune with those we love, to joy together in the blessings we receive, and to be refreshed by the society, help, and comfort of each other, this also is a fit object for us to desire in our prayers; so it be "by the will of God," if it be asked only so far as God sees fit to give; only so far as He who knows all, knows to be most for our good. Friendship and domestic happiness, the chiefest of earthly blessings, the source of purest earthly joys, even these must not engross our affections; even these must not take precedence in our thoughts, before the will of our Father which is in heaven. Thankful we ought to be for gifts so excellent, watchful to profit by their use, and ready still to bless the name of the Lord, when it pleases Him to refuse or to take them away. Never therefore may we murmur, if hindered in our plans for this most welcome refreshing of the heart! Never may we repine if after having it for a while we are called upon to part with it for ever! Never may we consider any pleasure we have here to be comparable with that of loving God. Never may we love father or mother, brother or sister, husband or wife, more deeply, or affectionately, than our Saviour Christ!

The salutations of the apostle to his friends at Rome.

1 I commend unto you Phebe our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea:

2 That ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also.

§ 480. That we ought to love some more than others, and whom.

The Gospel enjoins love to all mankind. And it has been thought by some that our affections, thus widely diffused, must be rendered too weak and indistinct for the ardour of private friendship. But see how different is the example of the apostle! See how minutely he here mentions, one by one, those in whose welfare he felt deepest interest, those whom he would recommend to the especial kindness of the Romans, or to whom he would wish his own to be especially conveyed! See how he closes not this inestimable letter, full as it is of motives to the most enlarged charity, without these manifest proofs of his own personal affection for the many Christians here mentioned singly by name. Let us carefully observe the various grounds here specified for the regard he felt; that we may hence learn both how right it is for us to love some more than others, and also who they are whom we ought to love the most.

"A servant of the Church which is at Cenchrea;" "she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also;" this is the character of the first person here mentioned. And for her St. Paul makes interest with the Romans, that they would assist her in whatsoever business she had need of them. Let us then be particularly on the watch to help those who have helped many others, to succour those who have succoured ourselves. "Aquila and Priscilla, my helpers in Christ Jesus;" are the next persons mentioned. And these had not only exposed their lives in defence of the apostle, but had been aiding him in the work which was more dear to him than life, the preaching of the Gospel unto the churches of the Gentiles. See Acts 18. 26. Let us then love those especially who labour for the Lord. "Likewise greet the church that is in their house." Let us then love the families and friends of such as these, and the people with whom they are joined as a Christian congregation. Epenetus is saluted for this reason, that he had been "the firstfruits of Achaia unto Christ." Let us then count them most worthy of our regard, who are forward in devoting themselves to the service of the Lord. "Greet Mary, who bestowed much labour on us." Her work she had bestowed on the apostle and his company, having probably no wealth to give. Let us then honour with a high place in our regard, those who give their time and strength to doing good. "My fellow prisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were in Christ before me;" these things, besides that they were his kinsmen and had been fellow prisoners, entitled Andronicus and Junia to a particular salutation from St. Paul. Let us then prefer those for our friends, who are highly esteemed by the most excellent in the earth. Let us prefer those who are before us in the Lord; having more pleasure in learning, than in teaching, in honouring, than in being honoured of those with whom we live. And in like manner to nearly every salutation there is added some hint of reason profitable to us, as shewing us the chief grounds of preference in the choice of our acquaintances and friends.

And note here how entire is the silence of St. Paul as to the worldly rank, or riches, or abilities, of those to whom he sends his friendly greetings. Not the great, not the noble, not the learned, not the rich, these are not the titles by which he names his friends. But "my beloved in the Lord," "our helper in Christ," "approved in Christ," "which laboured much in the Lord," "chosen in the Lord," "all the saints;" these are they, whom the apostle has selected for the expression of his most kind regard; such as these are they, whom God would have us prefer, whether rich or poor, whether great or lowly, for the most favoured place in our society. Oh that whilst we are on earth we may be blest with friends who will keep us in the way to heaven! Oh that when we shall depart this present life we may there dwell with them in happiness for ever!

How much we must labour for unity.

17 Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them.

18 For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.

19 For your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf: but yet I would have you wise unto that which is good, and || simple concerning evil.

20 And the God of peace shall † bruise Satan under your feet shortly. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

21 Timotheus my workfellow, and Lucius, and Jason, and Sosipater, my kinsmen, salute you.

22 I Tertius, who wrote this epistle, salute you in the Lord.

23 Gaius mine host, and of the whole church, saluteth you. Erastus the chamberlain of the city saluteth you, and Quartus a brother.

24 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

25 Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began,

26 But now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith:

27 To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen.

|| Or, harmless.

§ 481. Glory to God through Jesus Christ.

That we should mark them which cause divisions, is not inconsistent with our judging no man. That we should mark them, and also avoid them, is a part of the love we owe to all. For what evil is so great to all as division? What dishonour is so great towards God, as the strife and contention of those, who know it to be their duty to be one in Him? Let us observe therefore who they are that must be avoided. Not those who differ from ourselves, as some would here too hastily conclude, but those who “cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine” here taught by the apostle. Such as these, whether in point of form they agree with us or differ, such as cause dissension, such as foment and multiply dissent, these we must avoid out of the love we bear to all, out of the honour which we would pay unto our Saviour Christ. And this direction is mentioned by St. Paul, in the midst of his kind greetings to his beloved in the Lord; as if purposely to teach us, how meekly, and humbly, and charitably, we must behave, in any such avoiding of our brethren; and also to instruct us, that such avoiding, if thus duly put in practice, is the greatest of all kindness to those whom we avoid.

For see how grievous is their sin, see how deeply they are themselves concerned to take warning against continuing therein! “They that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.” Who then would not wish to save them from deceiving others? Who would not try to guard them against this grievous self-deceit? And what would be more likely to put them on their guard, than to find themselves most diligently avoided by those, who in the whole tenour of their conduct, are seen to be most kind and tender hearted, most humble, most meek, most charitable? The more the obedience of the Romans was spoken of, the more they were noted for their real faith and love, the apostle was the more anxious to impress on them this duty of avoiding the abettors of dissension. He was glad on their behalf that they were willing to obey. But so much the more he would have them pure in faith, wise to understand the truth, and studiously ignorant of error and iniquity. So much the more, in proportion as they were reputed holy, he would have them manifest their aversion to the author of offences. ~~Ob~~ Let us then watch carefully in all we do, that we sanction no loose indifference to the truth, that we cause no division amongst brethren, and no offence contrary to sound doctrine; that we neither in these things deceive ourselves, nor help to delude these self-deceivers!

“And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.” “The God of hope” was the name mentioned by St. Paul when he would encourage us to have “joy and peace in believing.” Ch. 15. 13. Now that he would impress on us the duty of unity it is “the God of peace.” For in each case it is to God that we must look for the grace which we in either case endeavour to attain. Whether it be peace or hope, whether it be unity or joy, it is God only who can give us that which we desire, it is in Him that we must trust, and not in ourselves. And in a like spirit there is here repeated both before and after the salutations of St. Paul and his company, this short but comprehensive prayer, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you; Amen." "The grace," that is to say, the free gift, the gracions, undeserved, inestimable gift of God the Father for the sake of God the Son, the gift of forgiveness, the gift of help from heaven to be holy, the gift of God the Holy Ghost, the grace which in this Epistle has been set forth, even salvation to every soul of man that believeth, that grace "be with you. Amen." We salute; but it is God that must give the blessing. We write this Epistle; but it is Christ who herein proclaims these glad tidings. We salute: but we "salute you in the Lord."

And therefore "now," when we have thus set forth all the righteousness of God, the whole compass of his mercy in the free pardon of sinners for the sake of his Son our Lord, now "to God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen." He, and He alone, "is of power to stablish" us according to the Gospel here declared. That Gospel is "the preaching of Jesus Christ." It is "the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret since the world began." For never did men know or guess till now, that the death of one, even of Christ, could atone for the sins of all, and that God would for his sake count sinners to be righteous. But now it is "made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." "By the scriptures of the prophets." See how helpful have been the prophecies in the custody of the Jews for establishing the faith of the Gentiles! "Made known to all nations." See how urgent, how large is the commandment of God! See how far we have been as yet from obeying it! "For the obedience of faith." See how vain is all faith that is without obedience! See how fruitless is all obedience that is not founded on faith! See how only wise is God, who at once forgives the sinner, and makes us detest the sin, confounds in us all thought of merit in our obedience, and yet makes us more than ever zealous to obey!

To Him "be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen."

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS, 1. 1—3.

St. Paul saluteth the church at Corinth and all Christians.

¹ Paul, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother,

² Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that ¹ are sanctified in Christ Jesus, ² called to

² Rom. 1. 7.

Corinth was one of the chief cities in all Greece. Greece had before Rome been the chief nation in the world, and was still eminent above all others in arts and in philosophy. This made it a principal object of attention to the apostle of the Gentiles. At Corinth St. Paul had sojourned a year and six months. And there Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, was beaten before the judgment seat of Gallio; see Acts 18. 17; the same probably whom the apostle now joins with himself in addressing this letter, and whom he describes to be a Christian, by calling him "our brother." How seasonable was this expression of affectionate regard between Sosthenes and St. Paul, when it was one chief object of the apostle's writing, to put a stop to the divisions in the Corinthian church! It is as though he had said: see how well the ruler of the synagogue can agree with the apostle of Jesus Christ! See how he has become our brother by becoming our disciple! Be ye also brethren, even as we!

And this counsel, and all the words of this Epistle, as well as his salutation of grace and peace, St. Paul addresses not only unto "the church of God which is at Corinth," but also to "all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ." That is to say, he addresses all who are Christians, all who profess to be Christians; all "them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus," all that are "called to be saints." His letter may seem in many points suited only for one place and season. He reproves the offences which prevailed in Corinth at that time. He answers questions, and resolves cases, which had been put to him by the Corinthians, for their own particular information. But though the facts to which he alludes are local or temporary, the practice which he enforces, and the motives which he insists upon, these are of universal obligation. They are the word of Him whose word is from everlasting. When we read what was written by St. Paul to the Corinthians, or to any other of the churches he addressed, we read the Gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours. And the doctrines and duties which were throughout revealed, as well as the grace and peace which are set forth in the commencement, these are "from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

St. Paul giveth thanks for the Corinthians ; exhorteth to unity.

4 I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ;

5 That in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge;

6 Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you:

§ 483. Against divisions in things spiritual.

St. Paul gives thanks for the Corinthians, on their behalf. We ought to be thankful for each other no less than for ourselves, and nothing would more plainly prove that we have a charitable interest in the welfare of each other, than for us to thank God for each other's blessings. St. Paul thanks God in behalf of the Corinthians, not for their abundance of worldly wealth, not for their fine climate, fruitful soil, convenient situation, refined manners, or cultivated understanding. No, it is "for the grace of God," given to them "by Jesus Christ." It is for the many spiritual gifts vouchsafed to them, for their many graces of utterance, knowledge, patience; it is for their having the testimony of Christ confirmed in them by the manifestation of these gifts, it is out of his trust that the Lord Jesus Christ would also confirm them blameless unto the end; these are the things for which St. Paul gives thanks, this is the kind of benefits for which we ought to be thankful in behalf of each other. Let us therefore feel a lively interest in the spiritual welfare of our brethren, and we shall then both make it our most earnest prayer in their behalf, that they may be saved; and also give most hearty thanks for such evidences as they shew, of being likely to be blameless "in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." God is faithful. He will make good his promises. He has called us unto the fellowship of his Son. And if we through grace obey the call, He will receive us in the end with joy.

What a firm foundation is thus laid by the apostle for the duty which he desires to enforce, the agreement of Christians in their religion. For what can more incline us to such agreement, than the conviction that we are called into the fellowship of the Son of God? How can we be all one with Him, and not be all one with each other? How can we be blameless in the day of his coming, if we are now at variance? How can we come behind in no good gift, if we fall short in unity and love! And therefore it is "by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" that St. Paul beseeches the Corinthians, as brethren, that they all speak the same thing, that there be no division among them. Ten times within the first ten verses of this chapter St. Paul repeats the name of Christ. All the arguments of authority, of kindness, of power to help, of willingness to save, with which the name of Christ is here connected, all these the apostle would now bring to bear upon the duty of agreement in things spiritual. And it is remarkable, that at the end of his second Epistle to the Corinthians, he repeats what he here enjoins at the beginning of the first: "Be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." 2 Cor. 13. 11. Let not us then vainly argue that we cannot controul our own opinions, that we cannot answer for that diversity of judgment, which still rends asunder the church of Christ. To "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," must be in some sort within the compass of our ability; or we should not have been thus earnestly exhorted to attempt it.

Shame be therefore to our manifold divisions! Shame be to our party names and distinctions! Shame be to the wide differences and doctrine amongst some! And amongst others, whose doctrines are the same, shame be to their more wanton and inexcusable dissent! Well might St. Paul be thankful that he had baptized so few; lest any should say he had baptized in his own name, with a view to make disciples to some sect of his own! Well might Christian ministers learn from his example, whether they baptize, or preach, to magnify not their party, nor themselves, but Christ! Nothing more surely makes his cross of none effect, than to preach it with the words of human wisdom, with a view to recommend some human system. No one, either in his preaching, or in his practice, ought to seek the honour of any mere party upon earth, but only of the Lord which is in heaven.

The apostle preacheth Christ crucified.

18 For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the ¹ power of God.

19 For it is written, ² I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

20 ³ Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

21 ⁴ For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

22 For the ⁵ Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

23 But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness.

24 But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

25 Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

26 For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called:

27 But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

28 And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:

29 That no flesh should glory in his presence.

30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption:

31 That, according as it is written, ⁶ He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

The Corinthians, it seems, had fallen into grievous divisions, naming their several sects after different teachers, whose doctrines they professed to follow. St. Paul argues against these evil practices, that there is but one Christ, one Gospel; and testifies that for his own part he had preached among them none other but the cross of Christ. He next describes what the preaching of the cross is, shews how it is opposed to the wisdom of the world, and points out how the weakness of those who had to preach it redounds to the glory of God.

"The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God." The preaching of the cross, is to preach that Christ Jesus "is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." It is to set forth of our blessed Lord, that He is made unto us wisdom, that He gives us a true insight into God's will, and our own duty; that He is made unto us righteousness, is the only meritorious cause of our being counted righteous before God; that He is made unto us sanctification, obtains for us grace from God to be holy, even the Holy Spirit of God to sanctify our hearts; that He is made unto us redemption, redeems us from the curse of the Law, from being bound under penalty of death to do that which we could never do; makes us free from sins past, and free to serve God for the future. To set forth that this is all Christ's doing, and that He did this for us by dying in our behalf, this is the preaching of the cross; this it is which "is the power of God," is mighty through God's help to save them that believe; this it is which to them that perish, to them that will not believe, seems to be no more than foolishness. For see how different is the wisdom of the world! "The world by wisdom knew not God." The wisdom of the world was not able to tell them better, than to worship stocks and stones. The wisdom of the world was not able to prevent them from practising all manner of iniquity. See Romans 1. 23, 24. The wisdom of the world, whether of Gentile or of Jew, could not save them from being guilty in the sight of God. See Romans 2. 1. The wisdom of the world made them stumble at the cross of Christ, and count for foolishness that work, which God had brought to pass, for the saving of mankind. "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom." In their worldly wisdom they demanded more conclusive evidence, or evidence which they would allow for more conclusive; "a sign," some such plain manifestation of God, as the glories of mount Sinai; "wisdom," some such lengthened arguments, some such refined speculations, as were current in the philosophy of the Greeks. But "the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men." And this was proved in the result, in the calling of the early converts, by the fact that "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble," were preachers of the Gospel.

How few and feeble were the fishermen of Galilee, that they should overthrow the dominion of idolatry, and establish the Gospel in the world; that the faith they preached should be professed by so many millions of the most enlightened nations of the earth! How simple, how unlike to our devices for justifying ourselves, is the plan, by which it has seemed good to God to justify the ungodly! How important is the consequence "that no flesh should glory in his presence!" Let us apply this consequence to ourselves. Let us put our whole trust in God, by believing in his Son Jesus Christ, for all that we now want, for all that we now hope. Let us feel that to God we owe, that through Him we are, what we are "in Christ Jesus." And whatever cause we now have for glorying, let us remember to "glory in the Lord."

The apostle further describeth his preaching.

1 And I, brethren, when I came to you, 'came' not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.

2 For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

3 And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

4 And my speech and my preaching ²was not with || entieing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power:

5 That your faith should not * stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought:

7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory:

8 Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

9 But as it is written, ³ Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

10 But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.

12 Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

13 ⁴ Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

15 ⁵ But he that is spiritual † judgeth all things, yet he himself is ‡ judged of no man.

16 ⁶ For who hath known the mind of the Lord that he § may instruct him? But we have the mind of Christ.

§ 485. That we must be led by the Spirit.

St. Paul would have the Corinthians know, that he at least had laid no foundation in his preaching, for the scandalous divisions of which they now were guilty. He had declared the testimony of God, not the wisdom of man. *He had determined to know nothing among them, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." His own bodily presence was weak, and he had addressed them "in fear and in much trembling," with lively apprehension for their spiritual welfare; not with the confidence of one, who attempted to set up a party for himself. And his speech and preaching were not adorned by figures of eloquence, but confirmed by signs and wonders from on high. This shews us what preaching always ought to be, and what good preaching always is, not an exhibition of the ability of man, but a faithful declaration of the goodness of God. And this shews also, how we ought all to give heed to preaching, not as to what amuses us, ~~not as~~ to what supplies us with matter of debate, but as unto that which is designed by God to instruct us in the way that leadeth unto life.

For this is the highest of all wisdom "among them that are perfect." In the judgment of such as know the whole truth, there is no wisdom equal to the knowledge of God through Jesus Christ our Lord. For this is that which is described in prophecy, as more than eye had seen, or ear heard, or the heart of man conceived. See Is. 64. 4. Beyond these outward senses, beyond these inward imaginations, man's wisdom cannot reach. But there is a wisdom which they of this world know not, "the wisdom of God in a mystery." And this mystery is now revealed. And this wisdom is able to inform us of that which we can neither see nor conceive, and which yet we are able to understand. The things of which this wisdom tells us are not imaginary, but real. The world which it describes, though not seen by sense, exists at this moment all around us and about us, most real, most excellent, most abiding.

And this wisdom "God ordained before the world unto our glory." And these things God has revealed "unto us by his Spirit;" that Spirit by which prophets spake, that Spirit by which apostles wrote, the Spirit which is one with the Father, and one with the ever blessed Son. For it is through the working of the Spirit, preventing and assisting us, that we receive the things which God has revealed, here described as things "freely given to us of God." So that the Spirit of God, which alone knoweth the things of God, this Spirit is God. And this Spirit, sometimes called the Holy Ghost, must influence our hearts for good, when we receive the things spiritual which are here spoken of. By nature we are incapable of discerning them. By grace we see all, understand all, receive all. Oh let us not be content with a part! Let us not cease to pray and study, let us wait on ordinances, let us call on God, till we have attained to the proficiency of those who judge "all things," who are able to discern all the truth. These are they who are led by the Spirit. These are they who follow where He leads, who live as He directs them. These are they who build not on the judgment of man, who follow not the devices of any human teacher, who count not that any one of their fellow creatures is competent, by his own wit or wisdom, to instruct them in the mind of the Lord; but resort to the word of God, and to the preaching of his ministers in the church, that by the use of the very means ordained by Him they may have the mind of Christ.

That our progress must be gradual.

1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ.

2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?

4 For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

5 Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?

6 I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase.

7 So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.

8 Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour.

9 For we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.

10 According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

11 For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.

The Corinthians had probably complained against St. Paul that he had not taught them the whole extent of Christian truth. For here he tells them how it came to pass that he could not speak to them "as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ." This was because in fact they were yet but carnal. They were not sufficiently prepared by faith and grace, to receive what must be spiritually discerned, see ch. 2. 14; to know what only God can give us to understand, "the breadth, and length, and depth, and height." Eph. 3. 18. And that the Corinthians were still carnal when he wrote, St. Paul proves by the very divisions of which he here complains. One said, "I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos." They divided themselves into parties and sects, into distinct religious societies, calling themselves by the names of their favourite teachers. Hence we learn that it is a proof of a carnal state of mind thus to form or to foment divisions in the church of Christ. In differences about religion, it is no less true than in our temporal affairs, that wars and fightings come of ruling ourselves after our lusts. See James 4. 1. It is the pride we feel in our own judgment, or the trust we vainly place in our own teacher; it is the desire we entertain to be allowed in sin whilst we profess devotion to the Lord, or a determination to enjoy the things of earth, whilst yet we are instructed to hope for heaven; these lusts, and others like to these, they are, which still break up into conflicting sects the most enlightened portion of the Christian world. Let us look to it then that we ourselves be not "yet carnal." Let us examine whether we in any way take part in the sin of schism. Let us watch and pray that we take part in it no more.

Here we see of what great importance it is for this end, that we have a right conception of the office of a minister, that we hold not men's persons in admiration, see Jude 16, but look to God in all, as to the Giver of all good. "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?" The success of ministers is of God's giving. This they are bound to know concerning themselves. This the rest are bound to feel towards them. The people are God's husbandry, not theirs. They are but labourers under Him who is the Lord. But may the labourer take credit for the master's work? May he that plants, or he that waters, be supposed to give the increase? May he that builds be thought to be the maker of the house, when all the materials employed, and the skill whereby they were put together, are given us by Him who made both us and all things? If not, so neither may we ascribe to ministers the honour which is due unto our Lord. How then dare we follow them as leaders of sects? How venture to call ourselves by their names? And how, if we thus do, can we escape the fearful charge, "are ye not carnal, and walk as men?"

And here also we may see that the progress of Christian children should be gradual, that they who are carnal must be fed as here described, with milk; must have one portion of the Gospel explained to them at first, and so be brought on from strength to strength, till they are able to understand the whole. But this means not that we may in any case misrepresent the truth, only that we had better not press all truth at once upon the attention of those, to whom it all is strange; and that they also at the first should be content to know in part. But our foundation must be right and sound; though it be the foundation only. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." And this the apostle had laid most carefully with the Corinthians, amongst whom he had determined not to make known any thing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Ch. 2. 2. This then must be the foundation of all our teaching, faith in Christ crucified. This must be taught, when as yet we teach nothing else; this must be learnt and known, though we learn and know nothing else, Christ crucified for the sins of man.

God grant that amongst us this foundation may be rightly laid! God grant that we may build thereon what our Lord desires, "a city that is at unity in itself." Ps. 122. 3.

That we are the temple of the Holy Ghost.

12 Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble;

13 Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it * shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

14 If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.

15 If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.

16 ¹ Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

temple ye are.

18 Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.

19 For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, ² He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.

20 And again, ³ The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain.

21 Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are your's;

22 Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are your's;

23 And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.

§ 487. Rules for not defiling the temple of God.

The true foundation of all Christian doctrine is Jesus Christ, and redemption through Him. With this foundation many men have connected various false devices of their own. And thus there have been formed sects of Christians, as unlike to what Christians ought to be, as wood, hay, or stubble is unlike to gold, silver, or precious stones. But "every man's work shall be made manifest." It shall certainly be known, which have laid the right foundation, and which have built thereon a building worthy of it. "For the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire." The day of persecution, the fiery trials to which the early Christians were exposed, these were likely to "try every man's work of what sort it" was. Much more the day of judgment, when the flames of wrath shall be revealed against all unrighteousness, much more will this fire, and this day bring to light the great difference there is, between preaching the Gospel of our Lord, and promoting the interests of a sect; between building up jewels for the crown of Christ, or adding fuel to that fire which shall burn up the ungodly.

"If any man's work abide," if the teacher have built aright on the right foundation, if to the preaching of Christ crucified he has added the doctrines of grace and holiness, of love, and hope, and peace, and joy, "he shall receive a reward." They who so teach and they who so learn the truth, these through the great goodness of our God, and the abundant merits of our Saviour Christ, shall be admitted to everlasting life. But "if any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss." The pains taken by the teacher of false doctrine are in vain, for vain is the religion which his hearers learn. The work shall be burned. The false views of God, and of his dealings, of themselves, and of their duties, of their Saviour, and of his grace, which these propagate in the world, shall be doomed to perish. And they who spread them, and they who are misled by them, shall with difficulty escape the sentence of destruction. "He himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." How watchful ought these words to make us, that we neither teach nor listen to the enticing sound of man's wisdom; how careful to regard ourselves, and all of our community, as God's temple, by no means to be defiled; never to be profaned by the wilful admission of false brethren into our church, or of false doctrine into our hearts! "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." We, if we be real Christians, we are that temple. Let us not then defile ourselves. Let us not defile our hands by sinful practice. Let us not defile our souls by sinful thoughts. Let us not defile that Christian church, that holy temple of the Lord, by receiving, or not resisting, those unsound doctrines, which are plainly inconsistent with the Gospel.

And for this end observe what it is that the apostle chiefly counsels. First, "let no man deceive himself." In the prevalence of false doctrines, they who wish to be deceived are they who are deceived. They deceive their own selves. They love the darkness rather than the light. Their pride, their passions, or their worldly interest, is at variance with true religion. And they prefer therefore that which is false. Let us remember that however we might thus deceive ourselves, God knows all, and cannot be deceived. Next, let no one be puffed up with the notion of his own wisdom. This is what leads many into the path of error. What they cannot understand they think must be wrong. Or what they cannot answer must be right. Such men must first themselves become as fools in their own eyes. They must see themselves to be foolish in respect of heavenly wisdom. And they must meekly submit to be taught by Him who "knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain." Thirdly, we must not "glory in men." We must not fondly attach ourselves to any earthly teachers; we must not be proud of them because they are ours. We must remember that we have God to teach both us and them. And whilst we honour them as God's servants, we must call no man our master upon earth, knowing that we are not theirs but Christ's, and that through Christ we are, as He is, "God's."

God grant that we may not too highly rate ourselves, or any thing that is ours! God grant we may never be deceived in the pursuit of truth! God grant we may not deceive ourselves!

The just view of the office of a minister.

1 Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God.

2 Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.

3 But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's * judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self.

4 For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 † Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God.

6 And these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; that ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one against another.

7 For who † maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?

§ 488. That we have nothing which we have not received.

The divisions prevalent in the church of the Corinthians had been connected with undue attachment to particular teachers. And this has been the case with most divisions amongst Christians in all ages of the church. Pride, the pride of teachers in their gifts, and the pride of the people in their teachers, pride has engendered strife and persecution, the following after strange doctrine, called heresy, and the rending of church communion, which is schism. To all therefore it must be profitable to note, how St. Paul provides against this vain partiality, by setting forth the true nature and authority of the Christian ministry. "Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God." Now a minister means a servant. And a steward is one who has the goods of another entrusted to his care. This was the highest dignity of an apostle, and this must be the highest aim of a Christian pastor, to be the servant of the Lord, whose commission he bears, a helper of his brethren in things spiritual, and a steward of those mysteries, which are in Christ revealed, to dispense them according to his Master's will.

It is the first point in the character of a steward "that a man be found faithful." So also in a minister there can be no greater fault, than to take unto himself the honour which belongs to his Lord. But this is the very fault which leads to division among Christians, when ministers attach parties to themselves. And in this also the people are alike guilty of offence, if they form themselves in parties, pass judgments on their ministers, censure one, and idolize another. And, therefore, the apostle here protests that he will not be judged by man's judgment, declares that he would not so much as judge himself, and warns the Corinthians to "judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." It is the Master's office to pronounce praise or censure on the work of his servants. He only who employs the steward has any right to call him to account. How mad then must it be in members of the flock, to judge them who are set over them in the Lord! How vain in ministers to justify and extol themselves, when even St. Paul, who knew nothing by himself, who was conscious of no wilful neglect in his apostleship, yet felt that he was not thereby justified, and that he could be judged only by the Lord!

These things he wrote of himself, and of Apollos, meaning that the Corinthians should apply what was said to their other teachers; that they might learn in Paul and Apollos not to think of any teacher above that which he had written to them, so that no one of them might be "puffed up for one against another," none pride themselves in being followers of one teacher in opposition to another. "For who," adds he, "who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive?" These questions may be well applied by ministers to their several gifts and acquirements, to the success which attends their labours in the ministry, and to the encouragement they meet with in the affections of the people. Parishes and congregations, and each member of the same, must apply the same questions to themselves, in regard to whatever privileges they enjoy, in the gifts and graces of their ministers. They must well consider to whom it is that they are indebted for these and all other their advantages; and they must be careful to give to God the praise of what they have, and to pray to Him that He would give them, in his good time, that which is yet wanting to the fulfilment of their joy. And thus also in all our blessings, whether of nature or of grace, whether they relate to our comfort upon earth, or to our hopes of heaven, whereinsoever we fare better than our brethren, let us repress all inclination to self sufficiency and pride, by asking ourselves the question here insisted on by St. Paul, "now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" Thus might we, whatever advantages we possess, be humble in our estimate of ourselves. And whatsoever are withheld from us by our Father which is in heaven, we might be still contented, cheerful, joyful, thankful.

The example of the apostles.

8 Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us: and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you.

9 For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death: for we are made a *spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.

10 We are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised.

11 Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwellingplace;

12 ¹And labour, working with our own hands: being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it:

13 ²Being defamed, we intreat: we are made as the filth of the earth, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.

14 I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons I warn you.

15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

16 Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me.

17 For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church.

18 Now some are puffed up, as though I would not come to you.

19 ³But I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power.

20 For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

§ 489. Candour and humility.

The apostle here sets forth before the Corinthians an example of that humility which he would have them to practise. "Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me;" to which we may add, what he adds afterwards in this Epistle, "even as I also am of Christ." Ch. 11. 1. And in what would St. Paul here have us follow him? In submitting to privations and disgrace, in being content to be made a spectacle unto the world, in hungering and thirsting, in being reviled, persecuted, and defamed, and in becoming as the offscouring of the earth. And to make this humiliation more manifest, he contrasts it with the self sufficiency of the Corinthians. "Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us." And again, "we are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise;" that is to say, they thought themselves to be so. "We are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised." Now these are chief points in humility, to be content in being below others; to bear with the arrogant, not to grudge them what excellence they have, not to wish them evil, but rather with St. Paul to say, "I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you;" we should be glad for you to enjoy all the blessings you pretend to; we should be glad to share them with you. And further, we must be willing to return good for evil; "being reviled, we bless." And this we should do, more often, more easily, more heartily, if we were deeply sensible that no revilings we can meet with, no insult, injury, or scorn, is worse than for our sins we most richly deserve.

Thus St. Paul warned his sons, whom he had converted to be Christians, and before whom he could, consistently with true humility, set forth, as their father in Christ Jesus, his own example. And this example he further pressed on them, by sending to them Timotheus, to bring them into remembrance of his ways, which were in Christ, as he taught every where in every church. Let us also, who are indebted to this apostle, under God, for some of the most instructive portions of the Gospel, endeavour to be followers of him, even as he was of Christ. Have we any one in our minds who underrates us, who extols himself in the comparison, who sets up for being wise, and strong, and honourable, whether in things temporal or spiritual, and who has no sufficient ground for these pretensions? Let us endeavour without flattery or falsehood to give such an one full credit for all the advantages he really has; and to shew that in what he has not, we have no wish to triumph in his deficiencies. Let us rather wish, and shew that we desire in his behalf, that he might have the full enjoyment of all that he pretends to. Let us take interest in his welfare as if we would share in it ourselves, instead of grudging it us if it were inconsistent with our own.

And for our improvement in this grace of humility, let us remember that the day must come, when every man's work will be tried. St. Paul warned the Corinthians not to be puffed up as though he would not come to them. Let not us either encourage in ourselves a vain estimate of our own condition, by not sufficiently considering how certainly, and how soon, God will bring all we do before the judgment seat of Christ. What will we? Would we have Him who then shall judge, would we have Him come to us "with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?" Nothing is more certain of that day, than that he who now exalts himself shall be then abased. Nothing is more needful for us to remember, of the kingdom of God, whether we interpret it of our present dispensation, or of that which shall be hereafter, than that it is "not in word, but in power." Let not then our religion be in profession, but in deed. For God's threatenings and his promises, the salvation of them that believe, and the eternal destruction of the disobedient, these will be in very deed and truth.

Primitive discipline.

1 It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife.

2 And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you.

3 ¹ For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have ^{||} judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed,

8 Therefore let us keep [†] the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

9 I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators:

10 Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.

11 But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat.

12 For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within?

13 But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

§ 490. How we may discipline ourselves.

In this chapter we find directions for that kind of public discipline which was practised in the primitive church; which is still attempted, though with ill success, in some sects of professing Christians; and which is mentioned in our own liturgy as a thing to be desired. The Corinthian converts had not only retained in their society a very gross offender, but were puffed up, as it should seem, by his belonging to their numbers, probably because of his rank, or wealth, or ability. Now it was their duty, in any case, to mourn most deeply for their brother's sin. But in a case so extreme as this, they were not only to mourn, and to feel their shame, but to pronounce against the offender the most severe judgment of the church, to sentence him in the name of the Lord Jesus, as though the apostle himself were present, to be thrust out of the church, Christ's kingdom upon earth, into the world, the kingdom of the evil one; and to be subjected to those sufferings of the body, which are Satan's work, in order that his soul, thus chastened, might "be saved in the day of the Lord."

The second point of discipline here insisted on, is that Christians should shut out from their society all such manifest sinners as are here mentioned, fornicators, the covetous, extortioners, railers, drunkards, idolaters. "With such an one no not to eat;" with such as were guilty of these sins, having become professors of the faith. For at the time when this was written, the greater part of the Corinthians were still professed heathens. And there were not the same reasons for not keeping company with heathens who committed any such sin. For they were not so well aware of its sinfulness. They brought no scandal on the Gospel. Christians had no commission to judge them in this manner. It was only by consorting with them that a Christian could hope to win them to the truth. And since nearly all the heathens practised these enormities, one must needs have gone out of the world, to avoid all those that were guilty. Oh how sad is the reflection that this is not far from true of the professing Christian world! Oh how seldom could we go out into a numerous company, if we would not eat with any one noted for covetousness, or extortion, railing, drunkenness, or uncleanness.

How far then ought we to put in practice these directions, now that all, or nearly all, profess to believe? Are any so notoriously not in earnest, that they stand in the same place with respect to zealous Christians, as the heathen to the primitive believers? Or can we so well know which are in earnest, and which not, as when the faith exposed professors to persecution? And do not our many scandalous divisions, form a fatal barrier to effectual discipline; the proselyting zeal of the conflicting sects, setting up so many cities of refuge for those, who should be cast out from the spiritual Jerusalem? These questions it may be hard to settle. But this we cannot fail to know, that it is good for us, either with or without discipline, to abstain as far as possible from the society of those, who continue in wilful sin; to prefer always, and choose, as far as possible, for our friends, those who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity; not to glory, or be puffed up, at having those in our community, whose private vices, set against their rank or talents, ought to fill us with tenfold shame; and above all, to purge out of our own hearts the leaven of malice and wickedness, to keep no longer any company with our sins.

God grant that by exercising strict discipline on ourselves, by associating where we can with the excellent of the earth, and by helping to convert to holiness the very worst of all we meet with, we may keep throughout our lives a continual feast; in thankful remembrance of this miracle of love, that "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us!"

Against going to law before unbelievers.

1 Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

2 Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church.

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers.

7 Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

8 Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9 Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind,

10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11 And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

§ 491. How we ought to avoid lawsuits.

These directions very obviously refer to the duties of a Christian society, whilst it was surrounded by professed unbelievers. These are here called "the unjust." Whilst to Christians there is given the name of "the saints." Let this name remind us of what we ought to be, holy unto the Lord. Let us watch that we never use in contempt or scorn this name, or any other which like this has been applied in Scripture to the praise of believers. Let us consider how high is the dignity which is implied in this our calling. We are holy. We are set apart for this service of God. We are stamped with his image, sealed for his salvation. We are commissioned to "judge the world," nay, to "judge angels;" by the holiness of our lives to bear testimony now, and to rise up in the judgment hereafter, against wicked men, and against evil spirits; and perhaps also, in the day of the Lord, to sit by Him on the throne of judgment. See Rev. 3. 21. Oh how can we then so madly waste our time, disgrace our calling, and neglect our invaluable privileges, by caring for the pleasures or the gains of earth, by still harbouring the lusts of the flesh, by still wrangling and contending for the possessions of the world?

St. Paul on these grounds admonishes believers, in case of any dispute with one another, to bring it before the judgment of their brethren, and not to go to law in the heathen courts. Even they that were "least esteemed in the church," would, in such a case, be more fit to give decision than the judges of the heathen. For the conscientious opinion of a mind enlightened by the truth, ought to be more satisfactory to a Christian, than the decision of laws made and administered without reference to the will of God. And further, it would be better for Christians to take wrong, to suffer themselves to be defrauded, rather than thus exhibit to the scandal of unbelievers their many remaining infirmities. Hence we may learn that we also, though living in a Christian land, and under statutes which defer to the authority of the Gospel, ought to be averse to go to law with one another. We ought to prefer the private arbitration of Christian friends, of such as we consider devout believers, to the risk of scandal which may arise to others, from our litigation in the public courts; and the risk of detriment to the justice of our cause, from the lack of Christian principle in those who there may handle it. Nay, rather we ought to take wrong, to suffer ourselves to be defrauded, to put up cheerfully with the loss of worldly goods, with robbery, or injustice, or insolent assaults, rather than by resistance, and taking measures for redress, become partakers of the spirit of revenge. How much more then must we watch against ourselves, that we defraud not, that we do not wrong! How much more must we take heed, that by no aggression of ours we provoke any lawsuit on our brother's part.

Let us not be deceived. They who wilfully do wrong "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." If we are saints indeed, if we have been washed "by the washing of regeneration," Tit. 3. 5, if sanctified by the Holy Ghost, if "justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God," we are hereby so much the more strictly bound to do no wrong to each other, to commit no sin against the Lord. This warning St. Paul thought needful to the saints that were at Corinth. Is it not also necessary for us? Have we not great need to be reminded, that none guilty of the gross sins here specified, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of those good things, which God hath prepared for them that love Him? Are we not very apt to be deceived in this matter? Are we not very ready to suppose, that the practices of uncleanness, or uncharitableness, are in some way compatible with the hopes of heaven? Are we not most willing to believe, that our Christian privileges in some measure make more venial in us the very sins, which as Christians we have most solemnly renounced? This however we here see is only self deceit. This is only the snare of our adversary the devil. The word of God, which cannot lie, has left on record against all who do such things, especially if they be believers, that they "shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

Against the sins of uncleanness.

12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not || expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.

13 Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body.

14 And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

15 Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid.

16 What? know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? for two, saith he, shall be one flesh.

17 But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit.

18 Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication, sinneth against his own body.

19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

20 For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

§ 492. The honour due unto the body.

The word “expedient,” in Scripture, means not what is merely useful towards our present advantage, but what is most helpful to our eternal interests. As for instance, in the case of meats here alluded to, it was lawful for the Corinthians to eat any kind of meat; that is to say, there was no unlawfulness in the thing itself. And yet if there were any meat which could not be eaten without scandal to the beholders, from this it was expedient to abstain. It being far more for our endless good to avoid giving offence unto our brethren, than to enjoy the blessings which God has given us on earth, or the liberty with which Christ has made us free. Let this then be our notion of what is expedient. Nay let this be our notion of what to us is lawful. Let that which would else be lawful, be no longer lawful in our eyes, if it would be prejudicial to the progress of the Gospel, if it would be a hinderance to the salvation of our brethren. Whether it be in our food, or in our dress, in our business or our amusements, in the discharge of duties or the exercise of rights, let us consider always, not only how far we may go consistently with the letter of our law, but where we ought to stop according to the spirit of it. What is not expedient for our own progress in piety, what is not expedient for the spiritual welfare of our brethren, this let us hold to be no longer lawful.

Thus there are things which in some cases are lawful, and in others not. But these must never be confounded with such gross transgressions as that of which St. Paul next speaks. Though it be true that there are “meats for the belly, and the belly for meats,” though these things are given for our use and enjoyment, subject only to the cautions above mentioned, and to the sentence here further added, that “God shall destroy both it and them;” yet we must not suppose that in like manner we are free to partake of the pleasures of impurity. “The body is not for fornication.” The body is nourished by food, not in order that it should serve sin, but in order that it may live “for the Lord.” And also the Lord is “for the body;” He died for it, to save it from sin, to raise it unto holiness of living, to raise it up unto everlasting life. “And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.” How sacred should the body be now esteemed by ourselves, with what temperance should we restrain its appetites, with what reverence conceal its nakedness, with what patience put up with its infirmities, when we consider the great and glorious privileges here assured to it in the word of God! The Lord is for it. God will raise it up. It is a member of Christ. It is the temple of the Holy Ghost. It has been bought with a price, even redeemed by the precious blood of the Lord Jesus.

God forbid that Christians should defile themselves by this sin, of which though the heathen might make light, the word of God here plainly tells us, that it is to sin against our own bodies! God forbid that we should take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot! God forbid that in any Christian country the shameless practice of the profligate, should confound, in the apprehension of the young, the broad distinction between right and wrong; or avail to obliterate in our eyes that brand of infamy to ourselves, and indignity to the honour of our Lord, which is here stamped upon all manner of uncleanness! Let us be joined unto the Lord in one spirit. And how could we then bear to think of affronting Him, by becoming one body with an harlot? Let us “flee fornication.” Let us know that it is our highest wisdom, and our best of courage, to shrink from the approaches of temptation. Let us glorify God, in our body as well as in our spirit. For both are his; both made by Him; both purchased anew by that which is above all price, the blood of Jesus Christ our Lord.

May God make all Christians sensible that both in body and soul they belong to Christ! May God turn the hearts of those who live unto the flesh, that they through the Spirit may mortify its lusts! May God especially have mercy on those the most miserable of the weaker sex, who have been ensnared to gratify the desires of the strong! May He move them to repent! And the more they have to be forgiven, may He move them to love Him more!

Of marriage.

1 Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: It is good for a man not to touch a woman.

2 Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.

3 Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.

4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5 Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6 But I speak this by permission, and not of commandment.

7 For I would that all men were even as I myself. But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8 I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9 But if they cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn.

10 And unto the married I command, yet not I but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband:

11 But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy.

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us * to peace.

16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

* Gr. in peace.

St. Paul in this chapter proceeds to give directions in several points of practice, on which he had been consulted by the Corinthians. First he declares generally that a single state of life is excellent. Let those then who have been called to that condition, rejoice in their calling before God; not murmuring at his dispensations, but striving to improve them to his greater glory. Next he declares no less generally "let every man have his own wife, and every woman her own husband." So that for the reason which is here assigned, marriage also is honourable in all. And they that are married are also instructed how entirely they belong unto each other. Whence they should learn in all things to defer to the wants and wishes of each other, seeking to regulate each severally their own by a devout submission to the will of God. "But I speak this by permission, and not of commandment." It is in the way of giving leave, and not as though he were enjoining a duty, that the apostle, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit of God, thus directs to marry, and gives instructions to the married. For he wishes rather that all men were even as himself; not that all were single, but that all were capable of living single, as he did, in safety. When, however, we consider, how few have this gift of God, when we remember what deep feelings of the heart are connected with the questions here resolved, and how much of happiness or misery depends upon the principles here laid down; most thankful we ought to be that there is allowed to man this relief under the burden of his fiery trials, this solace of love not unrequited upon earth, to cheer him in his way to heaven.

These general principles are now next applied to the three distinct cases following. First, of widowers and widows. It is good for them to abide like the apostle, single. But it is good also, for the reasons before assigned, to marry. It is good to do any thing rather than to sin; rather than to sin, in thought, or word, or deed. Next of those that are married, the apostle had been asked, whether by their solemn vows of holiness the converts were required to devote themselves to the restraint of a single life. Here he observes there was an express commandment of the Lord; namely, that "whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery." Matt. 5. 32. So that the believing husband might not put away his wife, nor the believing wife depart from her husband. Or in case she should depart, perhaps driven against her will to separation, for her faith's sake, by an unbelieving husband; then she must remain unmarried, she must be reconciled to her own husband, or have none. Thirdly, as to the question whether a believing husband were bound to put away an unbelieving wife, and whether a believing wife were bound to leave an unbelieving husband, though he should not himself wish to separate, here St. Paul observes he was not able to quote any express commandment of the Lord. And therefore as his apostle he determines, that no such separation is necessary. For the unbeliever is in such case sanctified by the believer. And the children of the two are entitled to the privileges of the one. If the unbelieving party will separate, he may. But the believing party is not to raise the scruple, is to remember that "God hath called us to peace," is to hope that under the blessing of God the other party may be thus won to believe and to be saved. Let those then who being married have opposite views of religion, or different degrees of religious impression, hence learn to follow after peace with one another, as the best way to help each other towards peace with God.

Let each abide in his own calling.

17 But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all churches.

18 Is any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised. Is any called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised.

19 Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God.

20 Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called.

21 Art thou called being a servant? care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's * freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant.

23 Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men.

24 Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

* Gr. made free.

25 Now concerning virgins, I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.

26 I suppose therefore that this is good for the present || distress. I say, that it is good for a man so to be.

27 Art thou bound unto a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

28 But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh: but I spare you.

29 But this I say, brethren, the time is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31 And they that use this world, as not abusing it: for the fashion of this world passeth away.

How great must have been the zeal, how lively the faith of the primitive converts, that they should have been ready, if St. Paul had so directed, to surrender their social and domestic rights, in deference to the doctrines of the Gospel! But in this matter, as he instructed them, their faith was misapplied, their zeal outran their discretion. Thrice he here declares that it was the duty of each to abide in the same calling, in the same state and condition of life, wherein each was, when he became a Christian. This was the rule ordained by the apostle in all churches. This is a decision most helpful to convince us, that it is in the heart, and not merely in the outward state of life, that the Gospel must work its chiefest change. It matters not whether a man be circumcised or uncircumcised. But it matters much whether he keep or transgress the commandments of God. It mattered little whether the convert were a servant, such as servants then were, slaves, the property of their masters. Though if they could by fair means obtain their freedom, they were recommended to "use it rather;" they were reminded that having been bought by Christ "with a price," it was beneath their worth, as his people, to be the slaves of men. But chiefly they were to consider the duty and privileges of being devoted unto Christ; that if called being free, they were still his servants, bound to do all his pleasure; if called being slaves, still his freemen, free to enjoy all his grace.

The same principle is next applied to the case of those who became Christians whilst yet unmarried. Here, as before, St. Paul observes, that he has no express commandment of Christ to refer to. He therefore gives his own judgment as an apostle, as one who by the very signal mercy of the Lord, had been entrusted with the sacred charge, of declaring his will unto the church. And his judgment is this, that "for the present distress," during the period of persecution then impending on Christians, it was good for the unmarried "so to be," to continue as they were, unmarried. And yet if they were to marry, for reasons of sufficient weight, there would be no sin in their doing so. They would encounter more of "trouble in the flesh." They would meet with more difficulty in the present life, because of the troubles of the church. "But I spare you." This helps to explain what he had said before, of speaking in the way of permission. See ver. 6. It is as if he had here said, I will not press these difficulties, I will not too strongly urge you to abstain from marrying for fear of the coming troubles. I know the force of natural affection; I am aware of the weakness of the flesh; I may not limit what God has not limited; I permit you, as the apostle of the Lord, I permit you, even under "the present distress," to marry when you so see fit.

"But this I say, brethren, the time is short;" here is again introduced the true key to all these difficulties, that which opens every case of human conduct; eternity is at hand, and what we do on earth is of consequence only as it helps us towards heaven. Whether we have, or have not, the blessings of the married state, whether liberty or bondage be our lot, whether our portion here be plenteousness of tears, or abundance of joy, whether our possessions be large or small, whether our interest in the world much or little, in any case time hastens, the world fast fades away, and the hour is at hand, when it will chiefly be inquired, what use we have made of what we had, whether we have cared mainly for treasure in heaven, whether we have reserved the best of our affections for our Lord. This is the condition we are in any case to aim at. This is the change which we must labour for, that which is within; the circumcision of the heart, freedom from sin, devotion to our Lord, and to have the soul so knit together unto Him, in spiritual marriage, as to be one with Him, and He one with us.

St. Paul would have us without carefulness.

32 But I would have you without carefulness. He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord:

33 But he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife.

34 There is difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit: but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35 And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not: let them marry.

37 Nevertheless he that standeth stedfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 So then he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

39 The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord.

40 But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and I think also that I have the Spirit of God.

"But I would have you without carefulness." Whether we be married or unmarried this must be our continual frame of mind, to take no anxious thought for the morrow, to care chiefly for the things that belong to the Lord; never to let these be displaced in our regard by the "things that are of the world," how we may please each other. And this, St. Paul observes, is the difference "between a wife and a virgin," as also between a married and unmarried man. This is the only difference which can give one state any advantage over the other; that which sets us most free to devote ourselves to Christ. And therefore the apostle adds that he speaks this for our profit. He would not so recommend a single state as to cast a snare upon us. He pleads not for any peculiar holiness in the state itself. But he points out that it offers less temptation in a time of persecution; for the fewer ties one has on earth, the less likely one should be to be tempted to renounce the faith, for the sake of saving life. And he also states, that in general, for those who have the gift from God, there is greater opportunity in the single state to "attend upon the Lord without distraction."

Let none then choose to be unmarried, merely that they may have greater liberty to attend upon the world, merely that they may more largely enjoy their pleasure, or more quickly increase their store. Nor let any, because the church is not now persecuted, enter rashly or wantonly into the marriage state, as if it could not now distract their attention from waiting on the Lord, and endanger their everlasting peace. That we may better wait upon his service, should be the very ground of our preferring one condition to the other. And when to this we add prudence in our choice, patience in putting up with difficulty or delay, thankfulness in the fulfilling of our affections, and care taken to love no one on the earth in comparison with our Lord and Saviour; then we may hope that our marrying is approved by Him, and that it will help forward, not hinder, our salvation.

The last point on which St. Paul here gives directions, is the authority of a parent in directing the decision of a child, in favour of either kind of life. First we see he is to consult her wishes. And if he has reason to think that it would be unkind in him, to press the advantages of a single state, he is at liberty, notwithstanding the preference here given to that state by St. Paul, he is at liberty to "do what he will," to indulge the fond feelings of a father's heart, and to "let them," the two who have engaged the affections of each other, to "let them marry." Thus does the apostle again spare them. See ver. 28. Thus does he allow, that even under "the present distress," ver. 26, the parent might, consistently with his duty to his children, permit them to enter into the marriage state. Otherwise, if there be "no necessity," no strong affections entertained, if the father be stedfast in his heart, and the child be not hopelessly averse, "he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better." How firmly does the apostle here establish in this most weighty matter the authority of parents! How carefully does he guard it from abuse! How entirely would he have them to be guided, by regard for the real welfare of their children! How plainly would he teach children to obey the declared decision of their parents! But this is only up to the point of marriage. From that time "the wife is bound by the law," not to the parent, but to the husband. And if her husband be dead, she is then "at liberty to be married to whom she will." The father does not regain the same right to decide. She is at liberty. But it is "only in the Lord." She is still bound to do the Lord's will. And if she follow the judgment of his inspired apostle, she will think herself happier as she is. "In the Lord." This is the limit of her liberty. This must be the rule of her choice. Let this also be the ground of our decision, in any other choice which we have to make. Let this be the liberty we enjoy, let this be the measure of our enjoyment, let this be the ground of our enjoying it, that our joy is to do the will of Christ, our liberty is "in the Lord."

Of eating meats offered to idols, or in the idol's temple.

1 Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

2 And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

3 But if any man love God, the same is known of him.

4 As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one.

5 For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,)

6 But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we || in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.

7 Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge: for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled.

8 But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, * are we the better; neither, if we eat not, † are we the worse.

9 But take heed lest by any means this ‡ liberty of your's become a stumblingblock to them that are weak.

10 For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be ¶ emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols;

11 And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

12 But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

13 Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

|| Or, for him, Rom. 11. 36.

† Or, power.

* Or, have we the more.

† Or, have we the less.

¶ Gr. edified.

§ 496. The extent of our Christian liberty, and the limits of its use.

The converts at Corinth had for the most part been idolaters. And so great was the number of their false gods, and superstitious offerings, that the chief part of the meat sold in the markets came from animals that had first been offered in idol sacrifice, and the chief social entertainments of the people consisted in feasts held in idol temples. Might then a Christian conscientiously partake of any such food? Might he sit down to eat in any such temple? The apostle in his reply admits that an idol is "nothing in the world." So that in the thing itself, considered by itself, there could be neither good nor evil; in eating, either at an idol's temple, or of what had been once offered to an idol. Here therefore, let us carefully observe, that "there is but one God, the Father," "and one Lord Jesus Christ;" that by Him, even by God the Lord, are all things, and we "in him," and "by him;" that an idol is therefore nothing; that "neither, if we eat are we the better; that neither, if we eat not, are we the worse;" and that such being the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, we ought not to mistake needless scruples for real tenderness of conscience.

But in the next place let us note that there is "not in every man that knowledge." We may know or be persuaded of ourselves or of our party, that "we all have knowledge." But we ought to remember, that those who differ from us on points like these, may not have attained to the same degree of information. Let not then this our knowledge puff us up. For if it do, it were better for us not to know at all. And let us remember that this is the tendency of knowledge, to puff up; this is the peril of temptation to which knowledge exposes us. Whereas "charity edifieth." This is the tendency of love; it helps forward both ourselves and our brethren, in the way to heaven; nay it helps us also to know God; for "the same," that is to say God, "is known of him" that loves. Let us then enlarge our knowledge by our charity. And if in any matter like this which is here mentioned, we seem to know more than our neighbours; let us be ready, always out of deference to their scruples, to refrain from the enjoyment of our greater liberty. We are not bound to use all the liberty we have. We are not enjoined to eat meat offered to idols. We shall do no dishonour to God, we shall transgress no commandment of the Lord, by never sitting down at all in an idol's temple. Or whatever else be the license here permitted us, we shall lose no one step in our Christian proficiency, we shall be no further from heaven than before, if we deny ourselves the permitted pleasure, if we limit our own permitted liberty.

But how great on the other hand is our loss, if we mislead our brother into sin! And how plain is his sin doing that which he reckons sinful, though he be mistaken in so reckoning! The weak brother perishes, if he act against his conscience, though his conscience, had he known better, would not condemn him. Let us take heed then for ourselves, that we obey with reverence this inward monitor. Let us take all means in our power to enlighten it, by the word of God, and by prayer, by the ordinances and ministry of the church. Let us rejoice to enlarge its liberty, to the full extent of the free gift of God. But let us not presume to advance one single step beyond what we can clearly see to be allowed. And let us not dare to tempt our brother to any the least of such presumption. To "sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience," is to "sin against Christ." It is to grieve the Lord who gave Himself for us. It is to rob Him of his honour. It is to take the part of his adversary and ours, the part of tempting his people to their fall. Wherefore, whatsoever it be that would thus make our brethren to offend, however lawful we may count it for ourselves, let us count it for their sakes forbidden us, let us resolve that we will not do it, as long as life shall last, lest we make our brethren to offend.

St. Paul answereth them that examine him.

1 Am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord?

2 If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord.

3 Mine answer to them that do examine me is this,

4 Have we not power to eat and to drink?

5 Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?

6 Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?

7 Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?

8 Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also?

² Rom. 15. 27.

³ Deut. 18. 1.

* Or, feed.

9 For it is written in the law of Moses, 'Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen?

10 Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that he that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope.

11 * If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?

12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ.

13 * Do ye not know that they, which minister about holy things * live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?

14 Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

§ 497. The provision for the ministry.

This is St. Paul's answer to them that examined him, to them that called in question his conduct and motives, nay his very title to be called an apostle. And these were the false teachers, before alluded to, who no doubt were mortified to find that the apostle, when at Corinth, had maintained himself; and who artfully took occasion, from his working, to call in question his office and authority. He therefore here reminds the Corinthians, that they, having been themselves converted chiefly by his ministry, were a sufficient seal or proof of his apostleship. He declares that he had as much right as any one of the apostles, to be maintained at the expense of the church. He had as good claim as any other, not only to be himself supported, but to take with him also "a sister, a wife," a Christian spouse; in which he had the example of "other apostles," and "the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas." He had as much right as they, to forbear working, he and his companion Barnabas; in order to devote his time entirely to the work of the ministry. And if he had not urged this claim, this was not for want of right, as they vainly imagined, but only in order to prove his greater zeal, and to win so much the greater glory, in the Gospel.

And this power he further proves by referring to the practice of mankind, who are accustomed to pay those who work in their behalf, whether as soldiers or husbandmen, or in any other kind of employment. He proves it also by the sentence of the Law, that oxen used for treading out the corn might not be muzzled. See Deut. 25. 4. And if, he adds, "if we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" If they that labour to supply your earthly wants are entitled to support, are not they much more entitled who watch for your spiritual welfare? And was not this the case amongst the Jews, and amongst the heathen also at their temples, that they which ministered were supported by those for whom they ministered? "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." This then is the will of Christ. This is the provision which He has made for the maintenance of his ministers for ever. Christians are to be glad to maintain them. Christians are to consider their maintenance as a part of the duty they owe to Christ; to be supplied not grudgingly or of necessity, but out of love to their Lord and Saviour. And thankful they should be to think, that the earth, though cursed for the sin of man, yet yields through God's blessing so large abundance, as that many can be spared from labouring for the sustenance of life; and that of these no small number may devote themselves to the sacred calling of the ministry.

But it is one thing for ministers to be thus provided for. It is another for them to use their provision aright, to exercise their power with self denial and moderation. Much need have all, both ministers and flock, to learn herein a lesson from St. Paul; who, apostle as he was, would not use his power, but was willing to suffer all things, rather than in any to "hinder the gospel of Christ." Let us then look to his example in whatever rights we possess. Let us be slow to assert them in the face of those who question them. Let us be ready to suffer want, reproach, and wrong, the scorn of strangers, and the loss of friends, rather than by the exercise of worldly wisdom, or by the application of worldly force, hinder the growth of faith and love, in the hearts of those who watch our conduct. How much do we owe to those who, in times long past, have made such provision for the ministers of our church, that what the people have to pay is for the most part only rendering them their own! How ready should the people be to give them this and more! How thankful should they be themselves for what they have; how watchful to preserve it for them that come after; and how willing, like St. Paul, whilst they defend the rights of others, to forbear insisting on their own!

The apostle had not used his power.

15 But I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!

17 For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me.

18 What is my reward then? Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel.

19 For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more.

20 And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

21 To them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law.

22 To the weak, became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

23 And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

24 Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain.

25 And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible.

26 I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air:

27 But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.

Here we see that there are two ways of doing that which is our duty. And here we see how great is the difference between doing it unwillingly or willingly. St. Paul refrained from using his power to live at the expense of the church. And this he did out of his love for the souls of men, rather than risk giving any one offence. And in doing this it was his joy to think of the gain which might hence accrue unto the Gospel. Hence he did it willingly. He was glad to do it. He was glad to labour with his hands, and to earn his own subsistence, that he might have for his reward the more success as a preacher of the truth. Had he preached against his own will, yet preach he must; for a dispensation of the Gospel was committed to him; he was commissioned from on high in so solemn a manner, that he could not help it. But in that case he would have been content to preach it "in season" only. As it was, he preached it also "out of season." In that case he would have insisted on his right to be supported, without considering how much scandal his so doing might occasion. As it was, he "used none of these things." In that case he would have enjoyed the liberty he possessed, as one who was "free from all men;" a Jew, and therefore in bondage unto no man; see John 8. 33; a Roman, and therefore one of the masters of the world. As it was, he made himself the servant, or literally the slave of all; being to the Jews a Jew, and among the Gentiles living as a Gentile, to the weak behaving as though he had himself like scruples, that he might by all means save some.

In which way then are we doing whatever duty we have to do; unwillingly, 'grudgingly, and of necessity; or willingly, and cheerfully, and freely, unto the Lord? Do we, or do we not, relinquish our own liberty, recede from our own rank or right, suppress our own wishes and opinions, and refrain from our own otherwise allowable enjoyments, for the sake of serving our Saviour Christ? Do we not, or do we, creep as near to sin as we think we safely can, and fall as far short of holiness as we suppose that we decently may? Do we ask always, which way shall I most please God? Or oftentimes is our question more like to this: how may I most please myself without very much offending Him? Do we consider in every thing that we do, how may I most edify my brethren, how most glorify God by promoting their salvation: or do we even in regard to heaven think only of ourselves, and care little for what becomes of others, so we may ourselves escape the wrath to come?

Oh that we would weigh well how great is the prize set before us, and then we should not stay to ask how we may strive the least, but we should press forward to contend with one another, in the only safe point of rivalry, how we might love the most. Then we should deny ourselves not only all pleasure which leads to sin, but all ease which does not help to holiness. Then we should run not like them that race on earth, where one only, and which they know not, can obtain the prize, but with a full assurance that the crown of glory is ours, and ours for ever. Nothing we should think too much to sacrifice to Christ, nothing too much to yield unto each other, provided we abide still "under the law to Christ," provided we yield nothing against Christ's will. Nothing we should think too hard to impose upon ourselves, no mortifying of the flesh, no humbling of the spirit, provided it might help to prevent the risk of our being rejected of the Lord. Our duty we should then look on as our privilege; our service as perfect freedom. Our tribulation we should count for joy; and our death itself for victory.

The case of the Jews an ensample to us.

1 Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea;

§ 499. What security we have of God.

For St. Paul to have any serious apprehension that he could possibly become "a castaway," ch. 9. 27, might seem almost incredible to those whom he addressed. He therefore reminds his Jewish readers, that their fathers, though made partakers of very eminent privileges, had been guilty of very signal sins. They were all under the cloud, even guided thereby from heaven in their journey through the wilderness. "And all passed through the sea," by which marvellous deliverance, as well as by the guidance of a cloud, they were all baptized unto Moses, dedicated as by sprinkling or dipping, to the obedience of the Law. They did all eat and drink of the same spiritual food, even of bread from heaven, and of water from the rock, which signified unto those who fed in faith, the strengthening of their souls by their Redeemer. And yet "with many of them God was not well pleased." They were idolaters, they committed fornication, they tempted God, they murmured. And therefore "they were overthrown in the wilderness." Now in all these things they were ensamples for the warning of their children, and they should serve also for a warning unto us, that he who "thinketh he standeth," should "take heed lest he fall."

This is the lesson which St. Paul here enforces, applying it in the case of idolatry, speaking to the Corinthians as unto wise men, who had the privilege of knowing that an idol is nothing, but who notwithstanding that privilege might incur the guilt of idolatry, if like the Israelites they "sat down to eat and drink," at the feasts of idols. This lesson St. Paul had taken to himself, in expressing his own liability to be a castaway. This lesson we may learn not only from the history of the Israelites in the wilderness, but from the many other sad accounts in the Old Testament, of men who in their generation preached to others, and fell very grievously themselves. Who then, we shall perhaps ask, who then can be saved, if patriarchs and apostles were not safe? We reply, that the possession of privileges gives no assurance of safety. We answer, that what with men is impossible, is possible with God. We answer, that no temptation befalls us beyond that which with God's help we might overcome. We answer, that God is faithful, who will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able. He will enable us to choose the way of escape which He has made. He will help us to walk in it securely. He will give us here as much sense of security as is consistent with our real safety. He will give us hereafter an entrance unto that state in which there is neither danger nor sin. "God is faithful." It is according to his character of fatherly regard for us, that thus He should do. "God is faithful." It is according to his word, here spoken by the apostle, in his name, that thus He will.

But in reply to these assurances, and in excuse for the hard heart of unbelief, or for the hardened resolution of continuing in sin, how many are there who perversely plead: This may be true in other cases, but not in mine; my passions are too strong, my opportunities too enticing; or my apprehension of God's mercy in the Gospel is too dull, for me to lead this life of faith, to run this race, to fight this fight, still conquering still to conquer sin, and still liable to be conquered as long as life shall last. Either I must be secured from risk of falling ever; or I despair of ever conquering. But no; observe, mistaken saint, or self deluding sinner, "there hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." Your case is not singular as you suppose. Your sin is not more justifiable, than that of other men; nor must you expect other terms than they. You must take heed lest you fall. No privileges on earth can exempt you from this risk. "God is faithful." No power in heaven can do more for you than this, He "will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

Against partaking of idol sacrifices.

16 The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?

17 For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread.

18 Behold Israel after the flesh: are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar?

19 What say I then? that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing?

20 But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils.

21 Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.

22 Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?

23 All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.

24 Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth.

25 Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no question for conscience sake:

26 For ¹the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

27 If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake.

28 But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience sake: for ²the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof:

29 Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other: for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?

30 For if I by || grace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that for which I give thanks?

31 Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

32 Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the † Gentiles, nor to the church of God:

33 Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

§ 500. That we must do all for the glory of God.

From the consideration of our liability to fall, and of the help which God gives us towards standing, St. Paul urges on the Corinthians the important duty, that they should "flee from idolatry." Ver. 14. And in this counsel he refers to the many occasions with which they were beset, of eating things that had been offered to idols, and of eating at the feasts which commonly took place on idol sacrifices. These entertainments he compares to the Lord's supper, that feast of which Christians ate over the sacrifice of the death of Christ. And as in this case the "partakers of that one bread" are one body in Christ, so a public partaking of the idol sacrifices would make a Christian a partaker with the devils, to whom these things were sacrificed. For thus the Jews also were counted to be partakers together with Jehovah, of the sacrifices eaten at the altar. And how could we one while drink the cup of the Lord, and another while the cup of devils? How could we be partakers of the Lord's table, and also of the table of devils? Would not this be to tempt Christ, to provoke the Lord to jealousy, and to set up for being stronger than He, so that we fear not his displeasure? Would it not also be a scandal to our brethren, and ought we not to seek their wellbeing as anxiously as our own? And do not even things that are lawful to ourselves become thus not expedient for us to do? And yet the apostle would not have men scrupulous. The Christians at Corinth might buy what was sold in the markets, without asking any questions as to whether it had been offered to idols or not. "For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof." All sorts of food considered as God's works might lawfully be eaten. For the same reason they might eat of what was offered them at the tables of the heathen without asking any "question for conscience sake." But if it were pointed out to them that the meat had been offered to an idol, then, though they might know that an idol is nothing, they were to refrain from eating, out of regard to the beholder. "For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;" and He would find other means to feed them, if they denied themselves in this. "Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other." Not thy own misgiving, for thou hast none, but thy brother's scruple, this it is which ought to make it a matter of conscience to thee also. For though thy liberty stands clear of his convictions, thy conscience must not allow thee to do violence to his. And though he would do wrong to speak ill of thee for eating, thou wouldest do wrong in eating what he thinks it ill for thee to eat.

"Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Giving none offence." These are rules which we may apply to a great variety of cases in our own daily conduct. And this is the way in which we must endeavour to apply whatsoever is said in Scripture, about cases of conduct which now no longer occur. We must note the general principle, the motive suggested, the temper recommended, the end and object that are set forth. "The glory of God;" this is the object of all objects, the end of all ends. It is for this that we must be careful to give offence to no one. For this we must desire to "please all men," "that they may be saved," and so God may be glorified. Nay, for this we ought to desire even our own salvation; not only for our own pleasure, not chiefly that we ourselves may be for ever happy, but, above all, for God's glory's sake, in order that He who has so greatly loved us, may not have manifested his love in vain.

Women in the congregation must have the head covered.

1 Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ.

2 Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the || ordinances, as I delivered them to you.

3 But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God.

4 Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head.

5 But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven.

6 For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered.

7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man.

9 Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man.

10 For this cause ought the woman to have * power on her head, because of the angels.

11 Nevertheless neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

12 For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman; but all things of God.

13 Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a † covering.

St. Paul had described his own practice in things indifferent, as a guide to the Corinthians in their conduct. And here he tells them to be followers of him, even as he also was of Christ. This is our sufficient warrant, for referring so often as we do, to the conduct of a man like unto ourselves, as a pattern for our own. And this must be our limit in following him, even so far as in him we may discern that he was a follower of our Lord. Here we see how he refers to Christ for the ground of his directions in a matter wherein the Corinthians had been in error. "I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God." What follows? that the man, having the precedency of the woman, in point of membership with Christ, must be distinguished in the Christian congregation by some fitting token of his superior rank. And yet the man must not presume on this preference, so as to forget that he is dependant on the woman, as well as the woman on the man; according to the wise ordinance of God, who would have each be a helper to the other, towards happiness on earth and in heaven.

How then may this precedency of the man be signified? This depends in some measure on the different customs, which prevail amongst different people. And generally, for the head to be covered, for the countenance to be in some sort veiled, may be considered as a token in the woman of her subjection to the authority of the man. And therefore even those women who in the age of miracles were inspired to pray or prophesy, might not do so with the head uncovered. And even nature has pointed out this rule of propriety, in that the one sex is usually provided with longer hair than the other. "For her hair is given her for a covering." And a covering implies shame. And shame implies weakness and dependency. And this being the case, a man "ought not to cover his head;" in order that by this difference between himself and a woman, in the congregation, he may signify that he is the image and glory of God. Whereas the woman ought "to have power on her head," a veil, in token of her being subject to the power of the man, because of her being subject; because of the man's presence; "because of the angels," those ministering spirits, who as a cloud of witnesses encompass us about, delighting in our orderly subjection to each other; and above all, because of God, because He has so ordained, because it is here so written in his word.

Let us then count nothing for a trifle, about which God has thought fit to give us rules in Scripture. Let us count nothing for a trifle, in which we may be able to prove our obedience to his will. Let us not think it enough to answer, that we cannot see the harm, that what seems wrong to some seems right to others, and that the customs of place or time cannot be the measure of what is right for ever. For here we see that we may be bound to defer to custom, even in what seems to be a matter of indifference. There may be reasons for the custom which we know not of. Or if there be none, yet in violating the custom, we might be guilty of arrogance towards man, or of impiety to God. To omit a customary token of respect is omitting to be respectful. To be uncovered, when the being so would signify precedency, is no less than forwardness and pride, in one that ought to take the lowest place. Let us then conform to the ways of those amongst whom we live, as far as we may consistently with doing God's will. Or rather let us do so, as doing his will, as loving Him, and loving to do all his pleasure.

The Corinthians came together for the worse.

16 But if any man seem to be contentious, we have 110 such custom, neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be || divisions among you; and I partly believe it.

among you.

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, † this is not to eat the Lord's supper.

21 For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken.

22 What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame † them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not.

* || Or, schisms.

* Or, sects.

† Or, ye cannot eat.

In concluding his directions for women to have their heads covered in the Christian congregation, St. Paul remarks, in reference to those who taught otherwise, "if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God." And though before, he had praised them as remembering him in all things, see ver. 2, he now adds, "in this I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse. For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you." So that not only were there contentions as to how they should behave when there, but even there, even in the assembly of the congregation, there were divisions, separations of party from party, each stoutly maintaining their own opinion, each opposing the proceedings of the others. Neither persecution awaiting them without, nor the gift of miracles within, neither the authority of apostles still alive, the remembrance of Christ so lately ascended into heaven, nor the expectation of his so soon returning to judge the world, none of these things could secure to these primitive converts the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. Can we wonder then that there are contentions, divisions, and heresies amongst ourselves; when the apostle could so easily believe, at least in part, what he heard of these Corinthian disturbances?

And see to what lengths they carried their selfishness and pride, those vigorous roots of all contention, even in partaking of the most solemn of all ordinances. When they came together to eat the Lord's supper it was customary to eat a meal in common. And to this meal each person contributed his share, which might be more or less according to the wealth of the contributor, but which when once contributed belonged to all alike. But at these feasts of love it appears that each used to take before the rest his own supper; that is to say, each of those who brought abundance. So that instead of the rich supplying food for the poor, and there being enough for all, they only who brought much had plenty, and they who brought little were in want; "one is hungry, and another drunken," one had nothing to eat, while another had even more than enough. What a mockery of the poor were these practices of the rich! What a profanation of the Lord's table! What an abuse of that interesting practice of antiquity, so conformable to the pattern of our Lord's own last supper, for the whole congregation to partake together of one simple and social meal! Can we wonder that the most solemn seasons, the most profitable ordinances, and the most valuable helps towards holiness and heaven, are now oftentimes profaned, slighted, or disused, when we see the Corinthians in the lifetime of St. Paul thus sensual and selfish at the table of the Lord? Well might St. Paul tell them that to eat the Lord's supper was not their object in coming together into one place! Well might he ask them whether they could not satisfy their hunger and thirst at home, instead of coming to fill their appetites at the house of God, to the mortification of those who had no such abundance! Well did they deserve to receive from him far more severe reproofs than those words of gentle admonition, "I praise you not." Oh shameful excesses! Oh scandalous divisions, for Christians to be guilty of, so nigh unto the manifestation of Christ upon the earth! Oh wondrous mercy of Almighty God, that contrived, out of the occurrence of these evils, and also from their occurring at that early period, to derive instruction and advantage for all ages of the church! The use to which He has put heresies is this, "that they which are approved may be made manifest." Sobriety of mind, humility, love, subjection to each other, and devout submission to all the ordinances of Christ, these are graces which are so much the more easily discerned, by contrast with that arrogance and conceit, that oppressive and exclusive temper, which engenders dissensions in religion. And whether it be for these, or for greediness in their love feasts, that the apostle is reproofing the Corinthians; may not we be thankful, if the sins must sometime be committed, that they were committed whilst yet there was an apostle living, whose reproofs might be as salutary to us as to them, whose words might not only correct their faults, but serve to guard us from their fall for ever?

St. Paul's account of the Lord's supper.

23 For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread :

24 ¹ And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat : this is my body, which is broken for you : this do || in remembrance of me.

25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood : this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, * ye do shew the Lord's death till he come.

27 Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

28 But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh † damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

30 For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

31 For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

32 But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world.

33 Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another.

34 And if any man hunger, let him eat at home ; that ye come not together unto ‡ condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.

§ 503. That we must prepare, and also communicate.

We have here one more account of the Lord's supper, distinct from all that have been related in the Gospels, having been received, as St. Paul tells us, "of the Lord," directly revealed by Him for the guidance of this apostle in his duties, and for the further information of the church. "The same night in which he was betrayed;" this is the first point here pressed on our attention. Who would not wish to bear it well in mind, when he receives those holy mysteries? Who would not wish to give it all its weight, when he decides on the duty of receiving? Let us but think of what our Lord submitted to, that night, and we shall delight to do herein his will. Let us but remember how it was his own familiar friend that did him this dishonour, and we shall abhor the thought of like treason in ourselves. And here we are told in what case we are guilty of betraying Him, even guilty of our Lord's body and blood. It is when we eat this bread and drink this cup unworthily; when we discern not the Lord's body; when we partake without fitting thoughts of his great love in dying for us, without reverent apprehension of his gracious presence, as pledged to us in these consecrated symbols of his love. And is it not also, when through want of such due regard for his great goodness in dying for us on the cross, we care not to partake at all?

Whilst our hearts are thus unmoved by the tidings of God's mercy in the atonement of the death of Christ, whether we eat and drink without regarding them, or refuse to eat and drink for want of due regard to them, in either case we expose ourselves to the just judgments of that God, on whose forbearance we presume, and whose goodness we set at nought. Amongst ourselves the more frequent form of sin is to neglect the ordinance altogether. Among the Corinthians the abuse of it was prevalent. And it was to their selfish and sensual behaviour, to their eating to satisfy their hunger, and not even tarrying for one another, when they met to eat the supper of the Lord, that St. Paul directed these fearful censures. Many, he tells them, for this cause were weak and sickly, and many slept. The judgments of the Lord had been manifested by the preternatural sickness, and premature deaths, of many who thus profaned his ordinance. If He suffer us, in our abuse or neglect of it, still to live on in health and strength, let us remember that his arm is not shortened; his condemnation is sure; and unless we repent, it will be for ever.

Two things are here very plainly commanded unto us all, in respect to the Lord's supper; to examine ourselves thoroughly, before we come, and having so examined to good purpose, then to come. "Let a man examine himself," is our first duty. Let us judge ourselves, if we would not be judged. Let us search well into our hearts. Are we "in the faith?" 2 Cor. 13. 5. Are we trusting for mercy, peace, and joy, only in the merits of our Saviour? Do we trust in his merits? Do we look for his salvation? Do we feel our hearts affected by the remembrance of his love? Do we find our lives conformed to his image, and quickened by the influence of the Holy Spirit of God? Let us examine ourselves on all such points as these. Let us seek for such conversion unto God. Let us seek for it till we find it. Let us seek for it by prayer, that we may be sure of finding it. "And so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup." When we have thus examined, we are then bound to receive. We are prepared, but not worthy, for this we can never be. We are prepared to receive worthily, suitably to the ordinance, agreeably to the love herein set forth, the love of Him who died for the unworthy.

Oh that we may never refuse to prepare! Oh that we may never refuse to come! Oh that we may profit by any chastening which we here receive of God, so as to be turned unto the Lord with all our hearts, and to eat his flesh and drink his blood, and not to be "condemned with the world!"

The manifestation of the Spirit.

1 Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

2 Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore I give you to understand that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

4 Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

5 And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.

6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

7 But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

8 For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;

9 To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

10 To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues.

11 But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ.

13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or * Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

It is well that we should try to understand these matters, of which St. Paul would not have the Corinthians ignorant. But here we shall find somewhat more of difficulty than usual, because the things of which he treats now no longer happen, because we have now no experience of the chief gifts here mentioned. Yet we shall derive from these instructions no less of profit to ourselves, in our own very different situation, if we watch for those principles of universal interest, which pervade these apostolic counsels, and for the sake of which no doubt it has been wisely ordered, that what would have else concerned the Corinthians only for a time, has been preserved in the church for ever. How wonderfully has God contrived it that the diverse and complicated cases of human conduct should be opened by the same simple keys of faith and love! How powerfully would He stir up our diligence in the study of his will, by revealing it in connexion with the history, the customs, the privileges, or the sins, of nations long since extinct! How amply does He reward our labour by providing, in what was written for their instruction, that which makes us also wise unto salvation! How greatly would He enlarge our charity by thus shewing us that as we are made of the same flesh with all other nations of the earth, so we have the like temptations to encounter, must stand by the same grace, and must be saved, if at all, by the merits of the same Redeemer, Jesus Christ!

Know we not that we were Gentiles, like unto the Corinthians, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as we were led? Know we not that this was the situation of our fathers according to the flesh? And are we not aware that to God we owe it, and to their faith under God's goodness, that we have inherited the blessing, even been brought into covenant with God, and taught to say that Jesus is the Lord? Have we not through these means the gifts of the Holy Ghost, his manifold gifts of Christian grace, though not of miraculous operation? Are we not bound in respect of these which we enjoy, to acknowledge that it is "the same Spirit," "the same Lord," "the same God which worketh all in all?" And is it not also amongst us most certain that "the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal;" not merely for his own advantage, but for the edification of the rest? This was true of "the word of wisdom," and of "the word of knowledge," two different kinds or degrees of inspiration, bestowed on the first teachers of the Gospel. This was true of faith, the kind of faith they had, through which, though it were but in strength as a grain of mustard seed, they were able to remove mountains. See Matt. 17. 20. This was true of the gifts of healing, and of other like miracles, of prophecy, whether foretelling the future or revealing the present will of God, of discerning the spiritual gifts of each other, of speaking or interpreting strange languages. "All these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit." All these, and not these only, but truth and justice, humility and meekness, soberness and purity, and peace and joy, all does the Holy Spirit work in man, and all not for man's present glorying, but for the everlasting benefit of man's self and of his brethren. God grant that we may profit by the grace which He imparts; not being puffed up with our privileges, not using them for our advancement in the esteem of men, but for the spiritual advantage of our brethren, and for securing our acceptance through Christ!

And especially let us not murmur against his goodness, if He give us not, as soon as we expect it, that grace which we most earnestly desire. Let us not be jealous of each other, if we feel ourselves outrun in that heavenly race, wherein though some are afore the other, all may obtain the prize. The Spirit divides "to every man severally as he will." "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." "We have been all made to drink," if we are partakers of the blood of Christ, "we have been all made to drink of one Spirit!" Oh let us then, as members of one body, rejoice in the prosperity of the other members. Let us feel that their proficiency is our gain, promoting as it does, that which should be the first desire of our hearts, the honour of our Lord.

That we are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

15 If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

18 But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21 And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

22 Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary:

23 And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we || bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked:

25 That there should be no *schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

26 And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it.

27 Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

28 And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, † diversities of tongues.

29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all ‡ workers of miracles?

30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

31 But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way.

† Or, kinds.

‡ Or, powers.

§ 505. That there should be no schism in the body.

The possession of spiritual gifts seems to have given rise amongst the Corinthians to pride and jealousy. St. Paul would teach them to regard these marvellous powers as means of edifying others, not of exalting themselves. And he would insist upon the necessity of each man being content with whatever gift it might please the Spirit to bestow upon himself. All could not be apostles, nor all prophets. All could not be endowed with the same office in the church, or with the same gift of the Spirit. Each must be aware that only some could possess the most eminent station. Each ought to covet, not that which would confer most distinction for the present, but that which would be in the end most excellent. And therefore whilst the apostle urges them to covet the best of these miraculous powers, he tells them that he would shew them a way better still, even the grace of charity in the heart.

See then how powerful is the argument for love, which arises from regarding ourselves as "many members, yet one body," that body "the body of Christ!" Know we not how impossible it is that any one member should possess the place of the rest? Know we not that it is God who has formed, and proportioned, and arranged, the several members of the body in such manner as seemed good unto Himself? Know we not that each member is assisted by the rest, nay, without the help of the rest is put to great distress, if not itself made useless? Know we not that there is no member so feeble but that God has fitted it for some necessary use, and that those which we count least honourable both receive from ourselves "more abundant honour," more watchful care for decent covering, and have also had "more abundant honour" given to them, more curious contrivance displayed in their formation, by Him who "hath tempered the body together?" How great is the proof which we thus ever carry about within ourselves, of the greatness of God's power, and wisdom, and love! How plainly might we see, in this tempering of our bodies, a likeness of that harmony and communion, which should bind together, as in one body, the members of Christ! Each is dependent on the rest for help. No one is so powerful, as that it can fail to suffer by the loss of any other. No one is so feeble, as not to be of use to all the rest. And those "which we think to be less honourable," the poor, the ignorant, the wicked, on these God would have us bestow our chiefest pains, to these, by his own merciful direction, to these is the Gospel preached. How can we then bear to be at variance with each other? How can any one class in the Christian community oppress or revile any other? How could it, if the community were really Christians? If our hearts were really warmed by love, if we really felt ourselves to be as dear to each other as members of one body, how could we bear the thought of separation; how not take all pains beforehand to prevent it, and afterwards to heal the wound?

And above all, when we remember that we are "the body of Christ," that He is the head, that his is the power which should controul all our movements, and supply vigour, and activity, and life, oh how can we so lightly raise, so heedlessly aggravate, and perpetuate, what we call religious dissensions? In the Christian body, above all others, "there should be no schism." Of Christians there should be but one body, one heart, one mind, one soul. Oh that we had all thus the same care one for another! Oh that we all thus suffered in the sufferings, and rejoiced in the honours of each other!

That no gifts without charity profit.

1 Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

2 And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

3 And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

4 Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity || vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up,

5 Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

6 Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth * in the truth;

|| Or, is not rash.

* Or, with the truth.

7 Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

8 Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

9 For we know in part, and we prophecy in part.

10 But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

11 When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I † thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

12 For now we see through a glass, ‡ darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

13 And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

‡ Gr. in a riddle

§ 506. The excellency and durability of love.

Graces are better than gifts. Grace is of all gifts the best. Of all ways, the most excellent is charity. This is that, which the Corinthians would have done best of all to covet. This is that, without which in vain they spake with tongues, in vain they had the gift of prophecy, the understanding of "all mysteries, and all knowledge;" in vain all faith in their miraculous endowments. Their tongues were but empty sound; their knowledge and their faith but useless speculation. Nay, though for man's sake we should give away all our goods, or for God's name's sake yield up our bodies to be burned, yet unless these acts of bounty or devotion come of love within the heart, of love for man, and love for God, of love for man our brother, out of love towards God our Saviour, they profit us nothing. And hence let us learn that this is true in other matters, that no one duty can be really done as it ought to be, whilst any other is wilfully neglected. Truth profits us nothing, if though true in speech we are impure in heart. Purity profits us nothing, if whilst we mortify the flesh we are proud in spirit. Neither have we any advantage of kindness towards man, if it flow not from love for God, nor any benefit in devotion towards our God, if it be not cherished out of our thankful sense of his inestimable love, in the redemption of mankind through Christ.

This is the very charity which is here described; not what we now commonly mean by that misused name, the mere gift of alms, or a favourable opinion of each other's conduct, but a lively affection for each other founded on a devout love towards God. To be longsuffering, and kind; not to envy, not to vaunt ourselves, not to be puffed up; to behave ourselves suitably to our respective conditions, and according to our character as sinners saved; to seek the good of others with more ardour than our own; to be neither irritable in our temper, nor censorious in our thoughts; to be not glad to sin if we thought we might, but grieved to think how much of suffering sin cost to Him, who did none Himself; to derive our chief of joy from the truth of his blessed Gospel; to bear with and veil the offences of others, whilst we confess and abhor our own; to believe and hope all things in their favour, and patiently to endure all the evil we ever meet ¶ at their hands; these are the particulars here set down of charity; these are enough to satisfy us that it can mean no less than universal love. Oh who can venture, with such an account of it as this before us, who dare set up for being charitable, by dint of giving never so ample alms, with a heart that rejoices in the sin of others, and is puffed up with supposed righteousness of its own? Oh who can suppose that the profession of belief can avail unto the saving of the soul, without love felt and exercised; when the very apostle who has been thought most to magnify the efficacy of faith, here comparing it and hope with charity, has pronounced, that the greater of these is charity?

It is greater; for it includes them both. It "believeth all things, hopeth all things." It is greater, for it "never faileth." When prophecies of the future shall have been all fulfilled, when revelation of that which is seen face to face shall be no longer needed for the present, when what we now believe in shall be known, and what we now know in part shall be perfectly understood, when what we now hope for shall have taken place, even then shall love still abide, to form hereafter the substance of those joys of which it now gives us the best earnest. What can be said more of any grace unto which we can now attain, than that it will never fail? What can more engage us in its behalf, to pray, to strive, to study, to practise? As yet we are but children, compared with what we shall be. As yet we see but darkly, compared with how we shall see. But when we shall see face to face in heaven, when there we shall have put away childish things, even then charity will abide, even there we still shall love.

The gift of tongues and that of prophecy compared.

1 Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy.

2 For he ^{*}that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no man ^{*}understandeth him; howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries.

3 But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort.

4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church.

5 I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

6 Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?

7 And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the || sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

9 So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words † easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air.

10 There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.

11 Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.

12 Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous † of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

§ 507. We ought to prefer that which is most edifying.

No miraculous endowment was more likely to be admired in the possessor, than the power of speaking in a tongue unknown before. We are all aware how long it takes to learn a strange language. We can all feel how much we should be surprised, to find any one able to master all this difficulty at once. Can we wonder that they, who had this ability bestowed on them, were apt to be elated at the gift? Can we wonder that this gift was more coveted than others, in proportion as it most commanded attention and respect? Do we not still oftentimes observe, nay, do we not often feel in our hearts, that whatsoever gains most esteem of men, is thought therefore the most valuable possession? But ought we not to value rather that which does God most honour, and does most good unto our brethren? Is not charity "a more excellent way," ch. 12. 31, than any miraculous operation? And of all such gifts is not that the most excellent which most tends to edification? And is not this also true of all our natural endowments, acquired accomplishments, or graces given us by the Holy Spirit of God, that those are most worthy of our regard which are most fit to edify the church, not those which might best help to exalt ourselves?

This is the chief lesson we have to learn from the comparison here drawn between speaking with tongues and prophesying. For prophesying means inspired preaching. It means that ability to speak the truth of God without risk of error, which was enjoyed by the apostles, and by other chosen servants of the Lord. This then helped to instruct and comfort those who heard. Whereas to speak in a strange tongue was nigh to useless, except amongst those to whom it was familiar. And this was the chief object of the gift of tongues, that the preachers of the Gospel might be able to make themselves understood amongst all the nations of the world. How little did they consider the real value of the gift, if they preferred to exercise it amongst those to whom the tongues were strange! To how little profit could it have been thus to speak "unto God" only, thus to edify only themselves! This was to be as a harp or pipe untuned, in which the best ears can find no melody; or as a trumpet incorrectly played, which would perplex the hearers, instead of giving them their signal. This would make the speaker and the hearers no better than foreigners to each other; however correctly the language might be spoken, and however well understood in its proper country.

"Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret." It seems then that usually they who had these gifts could use them at discretion. It seems that these, like all other blessings, were given in answer to prayer. It seems that sometimes they who spake with tongues, might exercise their gift amongst those to whom the tongues were strange, by way of manifesting the great power of God, whilst others had the gift of interpreting to the rest. It seems that they who thought fit, or were overruled, to speak with tongues, were bound to covet the ability of interpreting what they said. Let us also remember, whatever privileges we have received at the hand of God, that it is left to our discretion to use them for the best. Let us pray that we may both enjoy his bounty largely, and also use it rightly. And, above all, let us endeavour to use every gift we have in such manner, as may at once most manifest God's glory, and most help in edifying God's church.

The gift of tongues and that of prophecy further compared.

14 For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.

15 What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also.

16 Else when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

17 For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all:

19 Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

20 Brethren, be not children in understanding:

* Gr. perfect, or, of a ripe age.

howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be * men.

21 In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

22 Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad?

24 But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

1 Is. 28. 11.

The comparison between the gift of tongues and that of prophecy is here further carried on. And it is further made evident, how wrong it was to prefer the gift which most admitted of display, or to use it for the mere purpose of displaying it. Thus he which prayed in a strange tongue might pray in his own spirit, might bless in his own spirit, but his meaning was unfruitful to the hearers. Those to whom the tongue was strange could not join in his prayer or praise. He might give thanks well, and yet the rest not be edified. And therefore St. Paul, though he had the gift of many tongues, had "rather speak five words" so as to be understood, so as to have his meaning likely to edify the hearers, "than ten thousand words" in such a manner, as probably would chiefly lead them to admire himself. And he reminds the Corinthians, that though it was needful in point of wickedness to be as children, who are incapable of most actual sins, yet in understanding it was well to be as men, not as infants who know not what is said or meant.

Hence we may derive for ourselves useful rules for the conduct of our public worship. We may see plainly how great would be our error, if we were to have prayers and praises offered up by our ministers in a tongue not comprehended by the people. And as this is one of the many points which justify, nay, render imperative, our refusal to hold any communion with the church once established in this realm, it is well to note what ground of Scripture we have here for continuing in a state of separation, which else might seem to make us guilty of the sin of schism. Is not this then most plainly here enjoined, that we should offer our public worship in such a language as that the unlearned may know when to "say Amen?" Is not the other method, of using a strange tongue, to impose wilfully on ourselves, for no profitable use, that which is spoken of "in the law" as a visitation of wrath, a last resource to move an unbelieving people?

And further, let us learn hence how desirable it is, that in the use of our own language, we should prefer that which is plain and simple, to that which is fine but not easily understood. Most thankful we ought to feel that this method has been followed in the prayers provided for us by the church. Most carefully we ought to watch that we promote no other method in the exhortations, which the people in some sort provide for themselves. The people have some influence with their ministers in directing the tone of public preaching. That which is most generally preferred by the hearer is likely to be also chosen by the speaker. Each therefore, according to his place and ability, should endeavour to promote a taste for what is edifying to all. Preaching should be not like tongues spoken in confusion, of no profit to them that believe, and to the unbeliever only matter of scorn and scandal. But like prophesying, it should both edify the one and convince the other. It should be calculated to inflame the zeal of the devout, and awaken the consciences of them that know not God. It should make manifest the secrets of the heart. It should tell each man all the things that ever he has done; bringing home to his remembrance his past transgressions, in all the height of their iniquity; and telling him, when most he sees the sinfulness of sin, "Thou art the man." 2 Sam. 12. 7. Then should we fall down and worship God in earnest, when made to feel how good He is to usward, how much of evil He has borne with at our hands, how much of good He has graciously heaped upon our heads. Oh that our preachers may endeavour thus to preach! Oh that we may desire thus to hear! Oh that all who hear of us may report, and that we within ourselves may experience, that God is in us of a truth!

That God is not the God of confusion, but of peace.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

29 Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace.

31 For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

33 For God is not the author of * confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints.

34 Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the ¹ law.

35 And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.

36 What? came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only?

37 If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues.

40 Let all things be done decently and in order.

* Gr. tumult, or, unquietness.

The chief rule we have learnt hitherto from these directions of St. Paul, for the exercise of spiritual gifts is, that we in all our public services should aim not at the magnifying of the few, but at the edifying of the many. We have here another most important principle set forth, that "all things be done decently and in order." And the reason must be well observed, "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace." See we not how exactly this is true in all his works of nature and of grace? See we not how in the universe, as a whole, and in every portion of the same, each part is fitly joined together, each has its own proper place and office, and each helps to the well being of the rest? The sun and moon and stars; the earth, with its seas and clouds, its mountains and its vales; the rocks, the plants, the living animals, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea, the creeping things and four-footed beasts, almost innumerable to us, are all counted, and sorted, and preserved in order by Him who at the first made all. Each has its own rank, and post, and season. And all are kept in well being and profitable use, only by subordination of each to other, and of all to Him.

And is not the like true of the kingdom of heaven, of saints and angels in their several degrees, and of all the things which took place in the glorious revelation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Was it not at the time appointed from the foundation of the world that He was made man and dwelt amongst us? See Gal. 4. 4. Was it not in due season that Christ died for the ungodly? See Rom. 5. 6. Is it not by a righteous rule that God is reconciled through Christ to sinful man? Is it not by a perfect law of justice and of truth that Christ will Himself hereafter judge all mankind? Oh that man would not thus arrogantly resist his will, and disturb the settled peace of all the universe! Oh that man would not presume to be thus the author or abettor of confusion, by self sufficiency and pride, discension and rebellion! Oh that we would no longer be at enmity with God through sin, but would be at peace with Him through Christ!

It is however chiefly to our proceedings in the public congregation, that we must apply the reason and the rule here given, for peace and order. "Let all things be done to edifying." Let not each be eager to exercise his own gifts, with a view to exalt himself above his brethren. Let each submit to the appointed order of the church. This order allowed all who had miraculous gifts to use them in due turn. This order now prescribes to all who have due appointment, that they should minister in their several offices. And as for those who have no appointment to any office in the ministry, though they have no turn allowed them for speaking in the church, they are not less bound in private to exhort, instruct, console, and edify one another. And in all, the spirits of each are to be subject unto the rest. What is done in each single church, is to be the same as what is done "in all the churches of the saints." The Corinthians might not permit women to speak in theirs, as if they had a right to do herein differently from others; as if the word of God had come out from them, or had come unto them only. And the more we count ourselves to be spiritual, we must the more submit to the settled order of the church in all things consistent with the commandments of the Lord, even as though it were his commandment. And then how near should we be to such a church as God would have us, if we were all fashioned by one pattern, all governed by one rule; that rule his will, that pattern his example.

Lord, let not us be ignorant of thy ways! Or, if now ignorant, leave us not in ignorance for ever! Let us love the order in which Thou dost delight! Let us seek the peace which Thou lovest to impart!

2 By which also ye are saved, if ye || keep in memory * what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.

3 For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures;

4 And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures:

5 And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve.

6 After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain

7 After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles.

8 And last of all he was seen of me also, as of † one born out of due time.

9 For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.

§ 510. The death and resurrection of Christ.

St. Paul here declares to the Corinthians the Gospel which he had preached unto them. That is to say, he sends them, at the conclusion of his Epistle, a statement of what that Gospel is. For he had delivered unto them when first he saw them, that which he now repeats, that which had also been delivered to him, which he had received himself from Christ. And this Gospel is, "that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." So it was that he had preached; and so had they believed. This then is the great good news which St. Paul proclaimed, this the faith wherein we stand; by which also we are saved, if we keep in memory what has been preached unto us, unless we have believed in vain. That Christ died, and that He died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that He died at the time and for the purpose foretold, that at the end of the appointed years, Messiah was cut off for his people, see Dan. 9. 26, and that by his stripes we were healed; these form one chief part of the apostolic doctrine, these must form one chief portion of our faith. Let us see then that we give due heed to this most important fact. Let us see that we set foremost in our thoughts the death of Christ, as that by which alone we live. Let us look to it as the means whereby we have been reconciled unto God, delivered from the bondage of sin and death, and admitted to the inheritance of the saints in light.

The other great fact and doctrine here insisted on, as constituting the Gospel which St. Paul declared, is the resurrection of Christ from the dead. "He was buried," and "he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." And this is confirmed by mention of several occasions on which He was seen alive after his resurrection. These were events well known, and universally acknowledged for facts, among the early Christians. And yet even as early as the time at which St. Paul was writing, he thought it needful to put the Corinthians in mind of them. For unless they kept in memory what had been preached unto them, their faith would be all in vain. How far then do we keep in memory the resurrection of our Lord? Do we remember it, so as to think of it, when the thought would help to check in us too great fondness for this present life, or when it would raise in us greater hope of glory in the life which is to come? When we are tempted to partake of the vanities of the world, or to indulge in fleshly lusts, do we consider how our Lord's rising from the dead proves that we shall in like manner rise also? Do we hold back the hand which fain would seize upon unlawful gains? Do we close the lips that long to utter wicked or idle words? Do we deny the appetite which craves for pleasurable excess, when it ought to be contented with sufficiency? If not, have we not lost sight of the resurrection of our Lord? Have we not forgotten that we must rise like Him? Have we not believed in vain, or not at all, that we are bound to rise already unto newness of life?

St. Paul adds his own testimony to the resurrection of Christ, speaking of himself as "the least of the apostles." For when he considered his own past conduct, he felt himself not fit to be at all called an apostle. Yet when he thought of God's grace, and what abundant labours it had enabled him to go through, he could not refrain from being a witness, and hoping that he might be an effectual witness, to the truth of that which his own eyes had seen. Lord, when we look in upon ourselves, we seem scarce meet to call upon thy name! When we consider our many negligences and offences, we can scarce count ourselves for Christians at all! But when we consider the riches of thy mercy, and the abundance of thy heavenly help, then we feel that we can do all things through Christ strengthening us; yet not we, but the grace of God that is in us!

The resurrection of the dead proved.

12 Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?

13 But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen :

14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God ; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ : whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

16 For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised :

17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain ; ye are yet in your sins.

18 Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

19 If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

20 But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept.

21 For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

23 But every man in his own order : Christ the firstfruits ; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

24 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father : when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power.

25 For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

26 The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

27 For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him.

28 And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.

§ 511. Christ risen the first fruits of the dead.

That Christ had risen from the dead was one chief point in the doctrine preached by St. Paul. And that which had been preached by the apostle was what the Corinthians were bound to keep in memory. And therefore he might well ask them, "if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" Much it must be lamented, that owing to the many errors and divisions of Christians, for a thing to have been preached is no longer any evidence of its certainty. Much it is to be desired, that through God's blessing on our endeavours to promote unity and truth, neither the preaching of ministers, nor the hearing of the people, should any longer be often vain. Vain would both have been, the apostle argues, if Christ were not risen. For "if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." So that all those who had testified to the resurrection of Christ must have been in that case guilty of bearing false witness, to the dishonour of God. Thus would their preaching have been vain, and worse than vain, even false, and profane, and blasphemous. And so also would the faith of the hearers have been vain. They would have been believing a lie. They would have been still in their sins.

What a frightful thought is this for such as trust that their sins have been forgiven, that they are reconciled to God, that they have access to Him as sons to a loving Father, that their life through his Holy Spirit is really made to be acceptable unto Him, and that their death is an entrance into his abode of joy! And how little of such trust can we have for ourselves, or for our friends which have fallen asleep in Christ, if we can bear to think without horror that all this might possibly be delusion ; if we should not be the most miserable of all men, were it by any means made to appear, that we have no hope in Christ, for those spiritual and eternal benefits, which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," ch. 2, 9, which relate not to this life of sense, but to the other and new life which we begin to live on earth, and which we expect to enjoy in heaven for ever?

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept." Away then all false fears! Away all faint misgivings! "The Lord is risen indeed." Luke 24. 34. And his rising is a sure earnest of ours. He is "become the firstfruits of them that slept." He was the first who arose from death to life eternal. But He was first of many who shall hereafter follow. For as surely as the death of Adam entailed death on all mankind, so surely does it follow, from the resurrection of Christ, that all will be made alive; all "they that are Christ's, at his coming." Christ is the firstfruits; therefore in due order the whole harvest must follow. And this is to take place at the end of the world, before the end of that kingdom which the Son has received of the Father, to rule over his redeemed people. It will be when He shall have put down, and thoroughly subdued, every thing that exalteth itself against God, even all the pride of man, and all the malice of the devil. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." See then how surely sin must first be vanquished! See how mad it is in us to persevere in sin, when we thus know that of a certainty Christ shall prevail against us! See how all things are put under his feet; all things made subject unto the Son, that we may learn to submit to Him ourselves! See how "he is excepted, which did put all things under him," lest from the Son's reigning for a time we should suppose Him to be greater than the Father! See how even the Son Himself shall "be subject unto him that put all things under him," so as for us to know that the Father and the Son are one, and "that God may be all in all."

The resurrection of the dead further proved.

29 Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?

30 And why stand we in jeopardy every hour?

31 I protest by *your rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily.

32 If || after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink; for to morrow we die.

33 Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners.

34 Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame.

* Some read, our.

|| Or, to speak after the manner of men.

The resurrection of the dead is here further proved from the testimony of the many converts to the faith, who had been baptized in expectation of this event; as well as from the sufferings which they had cheerfully undergone in support of their testimony. And those who were disposed to doubt it, are reminded, that such doubts arise from want of knowing God, and from disinclination to do his will. "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" What was it that induced so many to become converts to the Gospel, to renounce their vain gods, to sacrifice all their worldly joys, to be buried with Christ by baptism into death, see Rom. 6. 4, to yield up property, and liberty, and life? what, if it were not reliance on the promise of Christ, that after death they should have life eternal? what, if it were not faith in the testimony of those who had seen the Lord after his resurrection?

And that this their testimony was no idle tale, they proved by what they suffered in support of it. The thing was one in which they could not be deceived. Whether Jesus was or was not crucified; whether He was or was not truly dead; whether He did or did not rise again from the dead, and shew Himself unto them truly alive, by such signs as were infallible; these were matters of fact, not fancies or opinions; these were things of which their senses could be sufficiently assured, even as of their own existence. In these things then they could not be deceived. Neither in these things could they be deceivers. For see what was all they had to gain by deceiving. To stand "in jeopardy every hour," in jeopardy of imprisonment and death; to "die daily," to feel daily the pain of apprehending death, or pains equal to those of dying; to fight "with beasts," which, being spoken "after the manner of men," means, to be exposed to the reproaches of the insolent, to the blows of the cruel, to the persecution of the fierce and bloodthirsty. These things, and such as these, were all that could be gained by preaching the resurrection of the dead through Christ; these were all that could be gained, if there were indeed no resurrection. And who could be so mad as to encounter all this loss, for the sake of teaching what they knew to be a lie, for the sake of leading others to hope in a resurrection, in which they had no confidence themselves?

"Let us eat and drink; for to morrow we die:" this would be of the two the more reasonable proceeding. This was a course of conduct more likely to be followed, by those who had no prospect of a life to come; to enjoy the present whilst they have it, to take all the pleasure they can get to day, lest they be overtaken by death to morrow. And this, the apostle hints, this was the thought which still prevailed in the minds of such as would not receive the testimony of the truth, they preferred to reckon of themselves as of the beasts which perish; they preferred to enjoy the pleasures of this life to the uttermost. The better principles and practices of the Corinthian converts were corrupted by communication with their unbelieving countrymen. They were asleep to righteousness. They were awake to sin. They had, some of them, not the knowledge of God. They needed to be put to shame by these words of the apostle. And what is it that now hinders our belief in the resurrection? Or how can we be counted to believe in it if we doubt that to die is gain? What but our sinfulness? What but our love for our sins? Either out of regard for this world's pleasures, we persuade ourselves that perhaps there is no other; or, owning that there is, we live as if there were none, and hence come to wish that there might be none. We fear that to us it will be a "resurrection of damnation." John 5. 29. We should be glad therefore to think that there were none at all. What is this but to be asleep in sin? What is this but to be ignorant of God? We must awake. All must know God. We must all awake; either now from sin to righteousness, or at the last trump from death to condemnation. All must know God; either now as their Father, Redeemer, Sanctifier, or hereafter as a consuming fire to all who refuse the salvation He proclaims.

How the dead are to be raised up, and with what body.

35 But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?

36 Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die:

37 And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain:

38 But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body.

39 All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds.

40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory.

42 So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption:

43 It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power:

44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.

45 And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual.

47 The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven.

48 As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly.

49 And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

§ 513. That we shall be raised up in the likeness of Christ.

We acknowledge that God was able to create. We see that He can preserve and multiply. We are familiar with the sight of seed sown and quickened in the ground, after it has first been severed from the living plant, and become to all appearance dead. How great then would be our folly, if we should refuse to believe the resurrection, merely because we cannot understand "how are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come!" It matters not what we sow. It matters not how little we should expect beforehand that our seed could become a plant or tree. "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." And so we might be sure God can do unto ourselves. God is able in the case of seeds and plants. God is able in the case of men, if He so think fit. He is able to give to every one of us a body after death. He is able to give to every one his own body. This may be sufficient answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up?" They are raised up by God. They are raised up by the power of Him who made the living, and much more can raise the dead; by the power of Him who made trees at the first, and much more can quicken seeds into plants; by the power of Him who at the first made man, and much more can make him live for ever.

But still we fain would know, "with what body do they come?" And the objector, who raises this inquiry, means to say, that they cannot surely come with such bodies as now they have on earth, or with the same as that with which they die. As if God could not make other bodies, infinite in variety; as if He had not made other bodies, innumerable to man, each fitted for its own place and purpose, each preserved, sustained, renewed by God. Men, and beasts, and fishes, and birds; what skill of contrivance, what fitness for their several uses, is manifest in the bodies of all these! The sun again, and moon, and stars, how different are these all from the rest, and from each other; how different at different seasons from themselves! "So also is the resurrection of the dead." So also is the body that is raised up, different from that which is buried; as different as the living plant from the lifeless seed; as different as the grown man from the infant, as different as the sun in all his strength from the pale and waning moon. We see how it is sown, "in corruption," "in dishonour," "in weakness." But we learn also from our daily experience, that there is nothing in this to hinder God from raising it, if He will, "in power," "in glory," "in incorruption." We see how it is sown "a natural body," that is to say, an animal body, a body that has been nourished by meats and drinks, has been subject to cold and nakedness, to pain, disease, and death. But we are assured that it is raised a spiritual body. We are assured by those Scriptures, which tell us of the first Adam, that he was made "a living soul;" Gen. 2. 7; and which also inform us of the second Adam, that whom He will He quickeneth. See John 5. 21. At first we are, like the first Adam, of the earth. Afterwards we are, like the second Adam, like "the Lord from heaven." Thus we know with what bodies the dead arise; the dead in Christ, with bodies like unto Christ's body. "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy;" such are our infirmities whilst we continue upon earth. "And as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly;" such is the glory which we expect in heaven. Now we bear "the image of the earthy." We hunger and thirst, we desire, we suffer, we die. But then we shall bear "the image of the heavenly;" we shall no more have want unsatisfied, we shall no more suffer, we shall die no more. God grant that we may thus be raised, by his great power and free grace, now from sin, and then from death; now to holiness, and then to heaven: through Jesus Christ our Lord!

The change that must take place at our resurrection.

50 Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

51 Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, 52 In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

53 For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

54 So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortal, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

55 'O death, where is thy sting? O || grave, where is thy victory?

56 The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law.

57 But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58 Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

1 Hos. 13. 14.

Few things make the resurrection more hard to understand, than our own experience of flesh and blood, how liable it is to decay and to corruption. We see the strength of the body gradually fade away. We see it pant, yea gasp for breath. We see it struggle, and sink, and expire. We find that upon death it becomes loathsome to the sense. We bury it in the ground. And if after sufficient time the grave is disturbed, we find that by degrees it has all mouldered into dust, or has been consumed by the worms bred within its own corruption. And how then can this body live for ever? We mistake in supposing that it can. And the apostle, to guard us against this error, here assures us, that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." The difficulty, the "mystery," he next thus explains, "We shall all be changed." A great alteration must take place in our nature. Even those of us who shall be alive at Christ's coming, and thus have no need to die; even we, if any of us should survive unto the day when the last trump shall sound, we as well as they who in all ages of the world have fallen asleep in the Lord, have died in the faith of Christ, we shall be changed.

What a day, what an hour, what a moment will that be! What a sound unheard before, that trumpet! What a change, to take place in the twinkling of an eye, for the corruptible to put on incorruption, for the mortal to put on immortality! Oh how happy will they be who shall then be found watching! Oh how great will be their privilege, to escape the pains of death, to be mortal yet not to die, to be corruptible, yet not to see corruption! Most plainly does the apostle intimate, that it was well for Christians in his time, much more in all ages afterwards, to live, to think, to act, as if that moment might at any time overtake them, as if that trump might at any time be heard. Most needful it is for all to be ever on the watch for that day and hour, of which no man knoweth, no not the angels of heaven, but the Father only. See Matth. 24. 36. Most reasonable it is for Him to speak of it in his word, as continually at hand, considering that with Him a thousand years are as one day. See 2 Pet. 3. 8. Most desirable for us to be glad that it is at hand, to pray that in our time God's kingdom may fully come; to wish that without any further risk of sorrow, without any longer waiting for our joy, we may enter at once into the courts of heaven, there to dwell for evermore.

But whether it shall be our lot to be thus highly favoured, or whether we must first, ere we enter into bliss, pass through the gloomy valley of the shadow of death, in any case "the time is short;" ch. 7. 29; "the day is at hand;" Rom. 13. 12; "the trumpet shall sound;" and the saying that is written shall be brought to pass, "Death is swallowed up in victory." And what a victory is this! What an enemy, to be thus laid low! Our awful dissolution is thus made a change from corruptible to incorruption! Our melancholy end is thus turned into the beginning of eternal joy! Do we not long to partake of this goodly triumph? Could we not wish that this very moment, whilst we speak or hear, the enemy might come forward to the combat, and we approach and seize upon the spoil? But are we indeed thus eager, willing, ready; thus persuaded that for us to die is gain? If not, what hinders? It is sin. The sting of death still rankles in our wounds, and we are still afraid to encounter this last enemy. We dare not ~~die~~. We could not bear to close our eyes on life. We could not wish to open them on eternity. We have sinned. We are sinning. We purpose still to sin. We repent not of our sins, we believe not that they are forgiven. Such is the case with them that fear to die. Such was not the case with the apostle. Such is not the case with them that love the Lord, and know that God giveth them the victory, through Jesus Christ. They know that for them He has destroyed death, He has put away sin, He has fulfilled the law. They are thankful unto God for his inestimable gift. Whether they live or die they are "stedfast, unmoveable," they fear no terrors, they yield to no temptations. In their health, in their sickness, and in the moment of their death, they still abound in the work of the Lord, they still labour to do all the good they can, they still have joy and peace in believing; forasmuch as they know that their "labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Concerning the collection for the saints, and St. Paul's coming.

1 Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye.

2 Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

3 And when I come, whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your † liberality unto Jerusalem.

4 And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.

5 Now I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia: for I do pass through Macedonia.

6 And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey whithersoever I go.

7 For I will not see you now by the way; but I trust to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit.

8 But I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost.

9 For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries.

10 Now if Timotheus come, see that he may be with you without fear: for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do.

11 Let no man therefore despise him: but conduct him forth in peace, that he may come unto me: for I look for him with the brethren.

12 As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren: but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

§ 515. How to plan, and to express our planning for the future.

Our Lord had taught the Jews that it was not unlawful to do works of mercy on the day which they kept for their sabbath. Whether this were the real seventh day from the creation of the world, or whether the right reckoning had been lost, either before or after the time of Moses, we have no sure means of knowing. Certain it is that on the first day of the Jewish week, Christians very soon began to keep their sabbath, and so have kept it unto the present time. And here we learn that works of charity on this day are not only not unlawful, but positively our duty to God our Saviour. For when St. Paul would exhort the Corinthians to make a charitable collection, he tells them, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." If then on this day we cast accounts at all, let it be to see how much we owe to God, how much we can spare to give unto the poor. "That there be no gatherings when I come." That is to say, set apart beforehand what you have to give, that when I arrive at Corinth, to take account of your collection, you may not be occupied in collecting it, but may give heed to what I shall then have to say unto yourselves. If then we wish on the sabbath to give alms, let us rather cast up our accounts the day before; that we may wait upon the Lord without distraction, on that day which He has appointed to be hallowed as his own.

And see how careful St. Paul was to avoid the risk of giving offence, the possibility of being suspected of selfishness, or wrong, in the conveying of this collection for the saints. As he would not have it gathered after his arrival, for fear of occupying time which might be better employed, so he would not appoint who should carry it, but told the Corinthians that whomsoever they should approve, them he would send, or with them, if it were meet, he would go himself. Let us therefore, besides our general endeavours to be true and just in all our dealings, let us be particularly watchful in case we are entrusted with any charitable funds, not only to do no wrong, but to give no room for being suspected of dishonesty. So few are they who give their time or attention to doing good, that others are apt to think they must have some selfish end in view. And the world, which is ever at enmity with God, is sure to hate, suspect, and slander those, who, like God, love to do good and distribute. But though we may thus reasonably expect to be reviled, we must take pains to give no handle for reviling. We must study to approve ourselves in all things to every man's conscience; we must "provide things honest in the sight of all men." Rom. 12. 17.

To these directions for their alms, the apostle adds some account of his plans and prospects during the winter and spring ensuing. "I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia." "It may be that I will abide and winter with you." "I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost." He gives them also directions for their behaviour, in case Timothy should come to them; telling them not to despise him, not to give less heed to his office and authority, by reason of what might seem wanting in his age; for so he instructed Timothy himself, "let no man despise thy youth." 1 Tim. 4. 12. And of another brother, Apollos, he informs them, that though he was not willing at that time, he would come when he should have time convenient. Now in all this, we may observe that the apostle does not make a point of saying in every instance what he says indeed most forcibly in one, "if the Lord permit." And therefore we need not scrupulously impose upon ourselves any particular form of words, to express our dependency on God, whenever we speak of plans for the future. Nor would it be right to abstain from all planning for the future, on the ground of our not knowing what an hour may bring forth. To provide for the duties of to-morrow may be often a chief part of the duty of to-day. To confer with others on our intentions, to let them know when we propose to visit them, whom to bring with us or to send, this may be an act of present kindness, to be done out of regard to Him who dwelleth in eternity. Let us but always think of Him as present, and we shall be safe from taking sinful thought for the morrow. Let us but always trust in Him for all that we design, and we need not always, though often we ought to say, that it is in his permission only that we trust.

Faithfulness and charity.

13 Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.

14 Let all your things be done with charity.

15 I beseech you, brethren, (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the firstfruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints,)

16 That ye submit yourselves unto such, and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth.

17 I am glad of the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus: for that which was lacking on your part they have supplied.

18 For they have refreshed my spirit and your's: therefore acknowledge ye them that are such.

19 The churches of Asia salute you. Aquila and Priscilla salute you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their house.

20 All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with an holy kiss.

21 The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand.

22 If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maran-atha.

23 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.

24 My love be with you all in Christ Jesus. Amen.

§ 516. Dissension and dissenters.

How hard it is to combine the two things here chiefly recommended, faithfulness and charity; watchfulness, firmness, manliness, in our attachment to the faith, and meekness, gentleness, humility towards those who oppose themselves! How hard it is, if we may judge from what we see in practice! How needful, if we may estimate the necessity from the example or from the counsel of the apostle. The last words of an epistle are usually counted to express that which is nearest to the writer's heart. The last words here written by St. Paul, express on the one hand, his love in Christ Jesus, and his desire for the grace of Christ Jesus, unto all; and on the other, his warning, that "if any man," any one of those to whom he wrote, to whom he sent his love in the Lord, any professed believer in Christ Jesus, "if any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maran-atha;" that is to say, put aside for condemnation till the Lord cometh. And these words come next after the salutation of the apostle, signed, for their better certifying, with his own hand; the rest of the epistle having been written out by some one else. And in like manner we are here first exhorted to watch, to stand fast in the faith, to quit us like men, to be strong; and next to let all our things be done with charity. And again we are bid to submit ourselves to such as "have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints." And this is one of the chief means towards the maintenance of unity in the faith, submission to them that are over us in the Lord. See 1 Thess. 5. 12. Whilst on the other hand, St. Paul has scarce given this direction, so needful to the Corinthians in their divided state, so plain a reproof for their divisions, when he heals the wound which he had thought fit to inflict, by telling them how glad he was to see their messengers, "Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus," mentioning them by name, for a proof of his personal regard, acknowledging the refreshment they had given to his spirit, adding as though he counted them to be now reconciled, the salutations of all the brethren, and of the churches, to them all, and bidding them greet each other with a holy kiss.

And this is indeed the spirit of this whole Epistle; in which the apostle insists at great length on the sinfulness of division, declares the grounds and the extent of Christian love, and applies it to the chief cases of difficulty, in which the Corinthians were at a loss to practise it. Let us then from the whole learn this lesson, as to those dissensions in religion, which so grievously prevail amongst ourselves. They are sin against God. They are scandal to the unbeliever. They are blemishes, or rather gross deformities in the character of the faithful. They are offences of the deepest dye against the will of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. However lightly they are esteemed amongst mankind, we must abominate them as being wickedness in the sight of God. We must abhor the sin. But God forbid that we should hate the sinner! We must abhor the sin; so as to avoid it most watchfully ourselves, so as to be sure that we in no way countenance or support it, that we in no way cause divisions, or give handle to those who cause them, that we do every thing in our power to remove them. Else how can we stand guiltless of that wrath and strife which we have helped to aggravate, or not helped to allay? We must hate the sin; but we must still love the sinner. We must stand fast in the faith; but it must be with charity. We must submit ourselves unto our ministers; but we must be kind to such as will not be subject. We must be ready to remove them that offend; and yet be able still to say, "The grace of our Lord," and also "my love be with you all in Christ Jesus." I am sorry for your sin. I grieve for the error of your way. I am concerned to think how greatly you transgress, in your departure from the faith, in your breach of unity. I am not offended that you conform not your views to mine, but I am shocked that we should not both be of one mind in Christ. I pray that we may both have a right judgment in all things. And I am sure that we then must have the same. God grant that we may have the same, and that the right! God grant that both in faith and love, all who differ may all be one!

St. Paul giveth thanks.

1 Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia:

2 Grace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort;

4 Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble by the comfort, wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

5 For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.

6 And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation.

7 And our hope of you is stedfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation.

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life:

9 But we had the * sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead:

10 Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us;

11 Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

* Or, answer.

St. Paul writes a second letter to the Corinthians, to praise that in them which was amended, and to reprove further what still was wrong; being guided by the Holy Spirit of God, to enlarge by this means the revelation of the Gospel unto all churches of the saints, and especially to make it acceptable to them which were at Corinth. And with the latter view he joins with himself Timothy, whom he here calls his brother; and whose concurrence in what he had to say was of value for this reason, that he had so much to say about himself. For in this Epistle we shall find much which relates chiefly to the apostle's own feelings and conduct; these having been evil spoken of at Corinth, so that it was needful for him to justify himself, lest his ill name should be an injury to the Gospel. Whereinsoever we write or speak concerning ourselves, may it be not by choice but by constraint! may it be not for our own honour's sake, but for fear of compromising the honour of the Gospel! and may it be ever with that modesty, faithfulness, and truth, of which the apostle has here set us an example!

He begins with wishing grace and peace from God, who is the Father of all, and from his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. He then gives thanks to God for the comfort he had experienced in his tribulation; calling God "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort." How pleasant it is to hear that these endearing names belong to Him who made us, to Him whom we have so often and so grievously offended, to Him whose wrath is so plainly revealed against all unrighteousness of men, to Him who so often chastens us in this present life, and who is able to make us suffer in eternity! How glad we ought to be, to communicate to others the comfort which from Him we have received ourselves! How thankful we ought to feel, that whatever sufferings the Gospel may entail on us, it affords us consolation, by Christ, in proportion; how joyful to be assured, that both our sufferings and our joy may minister, if we duly use them, towards the comfort and salvation of our brethren! May we never sniffer except with such patient submission, and in so just a cause, as may make the ills we meet with worthy to be called "the sufferings of Christ!" May we never fail to hope, for those who partake in our sorrows, sicknesses, or pains, that they also, through God's good gift, may be partakers of the consolation!

St. Paul would not have his brethren at Corinth to be ignorant of the trouble which came to him in Asia. And God has taken care that all of us also should hear of it, by having it here set down for our instruction. Let us note therefore how the apostle, and they that were with him, "were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that" they "despaired even of life." They "had the sentence of death" in themselves. This was the judgment they formed of their peril, under the violent persecution which they met with, that they should surely die. And why is it good for us to note these their sufferings? That we may note the source of their consolation. They learnt to trust not in themselves, "but in God which raiseth the dead." They knew that much more He could deliver them for the present if He would. It was a light matter for them to risk their lives on earth, when they counted death to be the entrance unto a better resurrection. They prayed, and reckoned also on the prayers of others. They prayed together, with a view to giving thanks for the gift bestowed, giving the thanks of many with one heart and soul. May we, when we are tried by pressure above our strength, by peril of life, and apprehension of instant death, trust not in ourselves but in the Lord! May we feel assured that He will either now save our lives, or in any case hereafter save us everlastingly! May we pray, and join in praying with each other, not only in order to gain the help we pray for, but with a further view to the joy of giving thanks for it unto God, when in his good time we have obtained it!

St. Paul accounteth for his change of plan.

12 For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward.

13 For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end;

14 As also ye have acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are our's in the day of the Lord Jesus.

15 And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second || benefit;

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judæa.

17 When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay?

18 But as God is true, our * word toward you was not yea and nay.

19 For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea.

20 For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us.

21 Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God;

22 Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

23 Moreover I call God for a record upon my soul, that to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth.

24 Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: for by faith ye stand.

|| Or, grace.

* Or, preaching.

§ 518. Of trust in the promises of God.

Here is another ground of comfort and of joy, the testimony of conscience. Most consolatory it is, when we are accused of double dealing, to feel assured, on sufficient grounds, that we have conversed "in simplicity and godly sincerity;" and to be aware that this is not in our own strength, not by our own worldly wisdom, "but by the grace of God." And such had been St. Paul's conduct to the Corinthians. And such was now the testimony of his conscience, both in respect of others, and especially in respect of them. And this he was sure they would acknowledge, when they read what he had to write. As also they had acknowledged in part; even many of them, the greater part, having been free to own the mutual good will between the apostle and themselves, how they were each to other a subject of rejoicing "in the day of the Lord Jesus." Now in what he says of being acknowledged, he most probably refers to the manner in which they received his first Epistle, as reported to him by Titus, who had conveyed it. See eb. 12. 18. And that he adds "in part," this implies, that some were still refractory.* And this accounts for it, that whilst some parts of this second Epistle are evidently designed to encourage the faithful, others are no less plainly calculated to rebuke the froward, and to convict the false.

One of the charges likely to arise against St. Paul at Corinth was this, that he had used lightness in not visiting that city at the time when he had proposed to do so. See 1 Cor. 16. 6. Here therefore he explains to them, that though he had seen cause to alter his plan, he had by no means changed his mind. When he was minded to come to them before, it was in the same confident reliance on their good will, which he now entertained; it was for no private gain unto himself, but in order to confer on them the benefit of a second visit, which he was still desirous to impart. He framed not these purposes according to the flesh, with any worldly views. He was not likely to have changed them, except for sufficient cause, except with a view to the same end, their good. And this he solemnly assures them had been his motive in this instance; "to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth." For their benefit he desired to come. For their benefit he for a while delayed his visit. It was good for them, in this instance, to be spared the exercise of his apostolic authority, in the chastisement of their offence. And he would not have them count him, as they might else have been apt to do, to lord it over their faith, but rather reckon him to be a helper of their joy. Thus then let us now reckon of our ministers. Not masters they are but helpers, not lords but guides; to shew the way, and to walk therein themselves; to stand by the faith they preach to others; to share the joy which they help others to obtain.

Thus St. Paul had not been changeable in his mind, though he had not done the very thing which he purposed. And hence he takes occasion to observe, that much more the Son of God, whom he had preached, and "all the promises of God in him," are "not yea and nay," are unchanged and unchangeable. Yet how slow are most of us to receive these gracious tidings! How averse to put our trust in these glorious assurances! When man speaks we readily believe. When man purposes what hereafter he may probably either not be able or not see fit to do, we reckon the thing as already sure, we hold him to his promise, we feel aggrieved like the Corinthians if it be not performed. When God promises, and that with most infallible assurance, when He establishes us, and anoints us with his grace, even his Spirit in our hearts, as the seal and earnest of his promise; oh why are we so reluctant to believe? why catch we not with like eagerness at his words? why feel we not much more sure of their fulfilment? Why? if it be not that we do not wish them to be true. Why? if it be not that we had rather they should fail. Let us but long for heaven, let us but find ourselves labouring through faith in Christ to live unto the Lord; and we shall then count what God has said for certain truth, we shall then feel thoroughly assured that through the atonement of Jesus Christ, our sins are forgiven and we are saved.

The exercise of mercy in discipline.

1 But I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you in heaviness.

2 For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?

3 And I wrote this same unto you, lest, when I came, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

4 For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

5 But if any have caused grief, he hath not grieved me, but in part: that I may not overcharge you all.

6 Sufficient to such a man is this || punishment, which was inflicted of many.

7 So that contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with over much sorrow.

8 Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him.

9 For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things.

10 To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also: for if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it * in the person of Christ;

11 Lest Satan should get an advantage of us: for we are not ignorant of his devices.

|| Or, censure.

* Or, in the sight.

§ 519. How we ought to forgive offenders.

In the first Epistle, the Corinthians were reprov'd for favour shewn to one that had "his father's wife." And they were bidden to "put away" from themselves "that wicked person." 1 Cor. 5. 1, 13. Here they are instructed how to "restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." Gal. 6. 1. The first passage might well serve for our guide, in exercising the severity of discipline. And this latter is no less fit to direct us, in tempering with mercy the judgment of the church. For see how unwilling was St. Paul to come again to the Corinthians in heaviness, to be forced to manifest displeasure, and to inflict punishment, on the second occasion of his visiting them! See how he assured them, that they whom he would in such case have to make sorry, were the very persons who alone could make him glad, even by their repenting and obeying! See how he wrote his Epistle before he went, on purpose that when he came he might have joy instead of sorrow; being persuaded that they would feel for the pain they had given him, and would remember that his happiness depended upon theirs!

Such were the feelings of the apostle, towards those who had offended; he having as an apostle the supreme controul of the discipline in the church. Such ought to be the feelings of those who bear rule, in any discipline which now might be restored. Such ought to be the feelings of all parties concerned, towards those who have fallen away into sin, whether there be any discipline or not. We ought to wish, not to have to go to them in heaviness. We ought to feel, that whilst they are sorry we can scarce be glad. We ought by any means in our power, whether by writing, by message, or by the intercession of friends, to prevent, as far as possible, the risk of rupture, the necessity of severity. We ought to appeal to their best affections, to their sympathy for ourselves, to their conviction that our joy depends on theirs. We ought to write, or speak, or act, "out of much affliction and anguish of heart;" shedding tears of tenderness for their sins and sorrows, in proof of the abundance of our love. We ought carefully to except others from any share in the guilt incurred by one, or by some; and not to overcharge many for the sins of few. Thus ought the church to qualify her severity of discipline. Thus ought each member of the church to heal, by the application of love and sympathy, the wounds which are inflicted by faithfulness and truth.

And further if the offender should prove penitent, we must in due time restore him to his privileges in the church, to his place in our friendship and society. "Sufficient to such a man is this punishment," whatever it may have been, if it have brought him to godly sorrow. So that we ought to forgive and comfort, we ought to make our love manifest and sure to him, we ought to be as willing to forgive as the apostle here describes himself, as "in the person of Christ," as administering to each other the love we have experienced from Him, out of regard to his will, out of pure affection for our brother's soul, out of watchfulness against Satan and his manifold devices. The offender had given proof of his contrition; else there would have been no risk of his being "swallowed up with overmuch sorrow." The Corinthians had given proof of their obedience in all things, by putting away from themselves the offender, whom at first they had been too willing to countenance. And now when Satan would have taken advantage of this occasion, for estranging their affections from their brother, the apostle beseeches them to forgive; and that not out of indifference to sin, but out of regard to the forgiveness of the Lord. Let not us therefore be tempted by Satan to feel bitterly towards those, whom for a time it is our duty to avoid. Let us be neither too weak to avoid them for a time, nor too severe to renew our friendship in due season. Let us watch with sympathy their growing sorrow. Let us mingle our tears, though apart, with theirs. Let us offer up joint prayers for mercy, issuing from lips which are not allowed to meet, but presented to the same throne of grace, by the same prevailing Intercessor. Thus shall we not lose but win our brother, get advantage over Satan, gain honour for our Lord, and have joy in our own hearts for ever.

St. Paul always made to triumph in Christ.

12 Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord,

13 I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

14 Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place.

15 For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish:

16 To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things?

17 For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ.

|| Or, deal deceitfully with.

What could be more delightful to St. Paul, than to find at Troas a door opened unto him of the Lord, when he went there "to preach Christ's Gospel?" Where was he more likely to settle for a time, to have joy and peace in abiding? Yet even there he had no rest in his spirit because he found not Titus his brother. Even thence he departed in order to go into Macedonia. And this he mentions by way of shewing the anxiety he felt, as to the reception of his first Epistle by the Corinthians, as to their compliance with the directions he had given them. For from Titus he expected to hear of their behaviour: and in Macedonia he expected to meet with Titus. And there it was that at last he received from Titus the great consolation of hearing, how earnest was their desire, how great their mourning, how fervent their mind towards him. See ch. 7. 7. Thus his affection for this church of his own planting was maintained through the period of their delinquency: to glow with renewed warmth and tenderness, on the tidings of their reconciliation. Thus the new door, which was opened for his labours in the Gospel, could not engage the attention of his heart, whilst he was in doubt as to the obedience, faithfulness, and love, of those whom he had before begotten in Christ. See 1 Cor. 4. 15. Thus God allows us to indulge, even in the doing of his work, the yearnings of natural affection; directing our right choice, and overruling our mistakes, so as to promote his greater glory in the end.

Whether St. Paul were right or wrong in taking leave of Troas, God always caused him to triumph in Christ; God made manifest by means of him "the savour of his knowledge" "in every place." And therefore he gives thanks to God for this signal honour, that he was "unto God a sweet savour of Christ," in all who heard him; that he had grace to speak in Christ, not as many who corrupted God's word, but "as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God." When he contemplated the eminence of this privilege, for a frail and erring being to minister unto the glory of his Creator, for one of those whose sins cost the death of Christ, to be an instrument effectual in his hands, for making known his Gospel to the world, well might he ask in humble acknowledgment of his own incompetence, "Who is sufficient for these things?" No man, no not even St. Paul. No man is sufficient of himself. No man was more aware than this apostle of his own insufficiency. And therefore whilst he asserted his apostolic authority, whilst he gave thanks for his universal success, whilst he compared his progress to a triumphal march, where sweetest flowers were strewed along the path, in honour of the Saviour he proclaimed, the conqueror of sin and death; yet he testified in the midst of his holy rapture that it was not in his own strength that he succeeded. God grant unto our ministers that they may feel and own their insufficiency for the work they have in hand! God grant unto their people, that these also may be ready in any success they meet with against sin and Satan, to join in the devout words of David; "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give the praise: for thy loving mercy, and for thy truth's sake!" Ps. 115. 1.

And here, lastly, let us observe how St. Paul speaks of his ministry, and how true it is of all the ministry of the Gospel, that it is "unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved and in them that perish: to the one" "the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life." God's glory cannot be hindered by our perversity, though He is pleased to reckon that we promote it by our obedience and faith. If however we believe not, and perish, God's ordinances are notwithstanding precious; his ministers, his word, his sacraments, his church, redound notwithstanding to the honour of his name. Though light dazzle and make blind the eye that is diseased, it is still light to them that are in health. The melody of sounds, the savour of sweet scents, are acceptable to well ordered senses, though to such as are deranged they may be unwelcome. And so truth also is truth, and grace is grace, though many hear the Gospel only to their fall. And so they that fall, no less than they that stand, they that perish, as well as they that shall be saved, will be made to justify, the first by their condemnation, and the other by their everlasting joy, God's wisdom in the redemption of mankind.

St. Paul appealeth to the Corinthians as his epistle.

1 Do we begin again to commend ourselves? or need we, as some others, epistles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you?

2 Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men:

3 Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart.

4 And such trust have we through Christ to God-ward:

5 Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God:

6 Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.

|| Or, quickeneth.

§ 521. How ought to magnify the grace of God.

Few things are more painful than to be put upon our defence, where we cannot be justified without seeming to commend ourselves. Yet even this pain we must be willing to undergo, rather than acquiesce in a false accusation, to the scandal of those who might else believe it. Only let us be sure that the sounding our own praise is not our object. Only let us be as far from desiring so to do, as St. Paul in this passage of his Epistle. He commended not himself, as his enemies supposed; for he had already owned his own insufficiency. See ch. 2. 16. He commended not himself; nor needed he any letters of commendation, either from the Corinthians, or to them. For they were, as he here tells them, a commendatory letter, written in the hearts of himself and of his fellow labourers. Their faith, and zeal, and obedience, of which he cherished in his heart, most fond remembrance, and most lively hope, these might be known and read of all men; these testified to all who knew of them, the faithfulness of him who had been their teacher in the Gospel. How forcibly does he here admonish the Corinthians, that they ought so to adorn their faith by holiness of life, as that all who heard of their being Christians, might give credit to the apostle, and through him also glory to the Lord! How skilfully does he turn from the objection which he apprehended against himself, to the encouragement which he would convey to them!

Let us remember, whilst we read his animating words, that we also are his epistle. Let us feel as if all men had their eyes upon our conduct, to see whether we do according to what St. Paul has written, according to what our Lord demands. For we are not only the epistle of St. Paul; we are “manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ,” ministered by those whom He appoints to minister, prepared by them, but really written by our Lord and Saviour; “written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart.” This is our description. This is the account of what all Christians ought to be, of what all true Christians are. And so they are described beforehand by the prophet; “I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts.” Jer. 31. 33. Let us examine then what that is, which in our hearts is manifest. Is it what we may conceive to have been written by our Saviour? Is it love for God; or is it enmity to his will? Is it peace towards each other; or is it jealousy, and envying, and strife? Is it purity, humility, gentleness, and truth; or is it falsehood, fierceness, pride, and lasciviousness? We may know the writer by what is written. We may judge whether it is what Christ wishes to publish to the world. Would we wish our hearts to be known and read of all men? If not, how can we be such an epistle, as is here meant? Would that which is most legible in our hearts, redound to God’s honour? Would it appear to have been written by “the Spirit of the living God?” If not, if only sin, and that unrepented, can therein be read; in vain has all his goodness been poured on our hearts, these are not fleshy tables, they are tables of stone, which it is well if He do not straightway break to pieces in his wrath, and cast away in his displeasure for ever.

“And such trust have we through Christ to God-ward.” Such trust had the apostle towards God, through Christ; such trust as not to need to commend himself, as not to need letters of commendation, as that he was persuaded, that those to whom he wrote would prove to be to his praise, and to the glory of the Gospel. And this trust he had through Christ, not as though by his own exertions he had converted or confirmed the Corinthians. For here he again owns his utter insufficiency to compass any such success by himself, his utter dependence on God for his sufficiency. Whilst at the same time he thankfully declares, that God had made him, and those who wrought with him, sufficient “ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit:” of the New Testament, not of the Old; of that which “giveth life,” not that which “killeth.” See Rom. 3. 20. In like manner let us count it no presumption to praise God for such ability or grace, as He has really given us. To claim the credit as our own, this would be presumptuous. But is it not also a disparagement of his honour, to suppress, through false humility and affected shame, the praise which is really his? Is it not arrogance which makes us reckon our success to be our own? And if, when we profess to know that it is God’s, we are still reluctant to proclaim the victory, must not this be because we are still counting it to be ours?

The Old Testament and the New compared.

7 But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away:

8 How shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious?

9 For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory.

10 For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

11 For if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

12 Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech:

|| Or, boldness.

13 And not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not stedfastly look to the end of that which is abolished:

14 But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which vail is done away in Christ.

15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart.

16 Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away.

17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

18 And we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

|| of the Lord the Spirit.

Though the Old Testament is not contrary to the New, the New Testament is superior to the Old. And yet the first was excellent in its season. And in order to value as we ought the excellency of the second, we must consider well the excellence of the first. The Scriptures of the Old Testament were "given by inspiration of God." 2 Tim. 3. 16. They revealed the will of God to man, so much of it as it was then fitting for man to know, and to so many of mankind as were fit to know it. They were glorious; though they convicted man of sin, and sentenced him to death. They were glorious; as expressing the glory of Jehovah, his justice, mercy, and truth. They were glorious; as signifying beforehand the redemption of mankind by the death of Christ. They were glorious; as expressing the beauty of holiness, the perfection of that righteousness which God requires at our hands, and which God alone can enable us to fulfil. Thus was the ministration of death glorious; even the letter, in the Old Testament, "written and engraven in stone," in that which, when administered to man, proved only the means of condemnation.

How much rather then shall "the ministration of the spirit" be glorious? By the one we were condemned. The other is the ministration of righteousness, whereby we are justified. By the one we are sentenced to death. The other is "the ministration of the spirit;" and "the spirit giveth life:" ver. 6; the spiritual doctrines of the Gospel, its spiritual privileges, its spiritual aids, and above all "the Lord," who "is that Spirit," He is able to give life unto every man that believeth. The one "was made glorious," considered in itself. The other so much excels it, that the first, when compared, has "no glory in this respect." The one was to be done away; nay, has been done away. The other "remaineth;" yea, that love in which it chiefly consists, "never faileth." 1 Cor. 13. 8. Oh how great then is our privilege that we are admitted to this better covenant, to this which in glory exceeds that which was made glorious, to this which does not condemn but justify, which ministers not to death but unto life!

"Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech." This was the method of those who first proclaimed the Gospel. And like to it must be the mind of us who have received those tidings of great joy. "And not as Moses, which put a vail over his face," because the children of Israel could not bear to see the glory of their covenant, which was to be abolished; not such is the glory of the Gospel, no such vail is on the countenance of our Mediator; no such fear need we have to look into the end of that which has indeed no end but is to last for ever. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." We are no longer in bondage unto fear. We are free to approach, as sons, unto God as to a Father. We are free to use his written word, free to search his inspired Scriptures, free to prove all things, free to comprehend what is the length, and breadth, and depth, and height, and to know as far as possible the love of God, which passeth knowledge, and to be filled, so abundant is his gift, with all the fulness of God. See Eph. 3. 18, 19. The children of Israel saw only through a vail. "Which vail is done away in Christ." Upon their heart even now there is a vail. Though when Israel "shall turn to the Lord," from them also "the vail shall be taken away." But we Christians, all of us, with no vail upon our hearts between us and the countenance of our Lord, look stedfastly on his revealed glory, see as in a glass the image of our Redeemer; and by the sight of what He is, by the knowledge of what He has been to us, are changed into the same image, are converted unto the likeness of Himself, step by step, from grace to grace, "from glory to glory; even as by the Spirit of the Lord," even by the Holy Ghost which He has given us. Such is our liberty, that we can look upon his glory. Such is his glory, that we can behold and live. It exceeds in glory; and yet we exceed in looking on it. Oh that whilst we look we may be changed! Oh that we may be changed into the image of our Lord!

St. Paul justifieth his ministry.

1 Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not;

2 But have renounced the hidden things of * dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

3 But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost:

4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them.

5 For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake.

6 For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

7 But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

* Gr. shame.

328 The faithful minister.

As Timothy is joined with St. Paul in the first address of this Epistle to the Corinthians, so we must reckon both to be spoken of throughout; except where it is plain that what is said belongs to one. And not of these two only are most of these things written, but of others also who were their fellow labourers in the Gospel. And not of them only, but of all Christian ministers to the end of time. For in most of what is here said, to justify our apostle to one church, we may find matter of profitable instruction to all ministers in all churches; nay, also to all Christian people.

In the words before us we learn of Christian ministers, that if they would follow the example of St. Paul, they must consider themselves to "have this ministry," to be intrusted with a solemn charge, to be made servants of Christ, not lords over the consciences of men; and to "have received mercy," to have experienced no common degree of favour at God's hand in being intrusted with so honourable an office. And feeling that their trust is great and glorious, they must "faint not." They must not be dispirited by ill success. They must persevere through evil report and good report, in preaching salvation by Christ Jesus. There must be no concealment, no artifice, no craftiness, in their handling the word of God. They must not interpret it with a view to please their hearers, or with a design to exalt themselves. They must not labour to adapt it to any system of their own. They must not hold one doctrine in secret, and preach another to their people. But they must make manifest the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, to all men: and so commend themselves "to every man's conscience in the sight of God." They must not imagine that they can secure more large success, by acting on the principles of worldly wisdom; or suppose that the rejection of the Gospel by many, is to be avoided by adulterating the truth. It is the fault not of the Gospel, but of them that are lost. It is Satan, whom the worldly minded serve for God; he it is who makes them unable to behold "the light of the glorious gospel of Christ;" he it is who holds the vail over their hearts, to hinder this bright image of God from shining into the darkness which there prevails.

The faithful minister therefore preaches not himself, "but Christ Jesus the Lord." He follows not his own devices in his preaching, nor seeks to bring into notice his own ability, nor desires to establish his own authority. He knows that no such artifices can save the lost. He trusts only to that Saviour, who is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, see Heb. 1. 3, to Him only he trusts for giving sight unto the blind, and safety to the lost. There is darkness upon the face of the deep. There is confusion in the soul of the sinner; so that he is scarcely able to discern right from wrong, good from evil, heaven from hell. He is on the brink of the pit of destruction, and knows it not. He is beset with enemies who would take away his life, and is not aware. The flames of that fire which is never quenched, are lighted all around him; and he sleeps, instead of flying for deliverance. And shall man pretend in such emergency to turn the night into day? None but God could say, "Let there be light: and there was light." Gen. 1. 3. Only in Christ's name, and as his servants, can we hope effectually to proclaim, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. 5. 14.

"But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." This accounts for the choice of instruments so weak and frail, as are the very best and most able of mankind. Whether as ministers, or as members of the church of Christ, we seek to make the Gospel known, we must feel that we are but mean, unworthy instruments. And whilst we seek to be less unworthy than we are, we must admire the wisdom of Him, who out of our unworthiness contrives to teach this truth, that "the excellency of the power" is his own. Oh let us then look to Him as our Teacher. Let us look to Christ as our great High Priest. Let us not fix too fondly our affection on any one of his servants upon earth. But whilst we thankfully profit by their ministry, and acknowledge the value of their services, whilst we respect their office, honour their gifts, lament their faults, and pray for their prosperity; let us look up beyond their ministry to the Shepherd of the shepherds; let us remember that the excellency of the power is not theirs but his; let us pray to be taught by Him who cannot err; let us seek the help of Him who never fails.

The trials and support of the apostle.

8 We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair;

9 Persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed;

10 Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body.

11 For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

12 So then death worketh in us, but life in you.

13 We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, 'I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak;

14 Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus

shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.

15 For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God.

16 For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day.

17 For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

"Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of all." Ps. 34. 19. How exactly was this promise fulfilled in the sufferings endured by the first preachers of the Gospel! How fully will it be realized in us, if we like them count all things but loss for Christ! See Phil. 3. 8. We may not live a life of ease. We have a conflict to carry on in our own hearts. We have war to wage with the enemy of souls. We may not feel his assaults, and not resist. We dare not, when we see him ravaging the heedless world, deceiving the simple, overreaching the wise, getting the poor into his den, and slaying the rich in the midst of their treasures; we dare not, as true soldiers of Jesus Christ, we dare not desert our Saviour's ranks, we dare not refuse to fight his enemy; we would not if we durst. We long to help in the deliverance of our brethren. We desire to warn them of their danger, to assist them in avoiding it. We are eager, forward, watchful, diligent, to get advantage over Satan, to foil his devices, to overthrow his kingdom on the earth, and to drive him back, whence he came, to the pit of destruction.

These feelings, these principles, these duties, keep us, if we be Christians indeed, in a state of perpetual warfare. "We are troubled on every side" by the craftiness of our enemy. We are perplexed by the backwardness, waywardness, and indifference of our brethren, who ought to be our friends. We are persecuted by those in whose behalf we are contending. We are cast down, nay even trampled under foot, in the fierce onset of our strife against iniquity. But we are not destroyed, we are not forsaken, we are not in despair; nay, we are not distressed. In our sorrow we still have joy, in our disappointment hope. Though all men forsake us, God does not forsake us. Though we fall, God lifts us up. We hold aloft the standard of the cross: we cling to it for our safety: we shew it forth for the deliverance of our brethren; in our most fearful encounters, or most sad reverses, we are "always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh," that we may behave agreeably to the sign under which we are enlisted, that we may be crucified to the world, to the lusts of the flesh.

And thus we do, thus we live, thus contend for the mastery, chiefly through faith and love. We have regard to the life of others, in the death to which we expose ourselves. We do all things for the sake of others; "that the abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God." It is that his grace may abound towards them; that they may value it, profit by it, turn it to his praise, make it minister to his glory; this is the great object of our desire in all our labour of love towards each other. And love takes this direction by reason of our faith. "We also believe, and therefore speak." We are persuaded that Christ died for all men, that God "raised up the Lord Jesus," that He will "raise up us also by Jesus," and that He is able and willing to present us with them, and them with us, blameless, through the merits of our Lord. We "therefore speak." We cannot hold our peace. We cannot refrain from admonishing our brethren. We cannot believe that except they repent they perish, and not bid them repent and be saved.

"For which cause we faint not;" by reason of our faith, by reason of our love, by reason of those things which we believe and desire, and hope, and long for. Our warfare may wear out the body. It does but exercise, and strengthen, and confirm the soul. Each trial, through God's grace, makes us better able to endure. Each affliction, so sure is his promise, prepares us for the greater glory. How light becomes our present tribulation, when thus weighed against the joy we look for! The one "for a moment," the other for ever! The one we see. But what is sight? How soon it fails, grows dim in age, or comes to nought in death. The other is not seen. Eye hath not seen it. But faith beholds. For God has spoken. And He will bring it to pass. And it lasts for ever. The senses which enjoy it never fail. The soul which has heaven, never dies. It is to be, and to be for ever. It is to be for ever happy. It is to dwell where God is, with Him. It is to reign, where Christ reigns, in glory.

How we groan whilst in the body.

1 For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2 For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven :

3 If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

4 For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

5 Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

6 Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord :

7 (For we walk by faith, not by sight :)

8 We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.

9 Wherefore we || labour, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.

10 For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

The apostle here still describes himself, and would have all Christians conceive themselves described, as in a state of distress. "In this we groan." Though "the things which are not seen are eternal," ch. 4. 18, though we know that when our earthly house, which is but temporary, shall fall to pieces, when the worn out body shall moulder in corruption, "we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" yet, notwithstanding, "in this we groan." We are painfully anxious to attain unto that heavenly abode. We desire to be clothed with that immortality. Here we feel burdened; weary and heavy laden; depressed with the conviction of our own sinfulness, and with the many proofs of sin which we see around us. Not that we can ever bring ourselves to desire the decease of the body; but that we could wish, and ought to wish, to have it renewed in glory. We could wish, and ought to wish, to have mortality swallowed up of life. Else how are we believing in God's word, that Christ is ascended into heaven, see Eph. 4. 9, 10, if we cannot feel, on the review of our present state, that to depart and to be with Christ is far better? See Phil. 1. 23. Or how believe we what He has promised to ourselves, forgiveness of sin, and resurrection unto life eternal; if we are not persuaded that to us "to die is gain?" Phil. 1. 21. Let us believe what we are told, let us know what may be known from the word of God, and we shall then groan within ourselves, whilst we wait for the redemption of the body; see Rom. 8. 23; we shall have no rest in our spirit, till we enter into possession of those good things, which God has prepared for them that love Him. See 1 Cor. 2. 9.

And of these things He has already given us an earnest, in the gift of the Spirit, in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, in the heavenly temper and disposition, which by this means we find within ourselves. "Therefore we are always confident." If we find ourselves pure in heart, being corrupt by nature; if meek, when we should else be angry; humble, instead of proud; and not covetous, but heavenly minded; have we not herein proof that God is fitting us for a better resurrection? Know we not hence, that whilst we are present here, we are hindered from something better that belongs to us elsewhere? And should we not be well pleased rather "to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord?" For we live, if our life be such as this, "by faith and not by sight." Our daily walk is influenced by the evidence of things unseen; and shall not this work also on the desires of our heart? We now deny ourselves, out of regard to what God has commanded. And how can we help also being grieved within ourselves out of our longing for what He has promised? How can we help labouring, so longing as to labour, "that, whether present or absent, we may be" acceptable unto Him?

"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ;" most affecting thought; before the throne of our Redeemer! Therefore is He Judge, because He died for us. Therefore He has a right to call us to account. And therefore we shall feel with tenfold force, his right to sentence us to death, if we have not lived according to his will. For now that we are his people, redeemed by Him, saved by his free gift, by the sacrifice of Himself, we are bought by Him with the price of his own blood, we are bound to do all his pleasure. Hence it follows that we shall hereafter receive good or evil, according to the things done in the body. According to the life we lead in this our tabernacle on the earth, will be our sentence when it shall be dissolved. Thus the Christian is not exempt from "the terror of the Lord." Ver. 11. The Christian must join in the confession of the Psalmist, "There is mercy with thee: therefore shalt thou be feared." Ps. 130. 4. Our knowledge that we have a house prepared for us in heaven, our enjoying the earnest of the Spirit; these things make us so much the more afraid of doing any thing to displease our Saviour. We shall be judged as they that have been forgiven. We shall be judged by Him, through whose blood we have forgiveness. We shall be judged as having had help offered to our prayers, and heaven secured upon our believing. Oh let us then know at once the mercy of God, and also the terrors of the Lord! Let us feel the one to be connected with the other! Let us "fear God, and give glory to Him," the glory that is due unto his redeeming love; "for the hour of his judgment is come!" Rev. 14. 7.

The minister of reconciliation.

11 Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men; but we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences.

12 For we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf, that ye may have somewhat to answer them which glory * in appearance, and not in heart.

13 For whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God: or whether we be sober, it is for your cause.

14 For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead:

15 And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.

17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, || he is a new creature: ¹old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.

18 And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation;

19 To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath † committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

20 Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

21 For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

* Gr. in the face.

St. Paul would persuade men by "the terror of the Lord," as well as by "the love of Christ." Both constrain us. By both he had endeavoured to constrain the Corinthians; as was manifest, he trusted, unto God, and also unto them. And here he reminds them of his reason for justifying himself, as he did in this appeal to their consciences, and to God. This was not in order to commend himself. It was that they might have an answer to give to men in his behalf, and thanks also to offer in his name to God. It was "the love of Christ" that constrained him to persuade men by "the terror of the Lord." For thus he argued: Christ "died for all." All men must therefore be by nature dead; all must, but for Him, have died eternally. And if He died in their stead, in their behalf, in atonement for their sin, then must they be bound henceforth not to "live unto themselves, but unto Him;" then must they be liable to so much sorer punishment if they put Him to an open shame. See Heb. 6. 6. and 10. 29. How then shall we refrain from warning all for whom Christ died, that they must hereafter stand before his judgment seat?

"Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh." Because we are bound to live unto Him who died for us, we must live with new motives, new feelings, new language, new conduct. Our views of each other, and our views of Christ, must be changed from what they were when we lived after the flesh. Being in Christ, we must be each of us "a new creature." New purposes must animate our hearts. New labours, even those of love, must occupy our lives. Old things must pass away. All things must become new. We must not be changed only in one point, or in a few points, but in all. We must not give up only one sin, or a few sins, but all. We must not seek after one grace only, or a few graces, but all. For God is able to give all, as well as some, or one. He is able to change all, as well as some, or one. "All things are of God," as well as some, or one. Having given for us his Son, He will with Him give us all things. Having "reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ," He will in all things make us like unto Himself. Having "made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin," He will also make us to be "the righteousness of God in him." He will count us for righteous, as He counted Christ for sin. He will count us for righteous, us who knew no righteousness. And hence He will make us to be what He esteems us. By our sense of his mercy in so esteeming us, all unworthy as we are of his regard, He will work in us a desire to be what He would have us; He will guide us to do good instead of evil; He will make us new creatures in Christ.

How different is this view of our redemption, how different these regards towards our blessed Lord, from those which St. Paul himself had entertained, when he knew Christ "after the flesh;" when he knew Jesus by name as the Author of the Gospel, but knew Him not by faith as the Saviour of St. Paul himself, and of all them that believe! Once he persecuted. See now how zealously he preaches! See how he glories in the gift he had received of God, not only to be reconciled by Jesus Christ, but to be a minister of this reconciliation! See how plainly he states the terms of peace: "God was in Christ," yea Christ is God; "reconciling the world unto himself," yea, reconciling and being reconciled; "not imputing their trespasses unto them," yea, looking on us as free from sin! Nor does God by his apostle only tell us of this peace. He beseeches us to accept it. "Be ye," it is "in Christ's stead" that we are exhorted, "Be ye reconciled to God." Ye have been enemies. Ye may now be friends. Ye have been strangers. Ye may now be sons. "Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him." Isa. 57. 19.

Lord, who givest peace, give us the heart to welcome it! Lord, who didst once die for all, give us the will to live henceforth unto Thee!

St. Paul's ministry and privations.

1 We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain.

2 (For he saith, ¹ I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.)

3 Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed:

4 But in all things *approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses,

5 In stripes, in imprisonments, || in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings;

6 By pureness, by knowledge, by longsuffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned,

7 By the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left,

8 By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true;

9 As unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed;

10 As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.

* Gr. commending.

|| Or, in tossings to and fro.

§ 527. How to approve ourselves in all things.

That we receive not the grace of God in vain, this is what St. Paul beseeches us, this is what he laboured to effect in the Corinthians, this it is the chief business of Christian ministers to bring to pass amongst us. We have received the grace of God. His free gift has been announced to us. Nay, his sign and seal has been set on us in baptism, assuring us of all Gospel privileges, conveying to us according to our age and fitness all Gospel graces. And yet all this we shall have received in vain, unless we love and live accordingly. And therefore has God ordered it, lest the gift should be of none effect, that ministers should be set apart throughout all ages of the church, whose business it is to exhort their brethren, to instruct them in his will, to invite them to his supper, and if possible to compel them to come in. "Now," they must say continually, as long as earth shall last, "now is the accepted time: behold, now is the day of salvation." Oh that they may raise their voice on high, and make their message to be heard! Oh that the rest may not be deaf to their entreaty!

"Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed." This was St. Paul's first care in the exercise of this the teacher's office; to give no scandal; lest he should injure, by his own transgressions, the cause in which he ministered, the cause of Christ. "But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God." This was the other chief point in his behaviour, to do all the good he could, in all things to make shine before men the light of Christian conduct, see Matt. 5. 16, to make manifest in his life the beauty of holiness. See Psalm 29. 2. It is not enough then for ministers to stand clear of evil, they must be forward to do good. It is not enough that they give no offence, bring no blame on the Gospel in which they minister: They must recommend it by the holiness of their lives. They must adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things. See Tit. 2. 10. And this, let us all remember, this is our duty, as well as theirs. For under the Gospel all are in some sort ministers. All are strictly charged to edify each other. See 1 Thess. 5. 11. All have it set before them as a chief object of their ambition, the converting of a sinner from the error of his way. See James 5. 20.

Let us see therefore what instances the apostle mentions, by way of teaching us to approve ourselves in all things. "In much patience." We must cheerfully put up with disappointment. "In afflictions, in necessities, in distresses." We must submit without murmuring to whatsoever tribulation it may please God to bring upon us for conscience sake. Nay, we must glory in tribulation: and give thanks that herein we are made like unto our Lord. "In stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults." Of these, thanks to God's goodness in establishing the Gospel, we now run little risk. How much more then ought we to take thankfully at his hands our comparatively light privations! "In labours, in watchings, in fastings." How anxiously ought we to avoid a life of ease, and sloth, and luxury! How surely ought we to prefer, wheresoever we have our choice, work to rest, wakefulness to sleep, and abstinence to plentiful abundance!

"By pureness," even chastity, in thought and deed; "by knowledge," even understanding of God's revealed will; "by longsuffering, by kindness," being ready to endure grief, suffering wrongfully, see 1 Pet. 2. 19, being mindful to overcome evil with good; see Rom. 12. 21; "by the Holy Ghost," without whose help we can approve ourselves in nothing; "by love unfeigned, by the word of truth," so as that we speak the truth in love; see Eph. 4. 15; "by the power of God," not trusting in our own, but armed with his might for perfect righteousness; by these means we must also labour to make known unto our brethren the light of the glorious Gospel. Whether we have honour, and good report, we must be humble. Whether we have ill report and dishonour, we must still be meek. When counted for deceivers, we must be content to be still true; when slighted by men, still thankful that we are known of God. Our chastisements, however severe, only invigorate our life. Our death is to die no more. Our sorrows are consistent with our rejoicing always. Our poverty cannot hinder us from treasure in heaven, nor hinder us from helping others to be rich for ever. Our having nothing that we count our own, in this present world, helps us towards possessing heaven for ever.

Against fellowship with unbelievers.

11 O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged.

12 Ye are not straitened in us, but ye are straitened in your own bowels.

13 Now for a recompense in the same, (I speak as unto my children,) be ye also enlarged.

14 Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

15 And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?

16 And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, 'I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

17 'Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you,

18 'And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

§ 528. With whom we must agree, and with whom not.

St. Paul would win the affection of the Corinthians by the expression of his own. "Our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged." It is well for the mouth to profess confidence in those we love. It is well to speak to them without reserve of our own acts and feelings. But let us see that the heart feels what the mouth professes. Let us see that we really love our brethren. Then to speak to them in the language of affection, as St. Paul here does to the Corinthians, would be the best means to confirm their regard, or to reconcile them if estranged. Are there amongst our friends any who have been lacking in their remembrance of us; any who have neglected our wishes, and set at nought our regard? Let us assure them that they "are not straitened in us," that they occupy the same room in our good wishes as before. Let us make them feel, if it be possible, that they are straitened only in themselves; that they have only to enlarge their own hearts, and we should again be as good friends as ever. Most affecting is the example here set us by St. Paul, in conciliating the erring Corinthians. Let us be as willing as he was to revive the spirit of the contrite. Let us count the Gospel for a ministry of reconciliation, as well between man and man, as between man and God. Let us overcome evil with good. Let us warm by our charity the love of our brethren. And in return for our own enlarged feelings let us appeal to them as for a suitable return, "Be ye also enlarged."

* But though the apostle thus graciously entreated erring Christians, he would by no means sanction the promiscuous intercourse of Christians with unbelievers. Nay he seems to speak of it as one point in the renewed affection of the Corinthians towards himself, that they should in this especially comply with his injunctions, in not being "unequally yoked together with unbelievers." In which expression there is a manifest allusion to the precept in the law of Moses: "Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together." Deut. 22. 10. Whence we may understand that this very precept was significant of God's abhorrence of idolatry, that He would not have his people mingle with the heathen who dwelt around them, be joined with them in marriage, or society, in traffick, or labour, or amusement. In like manner neither would Christ have us keep company by choice with the professors of unbelief, or with such as disgrace professed belief with notorious iniquity. For in such cases it may be still asked, and who dare answer, "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness?" No more can there be in one case than in the other. Light cannot be darkness, nor darkness light. So neither can the righteous and unrighteous have any community of feeling with each other. Christ can have none with Belial; nor Christians with such as have Satan for their God. See ch. 4. 4. The temple of God can have none with idols; nor we who are the temple of the living God, with such as make unto themselves idols of the vanities of earth. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Let the distinction of the Law between clean and unclean, remind us of the eternal difference between right and wrong. Let Christians avoid contact with sin. Let them come out from among sinners, and be separate.

But observe this applies to gross, manifest, notorious sins; to sinners whom no persuasion or remonstrances can convert, no discipline restrain or heal. The Corinthians had sinned grievously, but not hopelessly. And therefore they were not straitened in St. Paul. And observe further how great is our encouragement thus to renounce on due occasions our best loved friends, or expose ourselves to be renounced by them. God will receive us. He will dwell in us as in his temple, and walk in us. He will be a Father unto us. And we shall be his sons and daughters. What then would we more? What better can we conceive? What more high privilege, what more perfect happiness? God is enlarged to us. Let our hearts be enlarged, let our mouths be opened unto Him. Let us have fellowship with righteousness, communion with light, concord with Christ, agreement with God.

St. Paul comforted by the report of Titus.

1 Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

2 Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man.

3 I speak not this to condemn you: for I have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you.

4 Great is my boldness of speech toward you, great is my glorying of you: I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

5 For, when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears.

6 Nevertheless God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

8 For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season.

There is nothing more remarkable in this Epistle than the intermixture of matters personal to the apostle and the Corinthians, with most affecting statements of Christian doctrines, and exhortations to Christian practice. The mind of the writer was evidently under the influence of highly excited feelings. He had been exceedingly grieved by the misconduct of those to whom he was writing. He had written his first Epistle to rebuke them in their offences, to make them sorry for their sins. He had been most anxious to hear how they received it. He had been kept a long time in suspense. At length he heard a satisfactory account. He heard that they were truly contrite. And now he writes to them the second time, in the fulness of his heart, earnestly desiring to soothe their sorrow for the present, and yet more earnestly desiring to minister to their salvation in the end. Meantime the Holy Spirit of God, using man's faculties and feelings as means for the revelation of God's will, so directs his thoughts, so controuls his expressions, as to pour forth out of his enlarged heart the most animating appeals to the consciences of us all.

The last point insisted on was God's merciful assurance, that He will be a Father unto those, who for his sake renounce the world, and all its lusts and vanities. Thereupon we are exhorted, out of regard to these promises, to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." And then again the apostle recurs to the topic still uppermost in his thoughts, the renewal of a right mind, and kind regard, in the Corinthians towards himself. He prays them to receive him; as though he were still under the impression that they were averse. He declares that he had "wronged no man," "corrupted no man," "defrauded no man;" as though putting himself again in the situation of one accused, and desiring to give no offence in any thing. And yet he speaks not this to condemn the Corinthians. For his heart, as he had before signified, was full of tenderness towards them; ch. 6. 11; even so as that he could wish to live and die together. Now therefore he speaks freely, trusting in the renewal of their regard, he speaks freely even of their fault; not as judging or condemning, but as exhorting and edifying. Thus he glories in them greatly; he is filled with comfort, he is exceeding joyful, even in thinking of all his past tribulation. But how trying must that trouble have been to him! "Without were fightings, within were fears." The persecutions of the Jews and of the Gentiles were on one side. On the other was apprehension for the fidelity of the Christians. But God knoweth how to comfort those that are cast down. And God comforted him "by the coming of Titus." For Titus had himself taken comfort in the Corinthians, and had told of their "earnest desire, their mourning, their fervent mind" towards St. Paul. So that he rejoiced the more; even more than if he had not written, more than if he had never apprehended an ill reception of his letter, more than if the Corinthians had never behaved ill. And therefore he did not repent of having made them "sorry with a letter." Though for a while, after sending it, he had repented. He could have wished, out of his reluctance to give them pain, he could have wished that he had not sent it. But now he perceived that "the same epistle" had made them sorry only for a season. That is to say, he was now persuaded, that this sorrow would turn to their greater joy.

How lovely is the sympathy here expressed for the tears of genuine contrition! How heavenly the joy felt over the sinner that repents! How lively ought to be our concern for the recovery of them that are astray! How diligent our endeavours for ourselves to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord! The more precious are God's promises, let us the more fear lest we come short of them. The more perfect is his holiness, let us the more carefully "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." The more grievous is our conflict, let us the more entirely trust in the consolations of God, "that comforteth those that are cast down." The more we have been supported or forgiven, the more we have witnessed the conversion of our brethren, let us rejoice the more.

St. Paul's joy in the repentance of the Corinthians.

9 Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry || after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

10 For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death. *

11 For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter.

12 Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you. *

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you all.

14 For if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

15 And his * inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him.

16 I rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you in all things.

* Gr. bowels.

§ 530. Repentance unto salvation not to be repented of.

We have been told by our blessed Lord Himself, how great joy there is in heaven over one sinner that repenteth. See Luke 15. 7. And here St. Paul declares that he rejoiced in the repentance of the Corinthians. Nay, he wrote with this very view, not so much for the sake of one chief offender, nor for the sake of himself, who had suffered wrongfully, but in order to make manifest his concern in their behalf, that they should not fall away and perish. Therefore he was comforted in their comfort, in their contrition, which it gladdened his heart to hear of. "Yea, and exceedingly the more" he rejoiced "for the joy of Titus," for the gladness to which their amendment gave rise in the heart of his fellow labourer in the Lord. He felt justified in all he had said of them to Titus. He felt that Titus loved them the more heartily for the proofs they had given of obedience and fear. And he felt that henceforth, after this trial of their faith, after this their fall and recovery of grace, he could have confidence in them in all things.

What then is that sorrow which thus multiplies joy? What is that repentance which angels glory to behold, and which confirms the confidence, enlivens the affection, and exceedingly increases the comfort and rejoicing, of apostles, and of ministers of the Gospel? Surely they are not glad that men are sorry. Surely they rejoice not in our tears and sighs, in our strong crying, and groaning within ourselves, in our agony of shame and grief, of compunction, remorse, or despair. Far from it. Angels, and good men, and God who alone is truly good, are sorry that we have sorrow, regard with compassionate concern each pain we feel, each pang we undergo. But that we sorrow to repentance, that we are sorry after a godly manner, that our sorrow is not for damage but for gain, that it is not the sorrow of the world which worketh death, but godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation, repentance not to be repented of; this is matter of unfeigned joy in earth beneath, in heaven above, with men, with angels, and with God.

"Repentance unto salvation." It has to do with our deliverance from sin and death, with saving us from that wrath of God which is revealed against all unrighteousness of men, with bringing us to those joys which God has prepared for them that love Him. The tears we now shed for sin are fitting us for admittance to that state where we shall weep no more. The sorrow we now endure, if it be godly sorrow, is helpful in our preparation for that heaven where there is no sorrow. Repentance "not to be repented of." How unlike to what we commonly attempt to attain unto! How seldom do we so heartily repent, as not to be still haunted by the remembrance of our sins, not to weep for them again, not to have to count amongst the things to be repented of, the faintness, and feebleness, and faultiness, of our very repentance itself! So true it is in fact, that the best things we do have in them still somewhat that is amiss! So plainly is it set forth to us in Scripture, that we ought to be in all things perfect! Oh that we might so sorrow now, as never to weep again for the things which we have once repented of! Oh that God would blot out all our sins from his remembrance, and wipe away all tears from our eyes!

But sorrow, we must remember, is one thing, repentance is another. "Godly sorrow worketh repentance." Let us see then how it "worketh." It works "carefulness." It makes us watchful against each renewed temptation, heedful that we neither fall nor stumble, that we neither in word, nor deed, nor thought, offend. It sets us upon clearing ourselves, not by making out that we have been right, but by pleading the merits of our Saviour. It raises in us indignation, yea, even against ourselves, that we should have offended our Father which is in heaven, dishonoured the Son our Saviour, grieved the Holy Spirit our Comforter. It fills us with fear, not, with selfish slavish terror, but with salutary apprehension of God's goodness, of his enmity against sin, fear of displeasing Him, fear coupled with "vehement desire," with earnest affection towards God, with "zeal" in his service, with "révenge" upon our sins and upon ourselves. Grant, Lord, that we may sorrow after this "godly sort!" Grant that our sorrow may work in us repentance! Grant that our repentance may be unto salvation! Grant that it may not need to be repented of!

St. Paul exhorteth to a contribution.

1 Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia;

2 How that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality.

3 For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves;

4 Praying us with much intreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints.

5 And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God.

6 Insomuch that we desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace also.

7 Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also.

8 I speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

12 For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

The Macedonians, when they made this collection, "were in a great trial of affliction." Yet they had "joy," even abundance of joy in giving. They were poor, in "deep poverty." Yet they were rich, even abundantly rich in liberality. The more therefore we are poor, let us the more abound in liberality. The more we are afflicted, let us have the more joy in giving. Again, they gave "to their power," "yea, and beyond their power." Let us therefore give to the full amount of our ability, yea beyond what we seem able to spare. They were "willing of themselves." Let us give unasked. They prayed the apostle with much entreaty that he would receive the gift. Let us ask to give. Let us press our alms upon those who have it in charge to minister to the necessities of the saints. Let us be at least as eager to relieve the wants of the poor as the poor are to receive our help. "And this they did," beyond what the apostle had expected, even first giving their own selves to the Lord, and submitting themselves to St. Paul, according to the will of God. Let us then give to man, because we are devoted to God; because we are bent upon fulfilling his will; because we submit ourselves to the direction of his ministers.

But the forwardness of others is not the only motive by which the duty of liberality is here pressed on the Corinthians. They are reminded, that as they abound in other gifts, they must abound in this grace also. If then we count that we have "faith," if we find that we have "utterance," if we trust that we have "knowledge," "diligence," or "love," let us so much the more abound in the grace of almsgiving. Again they are told that this is not spoken "by commandment." It is not imposed on them as a tribute of necessity, but recommended as an offering of love. It is put to them to prove the sincerity of their love. Let us then love not in word only, but in deed. Let us do according to what we profess to feel. Let us give of what we like to use ourselves. Let us give not grudgingly, or of necessity, but freely, cheerfully, affectionately. And especially let us give out of regard to "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," out of our thankful remembrance of his inestimable gift; knowing that though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. Oh, what is worldly wealth, that we should set it in comparison against treasure in heaven? What is money, that we should grudge to give it, when Christ left for our sakes the glory of the Father, became man, and as man expended for us his life upon the cross? Ought we not to be willing to impoverish ourselves, in order to help our poorer brethren? Ought we not to value such riches as we have, only as they are the means of making others rich, only as they help ourselves towards treasure in heaven?

St. Paul speaks not to the Corinthians in the way of commandment, but gives herein his advice. He appeals to their consciences. He would work upon their inclinations. For he would not use, in the matter of alms, his apostolical authority, lest the chief value of the almsgiving should be lost, the "willing mind." This they had felt, he reminds them, a year back; when they had "begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward," not only to contribute, but to feel eagerness in contributing. And yet it appears their willingness had flagged, their "readiness to will" had not led to a "performance also," out of that which they had. As the gift is vain without the willingness; so the willingness is also vain without the gift. The willingness can be proved only by the gift. And yet it is not measured by the amount of what is given. Nay the amount given is measured by the willingness. "It is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." Let us but give according to our ability; let him that has much give much, and he that has little, let him do his best to give of that little; and behold, "it is accepted." God, to whom all belongs, God, to whom we owe all we have to give, God accepts it as though it were ours, not his; God accepts through Christ our unworthy alms, nay He accepts us also ourselves, through Christ.

St. Paul provideth for honest things in the sight of men.

13 For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened:

14 But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be equality:

15 As it is written, ¹ He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack.

16 But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 For indeed he accepted the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

18 And we have sent with him the brother, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was also chosen of the churches to travel with us with this || grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind:

20 Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us:

21 Providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men.

22 And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which ^{*} I have in you.

23 Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you: or our brethren be inquired of, they are the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ.

24 Wherefore shew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf.

§ 532. That we cannot have all things in common.

We read of the first couverts at Jerusalem that they had all things in common. See Acts 2. 44. This came of an indifference to the present world, and of an ardent attachment towards each other, such as could only be expected when first the light of God's glorious Gospel shone forth; and whilst yet it had the support of miracles. And accordingly, the Epistles are full of passages which imply, that the distinction between rich and poor would still prevail in the Christian church. And the equality which they seek to establish, is neither an equal division of property, nor a common fund instead of any property at all, but the supply of the wants of some out of the abundance of others, by means of alms given freely, largely, cheerfully. And in this it is not meant that one part should be burdened whilst the other is eased, or that any should give according to that he hath not. See ver. 12. For he that gives so wastefully as to bring himself to want, deprives himself of the means of giving for the future. And this would be the one chief difficulty in a common fund, that the property of the whole community would be likely to be exhausted. Nay their having had all things in common, is probably one reason why the saints at Jerusalem were so soon in a condition of want.

Were it indeed attainable for all to be in earnest, for all to believe heartily, all to love sincerely, then it might be desirable for all to have one purse, for none to want, and none to give, for none to be poor, and none to have riches. If all were honest, and none selfish, if all were diligent as serving the Lord, and none disposed to go beyond or defraud his brother in any thing, if all were content with shelter, food, and clothing, and none wish to have these things finer than their brethren, then what could be conceived more delightful upon earth, than to be rid of all the ills that spring from love of money, to run no risk of becoming covetous as riches increase, or of murmuring when they make themselves wings and fly away. No prisons need there be then for them that rob, no judgment for them that wrong; no bars on our doors, nor locks on our coffers, to form at once a protection to our property, and a reproach on our fellow creatures. Can we wonder that a prospect so agreeable has tempted some to try to make it a reality? Can we wonder that seeing it was the practice of the first Christian church at Jerusalem, some have thought that it ought to be the aim of all Christian churches always?

But how differently the apostle proposed to make equality! See how carefully he provided for honest things, "not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men." Forward as Titus was in the cause, St. Paul sent with him "the brother, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches," who was also chosen by the churches for this office. He did this to avoid the risk of being suspected, the possibility of being accused, in the administration of this abundance. Nay he sent with them another brother, whom he had often proved diligent, but whose name as well as that of the first mentioned is now lost. So short lived is the note of honour amongst men! So perishable is even the praise of all the churches, when compared with the everlasting commendation of God! All these St. Paul sent together, and with them a short character or introduction of each; of Titus, that he was his own partner and fellow helper; of the rest, that they were the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ; all this did St. Paul, for the better security of whatsoever alms the Corinthians might contribute, in proof of their love, and in confirmation of his boasting in their behalf. We are not therefore allowed to trifle with the rights of property. We must hold sacred what is committed to our charge for the good of others. And we must preserve what is our own, for the greater advantage of those who have none. Thus only, as long as Christians are but few amongst mankind, and few also amongst professors of Christianity, thus only can we approach unto equality; not for no one to have much, and no one little, but for him that has much to have nothing over, and for him that has little to have no lack. See Exod. 16. 18.

Touching the ministering to the saints.

1 For as touching the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

2 For I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready:

4 Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

* Gr. blessing.

|| Or, which hath been so much spoken of before.

¹ Prov. 11. 25. Rom. 12. 8. Eccles. 35. 9.

St. Paul had written at some length, and had yet more to say, "touching the ministering to the saints." In the midst therefore of his subject, he expresses his conviction that this topic was superfluous in writing to the Corinthians. That is to say, he teaches them what they ought to be, forward in their minds to give, by expressing himself satisfied that they were so already. And he tells them that he not only thus praised them to themselves, but had given them this character with "them of Macedonia," had told the Macedonians, that "Achaia," of which Corinth was a part, "was ready a year ago." Nay, he added that this report of their zeal had stirred up many. Sometimes he was compelled to censure. But how much more ready does he shew himself to commend! Sometimes, as an apostle, it was his duty to judge. But how gladly does he seek occasion to judge favourably; to hope all things, to believe all things! See 1 Cor. 13. 7. And most effectual is this method of persuading to do right, the method of praise and encouragement, and charitable hope. Is it not thus that God has dealt with mankind through Christ? Does He not count us just though sinners? And is not the sense of our being counted righteous, the most powerful of all motives for us to sin no more? Oh that we would more often try this method, in our treatment of each other! Oh that instead of censuring so sharply what is wrong, we would kindly commend what is right! Oh that we would search not for faults but for excellence, praise it where we find it, and as far as possible suppose it, hope it, reckon on it, even where we fear that it is not!

"Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready." This shews that the apostle knew there was still room for admonition, still need of exhortation. And the mention of this risk of their backwardness, in the same breath with the praise before expressed, shews that in that praise there was no flattery, no intent to deceive, no design to allow them in self-deceit; but only a kind and most effectual declaration of the frame of mind they ought to have arrived at. And now when the reverse is supposed possible, how gently is the possibility expressed. How tenderly is it hinted, "lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting." Therefore the apostle sent on the brethren before he came himself, "that the same might be ready," the bounty of which he had made boast, that it might be ready "as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness;" as a gift given, not as a debt paid; not as a hard bargain, but as a free will offering. Sad it would have been indeed, if those who had been provoked by tidings of the zeal of the Corinthians, should have come and found them backward. And will it not be yet more sad, if we who have been counted righteous, should be in the end condemned as sinners? Shall we not be overwhelmed with unutterable shame, if after taking to ourselves the name of Christ, reckoning on the privileges of Christians, and being reckoned to have died unto sin, and to be alive again unto righteousness, it should be proved before men and angels that we are "unprepared;" that we can give unto our Lord no account of our stewardship?

In no one duty will a more strict account be taken than in this of giving alms. No one grace is more frequently insisted on, more largely explained, more powerfully enforced, in the Gospel of our Saviour, than this of ministering to the saints, of doing good "unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. 6. 10. And no where is the right way, and happy fruit, of giving alms, more clearly set down than here. We must give as we purpose in our hearts; not as the world calculates, not, as we are often tempted, cutting short our bounty, when we come to determine the amount; not grudgingly, or of necessity, as if we would save it if we could; but according to the intention formed in the heart, under the influence of the Holy Spirit of God, cheerfully, as if we had rather give than not; as being glad to give, glad to be asked to give, thankful to be able to give, and willing to give beyond our ability. And for the result, in the one case we shall reap sparingly, in the other we shall reap bountifully. In the one case it is not said that God hateth us; but in the other it is said that "God loveth a cheerful giver." Our gifts give us the assurance of his love. We gain more, how much more, than we bestow. Nay the more we bestow, we gain the more.

Further motives to almsgiving.

8 And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work:

9 (As it is written, ¹ He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remaineth for ever.

10 Now he that ²ministereth seed to the sower both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness;)

11 Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God.

12 For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God;

13 Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men;

14 And by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you.

15 Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

We have here some further considerations, of great weight, brought forward to enforce the duty of giving alms. One is, that God is able to make his gifts abound to them that give. He can bring it to pass, that whilst they "abound to every good work," they shall themselves also have "all sufficiency in all things." And so it is said in the Scriptures, in the Old Testament, of them that disperse abroad and give unto the poor, that their righteousness remaineth for ever. See Ps. 112. 9. Their giving much, does not exhaust their means of giving. Their store is replenished, and they are righteous still. To the servant who is found faithful in a few things, the Lord commits the charge of many things; allowing him still sufficiency for himself whilst here, and welcoming him in the end with those gracious words, "Enter thou into the joy of thy lord." Matt. 25. 21. Such is God's usual method of proceeding, in the distribution of riches upon earth. Such is his universal rule, in awarding treasure in heaven. Even as out of the harvest of the year, He provides for us both bread to eat, and enough to spare for seed, so does He take care, for those who sow abundant alms, that their seed shall be multiplied, that the fruits of their righteousness shall be increased, that they shall still have more to use, and more to give. There may be sometimes a year of scarcity. The bountiful may sometimes come to want. But God "is able," and usually does enrich them in every thing, in all bountifulness. There may be sometimes dearth in the land of plenty. But which will the wise husbandman even then first think of, bread for the present, or seed for the future? Will he not lay by the best for the time of sowing, and in the meanwhile make the refuse serve for his support? Let us likewise for ourselves be content with little, that we may have much to give, much to lend unto the Lord, much to sow in that field of bountifulness, "which causeth through us thanksgiving to God."

And this is the second motive here insisted on; that the "administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints," that our alms not only bless those who partake of them, and not only return with tenfold blessing upon ourselves, but that they are "abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God;" they make many others, even those who know of them, express their thankfulness to the Lord. Men judge of our religion by its practical effects. In them that profess subjection to the Gospel of Christ, they look to find obedience to his commands. And if they find us liberal in our distribution to all men, they are inclined to glorify God, for our faith and love. If they have been themselves indifferent to the Gospel, they are more likely to believe and to obey. Or if they have been faithful and obedient, they give thanks for us, and pray for us, and long after us, by reason of this great grace of God, manifest in our lives. Thus the more we give, the more cheerfully, the more devoutly, the more we manifest in our giving an anxiety to do good to all men, and a regard to the will of God, indifference to our own personal enjoyments, and earnest desire after treasure in heaven, we shall the more largely help in turning the hearts of many to "subjection unto the gospel of Christ." We shall awaken that attention to the things of eternity, which is most needful for the lovers of this present world. We shall enliven that love of God and of each other, that affectionate longing after God's grace and each other's eternal welfare, which is the glory of them that love their Lord.

"Thanks be" therefore "unto God for his unspeakable gift." Thanks be to Him for giving us the grace to give! Thanks be to Him for giving to the rich this use for their riches, and to the poor this relief in their wants! Thanks be to Him for counting all to have attained this grace, not according to the amount of their means, but according to the willingness of their mind! Thanks be to Him for moving us to attain to it, by the abundance of his own great grace! Thanks be to the Father for the gift of his own Son to die for us! Thanks be to the Son who gave Himself! Thanks be to the Holy Ghost, who gives help and comfort!
"Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift!"

Of the apostolical authority.

1 Now I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who || in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you :

2 But I beseech you, that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence, wherewith I think to be bold against some, which * think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.

3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh :

4 (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty † through God to the pulling down of strong holds;)

5 Casting down ‡ imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ ;

|| Or, in outward appearance.

* Or, reckon.

† Or, to God.

‡ Or, reasonings.

6 And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.

7 Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's.

8 For though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction, I should not be ashamed :

9 That I may not seem as if I would terrify you by letters.

10 For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible.

11 Let such an one think this, that, such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present.

§ 535. The authority of Christian ministers.

The pretensions of false teachers in the church at Corinth, their factious proceedings, and personal enmity to St. Paul, forced him both to speak much of himself, and to say much of the authority which the Lord had given him. Hence we may derive profitable instruction, as to the authority of Christian ministers, the ground on which it stands, the manner in which it ought to be exercised, and the temper in which it ought to be submitted to. If St. Paul beseeches the Corinthians, by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, it follows that in this temper ministers must proceed; endeavouring to persuade by such meek and gentle language, as they might conceive that Christ Himself would use. If he was bold towards them when absent, though counted vile when present, this shews that however ministers may be slighted by their people, they must not be afraid either to tell them the truth, or to apply to them the discipline of the church. If on the other hand, he beseeches them, that he may have no need when present to use such boldness as he expected, this shews that they who would walk in his steps, ought to be sorry to have to exercise severity, ought to prevent when possible the necessity of harsh measures, by the prudent use of such as are gentle.

Next observe what was the nature of those means of correction, which the apostle expected to apply. He had been accused of walking "according to the flesh." He answers, "though we walk in the flesh," though we live in the body, "we do not war after the flesh," we do not use either worldly wisdom or worldly force, towards gaining the victory at which we aim. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." James 1. 20. The means of our warfare are not swords, nor imprisonment, nor destroying flames, but the revelation of God's wrath against sin, the proclamation of his pardon unto sinners. These "through God," and not through the strength of man, are mighty to pull down strong holds, to demolish self deceit and pride, and to bring "into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." These then, and such as these, are the weapons with which ministers must contend against the iniquity of the world. And as the apostle was ready to revenge all disobedience, when as many had obeyed as could be won by kindness, so it would be well if there were power in the church to daunt by the infliction of spiritual censures those obstinate offenders, who cannot be won by exhortation. But such power must be used, as St. Paul used his, for edification, not for destruction. If as an apostle he was authorized in extreme cases to deliver offenders unto Satan, to sentence them to grievous bodily sufferings, and to great shame and anguish of mind, this was in order that their souls might be saved in the day of the Lord. See 1 Cor. 5. 5. And so must ministers use reproof or correction, not with a view to crush the wounded spirit. If they wound, it must be with a view to heal. If they bring low, it must be in order to exalt.

Nor need they be ashamed, on due occasions, to boast of their authority, to declare it plainly, to maintain it firmly, to appeal from outward appearance to the appointment of Christ, and on the strength of that appointment, to enforce respect to whatever they are constrained to order. For neither was the apostle ashamed to boast of his authority, nor would he allow it to be thought that he threatened in his Epistle what he was not intending to perform, nor would he leave any room for saying that his letters were weighty but his presence weak, nor would he fail to prove, that such as he was in word when absent, he would be in deed when present. Like to this then should be the rule of Christian ministers, firm though gentle, resolute though meek; consisting not in words only, but in deeds; not in threats, but in performance. Oh where do we now find vestiges of this power in the church? Oh where do we now meet with this disposition, to obey them that have the rule over us, and submit ourselves, even as to them that watch for our souls? See Heb. 13. 17.

God grant unto his people that they may no longer neglect either this or any other profitable means, for having every thought brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ Jesus !

St. Paul boasteth not beyond his measure.

12 For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, || are not wise.

13 But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the * rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the gospel of Christ:

15 Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be † enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly,

16 To preach the gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's ‡ line of things made ready to our hand.

17 ¹ But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

18 For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.

|| Or, understand it not.

* Or, line.

† Or, magnified in you.

‡ Or, rule.

§ 536. That we must not commend ourselves.

“Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him.” Prov. 26. 12. This is the sentence of Solomon on self conceit. And like to this is the judgment here delivered by St. Paul, concerning some that commend themselves. “They measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise.” There is more hope of fools than of them. Fools may perhaps be sensible of their folly. Fools may be willing to learn, anxious to improve, thankful for correction, admonition, and instruction. This at least is often the case with such as Solomon here means by the word fool, one who has little natural ability. And compared with such as these, how little hope can be entertained for them that are self conceited! They measure themselves by themselves. They take not into their account the ability, or importance, of any one, besides themselves. Their own opinion, their own attainments, their own extent of usefulness, is the standard by which they judge the value of their brethren, nay, by which they try their own. They compare themselves “among themselves,” and among themselves only. They look not out to see how many are more able, more excellent. They conceive not how few they are, compared with all, how trifling each single man must be, however great he may fancy his importance, when weighed against the countless inhabitants of the earth; or what a trifle is the earth when contrasted with the universe, or what a speck in space is the universe itself, or what a point the whole duration of all things, in the reckoning of Him who abideth in eternity, and whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain. See 2 Chron. 6. 18.

St. Paul, though he had occasion to speak of himself in a way that might seem much like boasting, protests against being taken for self conceited. And the lively picture which he has drawn of self conceit, shews how fully he was sensible of its folly, how far he was from being likely to fall into it. And further, he points out the distinction between boasting such as his, and self commendation. He boasted not of things without measure; “but according to the measure of the rule,” which God had given him. His commission to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles included the Corinthians. He measured himself not by himself, but by the line laid out for him from on high. He boasted not “of other men's labours,” but asserted his authority in a church planted by himself. And he trusted that he should be still within the rule marked out by God, and not encroaching on any other man's line, if after the faith of the Corinthians was increased, he should extend further his labours and authority; even be enlarged by them abundantly, enabled, when they no longer needed his attention, to preach the Gospel in many other places.

“But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.” This makes all the difference between vain boasting, and profitable declaration of authority. If we speak within our measure, within the rule set to us by God, we may safely speak in the same tone as the apostle. If we refer all the praise to God, we may speak as he did, on due occasions, where there is the same necessity, or the like advantage, concerning such service as we are enabled to render to the church. For this is commending God, and not ourselves. This is not boasting of ourselves, but of Him. And to praise Him should be at all times our delight. Whereas for ourselves it is all vanity to praise ourselves. We must wait for that praise which comes from Him. “For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.” How idle then to talk as some do of their own exertions, successes, influence, or worth! How foolish to talk as many do continually of themselves! How worse than foolish to grudge the praise of others, lest it should interfere with our own! Let us set our hearts on the praise of God. Let us desire to do that which is acceptable to Him. And let us remember hat it is one plain point in his will concerning us, that we should not commend ourselves.

St. Paul is forced to commend himself.

1 Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly: and indeed || bear with me.

2 For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

3 But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

4 For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him.

5 For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles.

6 But though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things.

7 Have I committed an offence in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely?

8 I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

|| Or, ye do bear with me.

The necessity of justifying his conduct forces from St. Paul this further reference to himself, "Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly: and indeed bear with me." As if he had said, It is for your good I speak. I say that which seems at first like foolishness, and which my enemies will represent as foolish. I run the risk of being accounted for a fool. I do violence to my feelings in speaking of myself. All this I do, because for you it is expedient, "For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy." I feel a lively apprehension lest any should seduce your affections. I have gained them, by great pains, and many anxious prayers. I have gained them not for myself, but for the Lord. "I have espoused you to one husband;" for this end, "that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ," as "a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Eph. 5. 27. But how can this be done, if "your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ?" if you listen to strange teachers of strange doctrines, if you be beguiled, as Eve was by the serpent, so as not to obey the will of God, so as to count yourselves wise, and me foolish, so as to believe these ill reports of one who is your father in Christ Jesus? Had indeed these new comers told you of "another Jesus," had they imparted to you another Holy Ghost, or had they informed you of another Gospel, beyond what I have preached, and alike fitted to forward you in holiness on earth, and to bring you to heaven in the end; then you might well bear with them. But this is not the case. For "I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles." From me you received the true Gospel, the whole Gospel, the only Gospel. However plain may have been my language, I have not been wanting, thanks be to God who supplied me, I have not been wanting in knowledge of the truth. "We have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things." The chief fault it seems objected to me is this, that I abased myself in preaching "to you the gospel of God freely." But did I not this thing on purpose to make my ministry more acceptable, "that ye might be exalted?" For this end "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them," receiving from them payment for my labours in the Gospel, "to do you service." "When I was present with you, and wanted," when the labour of my hands during such time as I could spare from preaching did not yield enough for my support, I put none of you to any charge, but was supplied by the brethren from Philippi in Macedonia. See Phil. 4. 15. Thus "in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself." Whatever construction may be put upon my conduct, I adopt it, and I will persevere in it, for your good. Whatever censure I may incur for boasting of it, I boast in order to prevent you from being led into mistakes, prejudiced against the Gospel by what has been said against me, corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

How seldom do we hear men speak about themselves, out of such regard as this to the salvation of their brethren! How seldom can our boasting be justified, by anxiety to save each other from mischievous delusion. How few feel this godly jealousy for their fellow Christians, that they should be without spot or wrinkle presented unto the Lord! How few feel any such anxiety for themselves, that their own minds may not be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ! Well might we bear with each other's folly, if it were the foolishness of caring for each other's souls! Well might we be content to be counted fools ourselves, if it were for labouring by all means in our power to save our neighbours, and to escape from the wrath to come! Oh that we may be thus foolish, as the world counts foolishness, and wise in the esteem of God! Oh that we may thus boast, as the apostle boasted, even boast and glory in the Lord!

St. Paul is resolved to glory.

10 As the truth of Christ is in me, *no man shall stop me of this boasting in the regions of Achaia.

11 Wherefore? because I love you not? God knoweth.

12 But what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

13 For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

14 And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.

15 Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.

16 I say again, Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool || receive me, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, in this confidence of boasting.

18 Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also.

19 For ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise.

20 For ye suffer, if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face.

21 I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak. Howbeit whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) I am bold also.

* Gr. this boasting shall not be stopped in me.

§ 538. We ought to suffer fools gladly.

St. Paul had answered the objection made against him, of preaching the Gospel freely to the Corinthians, asking whether it was an offence to abase himself, in order for them to be exalted. He now adds that "no man shall stop" him "of this boasting in the regions of Achaia," in the church and neighbourhood of Corinth. Not because he loved them not. On the contrary, because he loved them. And for this he appeals most solemnly to God, "God knoweth." And in like manner he confirms by the solemnity of an oath what he had said of not being stopped in this boasting, "As the truth of Christ is in me." And so afterwards he adds, "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not." ver. 31. See then what is a fit occasion for an oath. When an apostle would save a church from gross delusion, when a minister would devote himself to the service of the church, when any Christian would give weight to an assertion that is needful for the eternal welfare of his brethren. How different are these ends and objects from such as commonly are made occasion of our appealing unto God! How much it is to be feared, that in swearing for so many trifles of mere worldly business, we become guilty of taking God's name in vain, and offend against the commandment of our Saviour, "Swear not at all!" Matt. 5. 34.

The apostle persisted in preaching the Gospel without cost to the Corinthians, in order to expose the pretensions of their false teachers, that they might be compelled, as they professed, to make no profit by their preaching. For these were false apostles; and it was necessary to expose their falsehood. And if they were such thus early, no wonder that ever since, up to the present day, there have been ministers of Satan, pretending to be ministers of righteousness: even as Satan also himself "is transformed into an angel of light," puts on, in tempting man, the garb of innocency, and quotes Scripture, as he did unto our Lord. See Matt. 4. 6. We see then how such pretenders are to be put to shame by true ministers; not only by the excellency of their doctrine, but by the holiness of their lives. To deny themselves, to refrain from the full enjoyment of their rights, to prove themselves the very reverse of mercenary, to persevere through evil report as well as good report, in thus labouring for the salvation of their people; this is the way "to cut off occasion from them which desire occasion." Would that ministers and members of our church would try this method of healing our divisions! Would that we were all willing to be counted foolish, to be accused of boasting, or speaking not after the Lord, to submit to reproach as though we were weak, or to force ourselves against our wishes to be bold, if by any means we might expose false pretensions, deliver our brethren from false doctrine, and put to shame those "deceitful workers" "whose end shall be according to their works."

"For ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise." The Corinthians who thought highly of their wisdom, suffered themselves to be imposed upon by false teachers, submitted to be brought into spiritual bondage, to have their substance devoured, to be treated with violence and scorn. If then, the apostle argues, if you thus bear with the foolishness of others, why not bear with mine also? If you choose to count me foolish, "yet as a fool receive me." I will speak, if you please so to consider it, "not after the Lord." Reproach me how you will, call me weak, or call me bold, I will say that which is needful for your instruction, "I will glory also." If the apostle thus submitted to undeserved reproach, how much more cheerfully, if possible, ought we, who deserve the worst that can be said of us! If the Corinthians, in their ignorance, could thus "suffer fools," how much more ought we to view it as a part of real wisdom, to bear patiently the oppressor's wrongs, the proud man's haughtiness, the rude man's blows! What folly can be more manifest than theirs, who do wrong for their own pleasure whilst they live, without regard to what must befall them when they die? What wisdom is more heavenly than this, gladly to put up with the ills we meet with on earth, in hope of the great glory which we expect in heaven, through the merits of our Saviour Christ?

The labours, and perils, and sufferings of St. Paul.

22 Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

23 Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft.

24 Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one.

25 Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep;

26 In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren;

27 In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.

28 Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches.

29 Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?

30 If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

31 The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.

32 In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

33 And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

§ 539. That we must be content to be meanly esteemed.

How sad is the perversity of very many, that whilst they suffer gladly the oppression of false teachers, they listen greedily to any tales that they can hear of against true ministers of the Gospel! Must not this arise from that bitter enmity, which lurks in the natural heart of man, against the truth revealed by God? Must it not be owing to our pride which resists authority; to our selfishness which inclines us to take what we choose ourselves, in preference to what has been chosen for us; to our wrathfulness which makes us fond of strife; to our deceitfulness which makes us glory in a lie? How else can we account for it, that so many gross delusions have prevailed amongst mankind, under the colour of religion? How else can we conceive, that the Corinthians could prefer the false teachers to St Paul, or believe against the apostle the false tales here alluded to?

He is forced to assure them, as if the matter were in doubt, that he is an Hebrew, an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham. He is forced to insist upon it, that he is a minister of Christ. He is forced to tell them of his labours, and his stripes, and of his frequent exposure to imprisonment and death. Thankful we ought to feel for the testimony thus borne to the certainty of the things we have believed. Five times he received of the Jews as many stripes as they were accustomed to inflict. Thrice he was beaten with rods, a punishment of the Romans. Once he was stoned, thrice shipwrecked, a night and a day he spent in the deep. Add to this the toil of his perpetual journeying; the perils of waters, in crossing lakes and rivers then rarely supplied with safe conveyance; the perils of robbers, then commonly infesting the track of travellers; the perils by his own countrymen, so painful an aggravation of what he endured from perils by the heathen. Add perils in the city, in the wilderness, and in the sea, and, above all, add the perils of false brethren. And thus some notion may be formed of the kind of life which St. Paul went through. How great must have been his weariness and pain! How frequent and severe his watchings, his fastings, his hunger and thirst, his cold and nakedness! How weighty the anxiety which, besides all these outward troubles, was daily pressing on his mind, "the care of all the churches;" the sympathy of his lively affections for the weakness of the weak, for the offences of them that fell! And is this the life which our heavenly Father provides for such as are chosen vessels for his work? How different from a life of ease, and sloth, and luxury! How different from a life of worldly business, or of worldly pleasure! How different from the glorying of the worldly and the vain, is St. Paul's glorying of the things which concern his infirmities, of his shame for them that were offended, of his tenderness of affection for the infirm! Oh that we may boast of nothing but of God's great power, made manifest in our great weakness! Oh that we may shrink from no suffering or toil, from no danger of body or agony of mind, that may serve to make us like unto the apostle, that may minister to the glory of the Lord!

Nor must we brave only those perils, or endure only those pains, which are likely to obtain for us the admiration of the world, the repute of being generous and brave, the name of hero or of martyr. We must be content to put up also with scorn and ridicule. We must be willing, on an occasion of necessity, to appear in a mean position, to be abased before men, to be represented on the page of history, not as heroes, but as fugitives; not as one of the noble army of martyrs, but as one that was let "through a window in a basket," "down by the wall." How plainly does St. Paul's mention of this humiliating event, as the worldly wise esteem it, shew that in all he had been saying of himself, he has no wish to magnify his own importance! How powerfully should it constrain us, not to magnify ourselves! How forcibly should it teach us, that there is nothing truly great but what is good; and that there is nothing truly conducive to God's honour, to the furtherance of the Gospel, to the salvation of souls, which is not also at the same time truly great, truly noble, honourable, memorable!

St. Paul cometh to visions.

1 It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord.

2 I knew a man in Christ about fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven,

3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;)

4 How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter.

5 Of such an one will I glory: yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

6 For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

8 For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

9 And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

10 Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong.

"To glory" was not expedient for St. Paul. It was painful to his feelings; it was perilous to his humanity. It was sure to bring on him the reproach of being boastful. But though not expedient for himself, it was good for the Corinthians. And therefore, besides all that he had said already, he went on "to visions and revelations of the Lord."

"I knew a man in Christ," thus reluctantly, thus modestly, does the apostle speak, when he has to tell how he was caught up, whether in the body or without it he could not say, into the third heaven, into the heaven of heavens, into the light which cannot be approached, into the presence of Him who dwells therein. And again, "I knew such a man," is the way he describes himself, when he was "caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words," which it was not possible for him now to repeat. "Of such an one will I glory," not of himself, as himself, but as of another self, even as of Christ that dwelt in him, see 1 Tim. 1. 14, even as of "a man in Christ;" of his infirmities, of his own self, all feeble as he was, made mighty by the help of God. Else if he had desired to glory, he would not have been therein "a fool," as the Corinthians supposed. For he would have spoken "the truth." But he forbore to say many things which he might have said truly, lest men should form their judgment of him from what he said, and not from what he was seen and heard to do. Of these visions and revelations he therefore says no more. He had said enough to confirm his character with those to whom he wrote. He had said enough to convey to us the impression, that he had seen what no eye of flesh can see, that he had been where no man can be and live. There is then another life. There is another world. There is a paradise, though where we know not. There is a heaven, though what we cannot conceive. There is a God, though we can neither view the greatness of his glory, nor imagine the abundance of his love. The more we long to see Him as He is, He will the more make Himself manifest to our souls.

And see how great is our risk, in the midst of highest privileges, lest we fall the grievous fall of them that exalt themselves. See how St. Paul was not considered safe from being "exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations!" See how there was given to him, most precious gift of God, that which saves from falling them that are most high, "a thorn in the flesh," some sore trial of the soul arising from the body; "the messenger of Satan," who designed to buffet him, but was made to help towards his humility, and peace, and joy! Have we any such humiliating affliction? Have we any bodily infirmity, which weighs on our own spirits, and exposes us to the reproach of the scornful? Have we any unseen passion troubling us at heart, struggling for the mastery over faith and love, and striving to lay us low at Satan's feet? And do we pray earnestly and repeatedly, that this thing might depart from us? How then, we perhaps ask in doubt or wonder, how is it that we are still thus troubled? Let us hear the answer of the Lord, "My grace is sufficient for thee." It is enough for thee to have the victory. Be content to be still at war. "My strength is made perfect in weakness." This conflict is for the exercise of thy faith. The more thou art sensible of thy infirmity, the more thou believest in my ability to help, thou art so much the nearer to being strong in Me. Who then would not glory in infirmities, if thereby the power of Christ might rest upon us? Who would not take pleasure in what we suffer here, whether by conflicts within, or by wrongs without, if in all our distress and weakness we are making progress towards strength and joy?

God grant that in our afflictions we may resort to prayer! God give us in all we pray for, what is best for us to have! God keep us humble, whilst we dwell on earth! God exalt us when we die, to glory everlasting!

St. Paul concludeth his defence of himself.

11 I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing.

12 Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

13 For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me this wrong.

14 Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you: for I seek not your's, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And I will very gladly spend and be spent for * you; though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, I did not burden you: nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile.

17 Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

18 I desired Titus, and with him I sent a brother. Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps?

19 Again, think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? we speak before God in Christ: but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults:

21 And lest, when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed.

* Gr. your souls.

§ 541. That we should have at heart the spiritual welfare of others.

One other reason is here assigned by St. Paul for the pains he takes to justify himself. "Ye have compelled me." It was the Corinthians' own fault. "For I ought to have been commended of you." It was their duty to have maintained his cause, to have defended his character, and to have testified to his apostolical authority. And for lack of their doing so, he was forced to say of himself at the very time when he felt himself to be nothing, that he was in nothing "behind the very chiefest apostles." How unwelcome this necessity was to him he has abundantly made manifest! How wrong then it was in them to bring this trouble upon him; when it was so true, and ought by them to have been testified so cheerfully, that all the signs of an apostle were wrought among them! Let us be ready therefore to defend the cause of our brethren, that we may relieve them from the task of justifying themselves. Let us be forward to commend those who are most loudly censured, in whatsoever we can commend them truly.

The signs of an apostle had been wrought among the Corinthians by St. Paul. How could they then bear to hear him called in question, whether indeed he were an apostle? See 1 Cor. 9. 1. How could they construe it as a wrong done to them, that he had not been burdensome? How could they fail to sink under the sense of shame, when they received his affecting prayer, "forgive me this wrong?" If it be wrong, forgive it; if right, impute it not for wrong. "If I have spoken evil," said our Lord, in a like case, "bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou me?" John 18. 23. "Behold," adds St. Paul, "the third time I am ready to come to you;" having once lately failed in his intention. "And I will not be burdensome to you." I am persuaded that this course is right, and therefore will persist in it. "For I seek not your's but you;" not your goods, but the salvation of your souls, your selves. Even as children lay not up for parents, but parents for children, so would I, your spiritual father, work for you, and not you for me. "And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you." I will spend my substance, and be spent myself; even though whilst I thus greatly love you, I am beloved but little in return. Oh how bitter is this sorrow to our hearts by nature, to be hated of those we love! Oh how sweet is this affection to the soul, through grace, to love those who love not us!

"But be it so, I did not burden you" myself; granting this, still my enemies will say that I have abstained through craftiness, designing to make more gain of you, by means of others, whom I sent unto you. Was this the case with Titus, whom I sent, or with the brother whom I sent with him? Did not these all manifest the same spirit, walk in the same steps, as myself? Thus the apostle appeals to facts. Thus he convinces the Corinthians by their own experience. Thus he patiently refutes every slander they had heard of, nay every objection he could conceive. And why? To excuse himself to them? For no such object. "We speak before God in Christ." He spake for God's glory. He justified himself out of regard to the Gospel of Christ. "We do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying." He had their spiritual welfare at heart in all. In their estranged condition he felt them to be still dearly beloved. He was alarmed lest when he came he should not find them such as he would. He feared lest he should therefore be found unto them such as they would not. He apprehended the many ills with which division is accompanied, "debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults." And he feared, lest if he humbled not himself, by thus deigning to justify his own authority, he feared lest God would humble him among them, by giving them up, as He had already, to their former sins, and to what was worse, an impenitent mind. What ought more to grieve and humble a pastor, than the sins of Christ's people committed to his charge? What ought more to weigh with the people to repent, than the labours of their ministers who are over them in the Lord?

St. Paul declareth that he will not spare.

1 This is the third time I am coming to you. In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.

2 I told you before, and foretell you, as if I were present, the second time; and being absent now I write to them which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again, I will not spare:

3 Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me, which to youward is not weak, but is mighty in you.

4 For though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God. For we also are weak || in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you.

5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?

6 But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates.

7 Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates.

8 For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.

9 For we are glad, when we are weak, and ye are strong: and this also we wish, even your perfection.

10 Therefore I write these things being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness, according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction.

|| Or, with him.

§ 542. How we ought to prove our own selves.

The terror of the Lord is revealed for the persuasion of men. It was represented in the primitive church, by the power which the apostle exercised to deliver over offenders to Satan. This power we see was given to them for edification and not for destruction. And when St. Paul would most plainly assert his authority, he takes care at the same time to add, that he wrote these things whilst absent, on purpose to prevent the necessity of using sharpness when he should be present. For "the third time" he was fully purposing to come to them. And as his purpose had once failed, this would be "the second time" of his coming, if he came. And he forewarned them that on this occasion he would bring every charge to proof, he would not spare. He would give a proof of Christ speaking in him, by manifestation of Christ's power, punishing at his word; a proof not weak but mighty. For though Christ "was crucified through weakness," being made in fashion as a man, and submitting to be crucified by the strength of men; "yet he liveth by the power of God;" He is now alive. And so the apostle also, though appearing as He did weak, would prove living and powerful towards them, through God. Therefore he exhorted them to examine themselves, whether they were in the faith, to prove their own selves, to try whether Jesus Christ were in them; which He must be unless they were reprobates. He trusted that they would in themselves find proof, that he at least had been approved of God, in the faithfulness of his ministry among them. He prayed God that they might prove guiltless; not so much for the justifying of his ministry, as for their own sakes, whatever judgment they might form of him. For he could do nothing, as an apostle, against the truth; and therefore needed not their testimony for his approving. And he was glad when they were strong, though counted weak himself; and in all he wrote, and said, and did, and in all he designed to do when he should arrive, he wished only their perfection.

This is the way in which the apostle would exercise his authority, to edification, and not to destruction. This is the way in which we find all the terrors of the Lord revealed in Scripture against sin, for the persuasion, and correction, and salvation, of the sinner. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." We shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ, in the presence of saints and angels, confronted with those who have beheld our wickedness. Christ has foretold us, that when He comes the second time He will not spare. He prays us, and prays in our behalf, that we do no evil. He was content to be numbered with the transgressors, in order for us to be counted righteous. He was glad to become weak, that we might be made strong.* And this also He wishes, our perfection. He writes then these things against us in his absence, on purpose that when present He may not have to use sharpness. He would have us know of his judgments, that we may be able to avoid them. He reveals the wrath to come in order for us to flee and to escape it.

Let us then now examine ourselves, are we in the faith? Do we believe no other things than those which Moses and the prophets, and Jesus Christ, and his apostles, have taught? Are we believing all that they have revealed for us to believe? Let us prove our own selves. Let us prove ourselves by the test here given us. Is Jesus Christ in us? Do we feel his strength made perfect in our weakness? See ch. 12. 9. Do we find that we can do all things through Him strengthening us? See Phil. 4. 13. And the life we now live in the flesh, do we live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave Himself for us? See Gal. 2. 20. If we do, we are approved. If we do not, we are reprobates. Awful alternative! To be tried, and found wanting. To be rejected as counterfeits, as Christians that are no Christians, as giving currency to the base metal of iniquity under the name and image of Christ. God forbid that we should thus disgrace our calling! God grant that we may find his terrors powerful to alarm and edify, and therefore not now in our case mighty to destroy!

St. Paul sendeth his blessing to all.

11 Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you.

12 Greet one another with an holy kiss.

13 All the saints salute you.

14 The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

§ 543. That we must live in peace with all.

How often may the intent of a whole letter be inferred from the tone of the conclusion! How clearly may we, in these last words of St. Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians, perceive that throughout all his justifying of himself he was desiring to edify them; and that in the midst of his reproofs and threatening, it was his wish not to punish but to praise. "Finally, brethren, farewell." After all that has been forced from me in self defence, after all the blame I have had to lay on you, after the painful and perilous office of boasting towards those who boasted against me, an office which has rendered this whole Epistle most difficult to write, and not easy for any to understand, except you who well know all the circumstances of the case, I conclude with wishing you heartily farewell. I conclude with the plain practical advice, "Be perfect;" strive after perfection. "Be of good comfort," serve God as sons, with hope, and joy, and cheerfulness of heart. "Be of one mind." Give way to one another in points of difference. "Live in peace." Act kindly and peaceably to each other, even whilst yet you cannot think alike, much more when you can. "And the God of love and peace shall be with you." You shall no longer be at enmity with God. He will not again give you up to sin. "Greet one another with an holy kiss," in token of being reconciled to one another. "All the saints salute you." In token that they rely on your amendment, and are reconciled to you all. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," his great gift, of salvation through his blood, "and the love of God," his inestimable love in giving his Son for us to die, "and the communion of the Holy Ghost," the joint partaking in his precious gifts, "he with you all," with them that have all along obeyed, and with them that have been disobedient, but are now repentant. "Amen!" May the God of love and peace teach us, by the example of, the apostle, thus to wish well, and to hope the best, for all; thus to allay the heat of dissension, by courtesy and kindness towards them that are estranged! "Amen!" May all who differ be brought at length into one fold, there to share in common the Father's love, the Son's redeeming grace, and the holiness and peace and joy of the Holy Ghost. "Amen!"

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE GALATIANS, 1. 1—12.

St. Paul reproveth the Galatians for being removed from the Gospel.

1 Paul, an apostle, (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead;)

2 And all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia :

3 Grace be to you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ,

4 Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father :

5 To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

6 I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel :

7 Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

8 But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

11 But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man,

12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

§ 544. The true Gospel.

The occasion of writing the Epistle to the Galatians is plain, from what is said by St. Paul, of their being removed from "him that called" them "into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel." That is to say, they had not been firm in the faith; they had not held fast the truth; they had not proved their attachment to God, by their attachment to his Gospel. They had adopted a new view of religion, as it were another Gospel; which however was no other Gospel, but a delusion introduced by some which troubled them, and perverted the true Gospel of Jesus Christ. And therefore the apostle, intending as he did to expose their errors, and to set forth the truth, began his Epistle with solemnly declaring of himself, that he was an apostle not appointed by the rest, nor by any mere man, but directly "by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead." How then durst the Galatians swerve from what he had taught them? How durst they? How dare we? The words of St. Paul have still to us the same authority; the authority not of man, but of God. And to this is added the authority of man also, the authority of men who were like himself, servants of God: "all the brethren" which were with him united in this Epistle to the Galatians; all united in recommending to us the doctrine here insisted on, all united in praying for us that we might have grace and peace, "from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ." If we would enjoy these blessings, let us endeavour to hold fast this doctrine, that Christ gave himself for our sins, that Christ died in our behalf, in order "that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God," who is also "our Father;" his Father and ours; "to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

And here we see not only what was the occasion of St. Paul's writing this Epistle, namely the delusion which had befallen the Galatians, but we are also led to understand that the delusion consisted in the denial, or at least in the disparagement, of this primary doctrine of the Gospel, the atonement. For it appears plain, from the tenour of this whole Epistle, that false teachers had been propagating in Galatia their views of the necessity, incumbent as they supposed on all Christians, that they should observe the whole ritual of the Law. And this observance of the Law they insisted on as needful for justifying believers in Christ; nay, not as needful only for their safety, but as helpful and efficacious in the work of saving them. Hence men would be led to put their trust in their own righteousness, that righteousness which was by the Law of Moses. And hence the doctrine that we are justified by faith alone, without the works of the Law, by virtue of the atoning death of Christ, was obscured, encumbered, nay made null and void. This was the delusion to which the Galatians were exposed. This was the other Gospel unto which some of them were removed. This was what St. Paul denied to be a Gospel at all. And against this it was that he set forth this striking account of the true Gospel: the death of Christ atoning for our sins, with a view to our deliverance from the evil that is in the world through sin, according to God's will, and to his glory.

This is the true Gospel. And there is no other. Nay, though St. Paul himself, or an angel from heaven, should preach any other Gospel unto us, than this which is set forth in the Holy Scriptures, there is denounced against the impostor the fearful sentence, "let him be accursed." How could more solemn sanction have been given to the truth as it is in Christ, Jesus? See Eph. 4. 21. How could the Holy Spirit, speaking by the apostle, have expressed to us more forcibly what a complete and final revelation we have in the New Testament of our Saviour Christ; what a full, perfect, and sufficient atonement and satisfaction He made for us, once for all, by his death? No other Gospel is needed. Nay, any other Gospel must be a most pernicious imposture. Any doctrine different from that of Christ and his apostles, any thing at variance with what they taught, any thing added to their teaching, as if theirs were incomplete, only exposes the teacher to "be accursed." How watchful ought we then all of us to be, that we hold the true Gospel and no other, that we help in our several stations, and according to our several ability, to promote the true Gospel and no other! How ought we to watch that our views of Christianity be not "after man," not such as have been invented to please men, or merely for the purpose of persuading men, with a view to swell the numbers of a party, but actually those very good tidings of great joy which were revealed by Jesus Christ! Oh let us search and see that in the choice of our religion, we seek neither to please others nor to please ourselves, but only to please our Master Christ! Oh let us watch and pray that in the furtherance of our religion, in our endeavours to make all whom we can Christians, we preach no other Gospel than that which was received by the Galatians, when first called by God unto the grace of Christ, even "grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

St. Paul declareth his own apostleship.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it:

14 And profited in the Jews' religion above many my † equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

15 But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

16 To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood:

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus.

18 Then, after three years I || went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19 But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother.

20 Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not.

21 Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia;

22 And was unknown by face unto the churches of Judæa which were in Christ:

23 But they had heard only, that he which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed.

24 And they glorified God in me.

† Gr. equals in years.

|| Or, returned.

§ 545. How anxious we ought to be for each other's souls.

In order to convince the Galatians that his doctrine came direct from God, St. Paul here enters into an account of what happened to himself, when it pleased God to reveal his Son by him. Before that time he had been notable for his zeal in the religion of the Jews. Beyond measure he had persecuted the church of God, the community of Christians. For it was in "the Jews' religion" that he was eminent, in the traditions of his fathers, in the corrupted doctrines of the scribes and Pharisees, not in the true religion of the elder covenant, not in the justice, mercy, and truth, which the Law was designed to enforce, not in those enlightened hopes of a Messiah, not in that universal love for God and man, which both the Law and the Prophets, when duly received, were calculated to establish in the heart. Let us beware, then, lest it be possible also in the religion of Christians to have our behaviour well esteemed amongst men, and to be ourselves exceedingly zealous of the tradition of our fathers, and yet to be counted in our heavenly Master's sight for persecutors of the church of God. If it be for our own views that we are zealous, for our own party, for our own interest, if we are deaf to conviction, if we are averse to prove all things, if we hold fast not that which is good, but that which is profitable, if, without inquiry, we censure all who differ from ourselves, if we feel towards them as enemies, and annoy them as much as lies in our power, then whether their community or our own be the real church of God, in either case we are the persecutors of the church, we are the enemies of the cross of Christ.

But though St. Paul for some time acted thus in ignorance, God had set him apart from the moment of his birth for the work of preaching the truth to the Gentiles. And therefore, in due time, it pleased God to reveal by him Christ Jesus. God called him to be an apostle. God made him an apostle by his own mighty power, by his own direct appointment, by a miraculous revelation of his Son, our Lord, such as left him scarce room to doubt or to refuse. Neither needed he to confer with flesh and blood, to consult the other apostles, or to learn of them the truth which he was now to teach. He was three years before he met with any of them at all, and then saw only Peter and James, abiding with Peter for only fifteen days. And for some time afterwards he was unknown by face unto the Christians at Jerusalem; though all this time he had been preaching unto the heathen the faith which before he had attempted to destroy. And the other apostles and the churches, hearing this of him, "glorified God" in him. So that they were satisfied that his conversion was real, his doctrine true, his apostleship divine. And there could therefore be no ground for the Galatians to doubt, that what he had taught them at the first was what he had been taught of God, from which they must by no means be tempted to depart.

This was the object of St. Paul in thus speaking of himself, in thus dwelling on his own conduct, enforcing his own authority, and confirming what he said with the solemnity of an oath. "The things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not." How earnest is his anxiety in behalf of the Galatians to save them from delusion! How fully is he justified by an end so holy, in calling God to witness the truth of what he wrote, and in writing so much about himself! Let us look to it, that however cautiously we avoid needless oaths, however sensitively we shrink from all needless reference to ourselves, we are not backward, when the safety of our brethren is concerned, both to call God to witness to the truth, and to speak the truth, though it be to our own pain. St. Paul, for such an object, might say, without boasting, "they glorified God in me." Not to say so would have been selfish, if the saying so, though painful to himself, was profitable to the conviction of the Galatians. Oh, how deep then must be our interest in the salvation of each other! how anxiously ought we to watch for the spiritual welfare of each other's souls; if for this end to tell of our own glory is not to boast, if for this purpose the most solemn of oaths is no longer to take God's name in vain!

God make us to feel, both for others and for ourselves, how far above all other objects is the hope of being saved through Christ, saved from this present evil world, admitted to the inheritance of the saints in light!

St. Paul went up again to Jerusalem.

1 Then fourteen years after I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also.

2 And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but || privately to them which were of reputation, lest by any means I should run, or had run, in vain.

3 But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised :

4 And that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage :

5 To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you.

6 But of those who seemed to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person: for they who seemed to be somewhat, in conference added nothing to me :

7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter ;

8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me towards the Gentiles :)

9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship ; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

10 Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do.

|| Or, severally.

§ 546. On agreement, and deference to authority.

St. Paul continued this account of what took place on his becoming an apostle, in order to prove to the Galatians that he derived his doctrines not from men but from God. And he also desired to shew them that the other apostles approved of his proceedings. They gave to him and Barnabas "the right hands of fellowship." A most striking instance this of cordial agreement, in a case where much of jealousy might have been naturally expected. For the other apostles could scarce help suspecting the pretensions of one, who professed to derive his appointment and his doctrine, not through them, but direct from Christ. He however proved the grace that was in him. He satisfied them that the gift was given him of God. And they, when they perceived it, when they were aware of the mighty working of God, by the ministry of St. Paul, towards the Gentiles, they then cordially admitted him to be one of their own company. On the one hand, they exercised due caution in ascertaining that he really was commissioned from on high. On the other hand, when satisfied, they gladly received him, to be a fellow worker with themselves. Let us hence learn to beware of jealousy. Let us consider that it comes of pride and selfishness, that it leads to hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness. Whatever we have that is excellent and honourable, let us be glad to share it with our brethren. Whatever they have that is better than ours, let us not grudge them the possession of their advantages. Whatever we think we have exclusively our own, let us make haste to impart it to others. Let us value it, not the more for belonging only to ourselves, but rather in proportion as it admits of being imparted unto all mankind. Happy were those early converts who counted neither their goods nor their lives to be their own ! Happy are we in proportion as we detach our affections from all that we possess on earth, to fix them with intense desire on that which God has prepared for us in heaven !

And here let us note, that however resolutely St. Paul maintained the divine source of his own doctrine and authority, he was glad to testify to the Galatians, that he had enjoyed the approbation of "James, Cephas, and John," those pillars of the church, and chief amongst the apostles. However sure we may feel, in our own private conduct, that we are doing the revealed will of God, it ought to give us no small peace and joy to be aware that our course is approved by God's most faithful servants. Our own conscience undoubtedly has to answer for it, and therefore our own conscience must in all decide. But one of the chief things by which we ought to be guided in our decision is the judgment of the best of our fellow creatures. Our reason tells us that it is reasonable to defer much to the reason of our brethren. Where we find ourselves greatly differing from the wisest and best of men, we have great need to suspect that we are wrong. Where we find that our own convictions are supported by the sanction of those who are likely to know best, we ought to be thankful for this ground of assurance that we are right.

"Only they would that we should remember the poor." The Christians in Judæa were reduced to great want, and the other apostles wished St. Paul, when he preached to the Gentiles, to make collections in behalf of the Jewish brethren. And this he also was forward to do. In this there was no doubt on either side, that they who had most means ought to help those who had least, that they who became partakers in spiritual things ought to minister to the others in things carnal. See Rom. 15. 27. Well it is for the Christian community that on points like these there can be no division of opinion. All are of one mind as to the duty of almsgiving. Oh that all were of one practice also ! All agree that it is necessary to remember the poor. Oh that all were also forward the same to do !

We are justified by the faith of Jesus Christ.

11 But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

12 For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision.

13 And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel; I said unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15 We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners as the Gentiles,

16 Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

17 But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

18 For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.

19 For I, through the law, am dead to the law, that I might live unto God.

20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.

21 I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.

§ 547. We die unto the Law that we may live unto God.

The chief topic of this Epistle is here resumed, namely, that we are justified by faith in Christ, and not by the works of the Law. "For by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Now this was the point on which the Galatians had been led astray. And therefore St. Paul tells them how at the first he had withstood St. Peter in this very matter. For that apostle, it seems, had dissembled his own opinions on the subject, in deference to the prejudices of the Jews; first eating with the Gentiles, as if they had now common privileges, and afterwards withdrawing and separating himself, "fearing them which were of the circumcision." Let us be watchful that we are never tempted by the fear of man to swerve from our duty to our brethren or to God. And especially if we have been enlightened by the truth, if we have had grace to see the freedom of God's gift in the Gospel, its ample sufficiency, its wide extent, and how entirely it is unfettered by respect of persons, let us be bold to assert these its excellences, especially before the face of those, who would rather limit all its favour to themselves.

Far be it from us to trust, as did the Galatians, in ourselves rather than in Christ! Far be it from us like them to refuse to eat and drink with such as differ in opinion from ourselves, and to charge them with consequences which we say follow from their opinions, but which they are far from admitting! "Is therefore Christ the minister of sin," said these Judaizing Christians, meaning that this must follow from the doctrine that we are "justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law." But no, this is far from what the apostle means. We are dead unto the Law, but it is in order that we may live unto God. We put our trust in the cross of Christ. We are crucified with Him. And we believe that to his cross is nailed the handwriting of ordinances that was against us. See Col. 2. 14. Nevertheless we live. Nay rather, we are now alive far more truly than before. For the life which we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave Himself for us. Thus we "do not frustrate the grace of God." We do not make it consistent with sin, we do not make "Christ the minister of sin." And for this very reason we deny that righteousness came by the Law, namely, that this would be to frustrate the grace of God, this would imply that "Christ is dead in vain."

And all this is true not only of the law of Moses, but of all law, all legal obedience. To be aware that we cannot be justified by it, is most helpful towards our heartily obeying. For who are so habitually disobedient as they who repose their trust in their own good works, and at the same time are apt to reckon that God's goodness is such, as will not allow Him to be severe with sin? These think of God as not so very holy, and of themselves as not so very wicked, of their sins as frailties at which He kindly winks, of their service as profitable to gain his favour. But now observe, on the other hand, the life of the believer. Look at him who has been brought to see the utter hopelessness of his ever justifying himself. Let him have learnt that he is justified by the blood of Christ. Let him look upon himself as freely forgiven, reconciled to God, adopted as his son, provided with the help of the Holy Ghost. This is he who reckons himself dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Christ. This is he who obeys not grudgingly or of necessity, but cheerfully, eagerly, affectionately. This is he who regards Christ, not as the minister of sin, but as the High Priest of holiness. This is he in whom Christ lives, and who lives by Christ living in him: who obeys the more, the more he has been forgiven, and who the more he has been beloved, loves the more.

The blessing of faithful Abraham.

1 O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you?

2 This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

3 Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?

4 Have ye suffered || so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain?

5 He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

6 Even as Abraham believed God, and it was § accounted to him for righteousness.

7 Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

8 And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, ¹ In thee shall all nations be blessed.

9 So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.

10 For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, ² Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

11 But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, ³ The just shall live by faith.

12 And the law is not of faith: but, ⁴ The man that doeth them shall live in them.

13 Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, ⁵ Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree:

14 That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.

§ 548. Why men prefer to think that they are justified by works.

The doctrine of Christ crucified for our sins is so suitable to our condition as sinners, is so well fitted to relieve us of that which ought to be our chief misery on earth, and lays so sure a foundation for our happiness in heaven, that St. Paul counts the Galatians to be bewitched, in that they suffered themselves to be led away from this truth. And this is a kind of witchcraft, a degree of delusion, by which many Christians now are grievously beguiled. Many professed believers now dislike the doctrine of Christ being our righteousness, and instead of it, are bent upon establishing a righteousness of their own. It is our pride which prompts us thus to think too highly of ourselves. It is our pride which makes us so foolish as to suppose that we can perfect by the flesh what we began in the Spirit. It is pride which brings us thus to suffer many things in vain. For vain would be all that here we suffer, vain all that here we do, if it be done or suffered on the presumption that it can save us from the wrath of God.

Know we not that as long ago as in the case of Abraham, long before the law was revealed by Moses, it was belief that was counted for righteousness? And shall we not now be satisfied with the same method of salvation? Shall we not believe and be thankful? Would we not wish to be children of Abraham? And how can we be his seed, except we be of faith? Does not St. Paul call this the preaching of "the gospel unto Abraham," that in him should all nations be blessed, all who like him believed in the Christ that was to be born of his seed? So then they "which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." They are relieved from the curse which awaits all who are "of the works of the law," all who put their trust in their own doings. For though it be true that "the man that doeth them shall live in them," yet it is no less true of them who are "of the law," that "there is none that doeth good, no not one." Rom. 3. 12. But "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us," having taken upon Himself the whole weight of the sentence that was against us. And this He did expressly on purpose that we all, Gentiles as well as Jews, might be entitled to the blessing of Abraham, salvation freely given, to be accepted through faith, even that which the Holy Ghost had promised.

Such are our privileges. Such is the blessing which we share "with faithful Abraham." What would we more? Why desire we to be under the works of the Law? Why are we not content to abide by God's promises? Why are we not thankful to be assured of his love? Why? if it be not that these best of tidings do most forcibly constrain us to that holiness of life, which our nature most obstinately resists? Under the Law obedience is hopeless; and therefore we persuade ourselves that we need not obey. As long as we profess that we are to be justified by our works, we plead our frailty in excuse for neglecting them. But when we own that we live by faith, when we put all our trust in God and in his love, when we believe that He freely gives us all things needful to holiness in this life and to heaven in the next; then, not to work with Him who works with us, then not to love Him who has thus first loved us, then not to be holy as He is holy, and pure as He is pure, this we feel is utterly inexcusable, this we become aware is really sin.

O God, let not us excuse unto ourselves our sinfulness, but daily see more plainly its enormity, daily become more thankful unto Thee for thy love to us miserable sinners! Oh how utterly were we lost in sin, when nothing short of thy Son's death could save us! Oh how hateful must sin be in thy sight, how hateful ought it to be in ours, since it made Christ to be "a curse for us!"

The Law is consistent with the promises of God.

15 Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's || covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.

16 Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.

17 And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.

18 For if the inheritance be of the law; it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

19 Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator.

20 Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one.

21 Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.

22 But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

23 But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed.

24 Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

25 But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.

26 For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

27 For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.

28 There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

29 And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

|| Or Testament.

For the strengthening of man's feeble faith, and to "speak after the manner of men," God has graciously represented Himself as bound by a covenant in the redemption of mankind through Christ Jesus. And this covenant has been several times confirmed. It is a covenant of mercy, a covenant of blessing, a covenant of a free gift to be given by God, through Christ, unto mankind. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made;" to his seed, "which is Christ." And this covenant stands good, these promises must needs take effect, though the law given by Moses might seem to supersede them. For this law did in reality help to confirm the promises. It served to convince men of sin. By means of the Law all men are shewn to be sinners, and believers are the more inclined to cling unto God's promises by faith. Thus the Law was as a schoolmaster, to prepare them that were under it for being justified by faith in Christ. Let us often with these views read the books of the Old Testament; both that we may be convinced of sin, and that we may be comforted with the assurance of God's faithfulness; that we may be compelled to seek for refuge in the blood of Christ, and may be satisfied that God is under covenant to shew mercy unto all men for his sake. "Before faith came," whilst the Gospel was not yet revealed, the Law afforded the best of discipline to prepare men for receiving it. And happy, if they had but known their real happiness, happy were those chosen scholars, who being cut off from communion with an idolatrous world, were instructed in the knowledge of the true God, and exercised in the keeping of his commandments. But after that faith was come, it was foolish of the Galatians to be desirous of abiding by the Law. After that faith is come, it is alike foolish in us Christians to wish to stand by works, rather than by faith. No, let us not think of merit of our own. Let it be the height of our ambition to be "the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Let us desire and endeavour that it may be true of as many of us as have been baptized into Christ, that we have put on Christ.

What an important view is this of our baptism, that herein we have put on Christ! How lightly are we apt to think of what was then done for us, what was then done in us! How little have we since acted as if we had then really put on Christ? Have we been ever since wearing his holy character? Do we feel as if in the condition of sons? Are we heirs according to the promise? Are we conscious that we are? Do we live as though we were? Let us remember, if we are heirs, and yet care not for our inheritance, we may be heirs, and yet be disinherited. We are heirs, not owners. We inherit, we have not earned, we cannot earn, the heaven which God has promised to give us. By birth, we are heirs of sin and misery. But we have been adopted, and made heirs of holiness and of heaven. We have been born anew, in Christ Jesus, unto good works. We are admitted, for his sake, unto eternal life, in the world that is to come. It is on this ground that we must now obey. It is with these feelings that we must now serve, as children who love their Father's work, as heirs who are interested in their Father's glory.

Oh, how much better is it thus to trust in Him, than fondly to rely upon ourselves! Oh, how much more securely may we rest upon his promises, than on our own best purposes, or works! O God, how good is it in Thee to command, what it is our greatest happiness to do! O God, how good is it in Thee to promise, what it is our chiefest comfort to believe!

Our adoption to be sons.

1 Now I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all;

2 But is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father.

3 Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world:

4 But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law,

5 To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

6 And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.

7 Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

8 Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods.

9 But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?

10 Ye observe days and months, and times, and years.

11 I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain.

12 Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am; for I am as ye are: ye have not injured me at all.

13 Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at the first.

14 And my temptation which was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus.

15 Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? for I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

16 Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?

§ 550. The value of the truth.

We were "under the law" till Christ came. Nay, we "were in bondage under the elements of the world." And the being so is here compared with the condition of an heir, as long as he is a child. He is "under tutors and governors." He is like a servant, in being under constraint. He does not his own will and pleasure, but the will and pleasure of others. And we might add, as another point of resemblance, that as the child, though he is the heir of a large estate, cares more for the few pence in his pocket than for the great wealth which will so soon be his, in like manner, the natural man is more intent upon his present pleasures, all vain, all trifling, as they are, than on the joys which are prepared for him in heaven for ever.

But now, that we are under the Gospel; now, if we believe the Gospel, if we love the Gospel; now, we are no more in bondage; now, our duty is no longer irksome; no longer are we subject to constraint. For now our will, if we be Christians indeed, our will is now conformed to the will of God. We have the adoption of sons; we are no more servants, but sons. We are not now sons under such restraint as makes us like unto servants, but sons who have free access unto God, sons who rejoice to do all that He desires. No wonder, that when the Galatians knew not God, "they did service unto them which by nature were no gods." But is it not most marvellous, that now, when we know what God is, who He is, we should still be averse to serve Him? "God is a Spirit." John 4. 24. "God is love." 1 John 4. 8. So entirely is He love, that we doubt not of his most fearful attributes, that they are now revealed for our good, and will hereafter raise the joy and affection of his saints. And this our God, the only true God, is all around us, all within us. He is where we are always. He is where we are now. He is with us in life. He is with us in death. He is with us after death. And always He is more ready to hear than we to pray; He is wont to give more than we desire or deserve. Always He is looking upon us as his adopted children; and like as a father pities his own offspring, even so does He bear with our infirmities, even so does He remember whereof we are made; so does He try to win us by every means we can conceive, that we should serve Him, and love Him, and obey Him. Thus it is, that we know God; or rather, are known, thought of, cared for, by Him. And is it not most strange, when He continually sends forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, teaching us to cry, "Abba, Father," is it not most strange, that we should be tempted to make light of the good tidings He reveals, and often to treat his messengers, as the Galatians treated St. Paul, at first perhaps with kindness, but afterwards as if they were our enemies, and this for the same reason, because they tell us the truth?

The truth is the thing that really is. The truth is not altered by our not believing it. It is not altered by our hating it. It is not altered by our ceasing to love them that tell us of it. It is not altered by our counting them for our enemies. Heaven is still heaven, and hell is still hell. God is still God, whatever we may think; too holy not to hate iniquity; too faithful not to forgive, as He hath promised, our sins, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Let us then count those for our best friends, who remind us of these most profitable realities. Whatsoever be their infirmities, let us be glad to hear from their lips the Gospel of God. Let us be most thankful to know God as He really is. Let us be most anxious to serve Him as He would have us. Let us at all times bear in mind how holy, how good He is; how willing He is to hear; how nigh to help; how free to give, in answer to our prayers; how sure to pardon, according to his word!

The two covenants compared.

17 They zealously affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude you, that ye might affect them.

18 But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you.

19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you,

20 I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you.

21 Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?

22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman.

23 But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise.

24 Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.

25 For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children.

26 But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

27 For it is written, 'Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband.'

28 Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

29 But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now.

30 Nevertheless what saith the scripture? 'Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman.'

31 So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free.

§ 551. Zeal, good and evil.

St. Paul here draws a contrast between two kinds of zeal. On the one hand, "they zealously affect you, but not well;" on the other, "it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing." And in this contrast there is especial reference to the zeal of the false teachers, who desired to establish the whole law revealed by Moses, as binding on the consciences of Christians. In order to convince them of their error, to shew them that their zeal was not in a good matter, the apostle reminds them of what was written in the Old Testament, "that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman." And of these two he says, that they signified "the two covenants." For the children of the bondmaid would be born to servitude; and the children of the freewoman would be born to liberty. And thus also the one covenant "gendereth to bondage," and the other to liberty; for "Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." So many are the children of the freewoman! so many more souls has the Gospel borne to God than the Law! so many more has it brought up in holiness unto heaven!

Hence we learn how highly we ought to value our spiritual liberty in the Gospel, how zealous we ought to feel in imparting it to others, and how carefully we ought to watch against wasting our zeal in communicating and perpetuating a spirit of bondage. The liberty wherewith Christ has made us free is freedom from the spirit of fear. It is also freedom from the dominion of sin. The two must go together. For to sin and not to fear is the height of sinfulness. To sin wilfully, on the presumption, that through God's mercy we may sin securely, this is the highest aggravation of our iniquity, for this is the most gross abuse of God's love. And yet we must constantly bear in mind, that the way of avoiding sin chiefly dwelt upon in the New Testament, is the way of faith, and the way of love; the way of trust in God's promises; the way of hope in God's mercy; the way of thankful reliance on the death of the Son of God. Though it be presumption to sin fearlessly, yet it is, also true, that not to fear is one way not to sin. To look upon God as a reconciled Father, this is the most effectual of all means to our being holy. A lively apprehension of our sinfulness in sinning, is indeed combined, in the Christian character, with our sense of God's mercy in forgiving us. And as long as we are on earth, we shall have fear lest we offend God, as well as trust in his grace to preserve us from offence. But in proportion as we advance in our experience of the Gospel, the former of the two yields unto the latter; fear gives way to trust; yea, "perfect love casteth out fear." 1 John 4. 18.

Let it then be for this Gospel that we are zealously affected. This Gospel let us most earnestly desire to spread abroad, as widely as we can. Though he that is "born after the flesh" still persecute him that is "born after the Spirit," though the advocate of legal righteousness cast reproaches on those who aim to be the children of the promise, yet God's word will not fail. Our success in the end is sure. "The desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband." The doctrines of grace, however they may be despised in the world, are alone able, when all others fail, to make mankind the children of God. Oh that we may love them heartily! Oh that we may spare no pains to make them lovely in the eyes of our fellow creatures! Oh that we may be careful to express them soberly, diligent to practise them continually, and earnest to preach them, or to promote their being preached, faithfully, effectually, abundantly!

St. Paul exhorteth to stedfastness.

1 Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

2 Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.

3 For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law.

4 Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.

5 For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith.

6 For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love.

7 Ye did run well; ¶who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?

¶ Or, who did drive you back?

8 This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you.

9 A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

10 I have confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwise minded: but he that troubleth you shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be.

11 And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution? then is the offence of the cross ceased.

12 I would they were even cut off which trouble you.

13 For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.

14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

15 But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

St. Paul having already shewn what that liberty is wherewith Christ has made us free, next calls upon the Galatians to "stand fast" in it, and not to be "entangled again with the yoke of bondage." This is an exhortation which very closely concerns ourselves. We also have been made free by Christ. We also are often beset by those who would entangle us in the yoke of fear, and in the bondage of iniquity. For satan, whose kingdom cannot stand against the reign of grace, is most anxious to delude us into a false persuasion of our own natural ability to serve and please God. And if thus we trust to our own works and performances, it comes to pass that Christ profits us nothing. To seek to be justified by the Law, is to fall from grace. We become debtors to do the whole Law. And this is a debt which we can never pay. Instead of being "justified by the law," "we, through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness by faith." This is our character. This is the character of true Christians. This is our character if we be true Christians.

"For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love." We must believe, and also we must love. Our love must come of our believing. Our belief must lead us to love. Our obedience must spring from faith and love together; not out of the notion that our works justify us, but out of faith in God that He justifies the ungodly, out of love to God for so doing unto us. It is to the works of the Law that faith is here opposed, not to such works as spring from faith. Works done in the presumption that they justify us, these avail nothing. And yet it is a faith "which worketh," and no other, this it is which avails. Let us watch, that no one hinder us that we should not obey this truth. Let us beware of that evil leaven which would puff us up, on the one hand, with pride in our own doings; on the other, with confidence in an inactive faith. We might indeed by these means avoid persecution. The offence of the cross, as far as we give offence by trusting only in Christ crucified, might cease. Satan and his agents, our worst enemies, those who trouble and unsettle us in our faith, might be content to let us rest in deadly error. But see how St. Paul wished that such were even cut off! See how stedfastly we ought to refuse to join their company, or to suffer them to join themselves, being such, to ours!

We have been called unto liberty. Let us rejoice in it. Let us resolve to stand fast in it. Let nothing shake us from the persuasion, that it is faith working by love which "availeth any thing," and that, only in "Jesus Christ;" only through the atonement of his death. But at the same time let us be warned that we use not this "liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." If we sin, we are no longer free. His servants we are to whom we obey. See Rom. 6. 16. Our freedom is deliverance from sin. We are not at liberty to please ourselves in sinning. But having been originally in the bondage of iniquity, we are now free to be holy if we will. We have grace given us to be holy. We have most urgent motives unto holiness. We have armour provided against our spiritual enemy. We are assured of the kind regards of our Father which is in heaven. And hence we learn to love, and also to serve, one another. Hence we learn that even as God loves us, so ought we to love our brethren. For in this, we are told, the whole Law is fulfilled, even, in this one word "love." This is all the law that is binding upon Christians. And by this we may know how much is now binding; whatever is a part of love, whatever falls within the rule of universal charity. From this we are not set free. To this we are in the Gospel more bound than ever.

God grant that we may rejoice thus to fulfil the Law! God grant that in this, and in all other points, we may stand fast in the Gospel!

That we must walk in the Spirit, not after the flesh.

16 This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

17 For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

18 But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

19 Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

20 Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies,

|| Gr. fulfil not.

21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, 23 Meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.

24 And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the [†] affections and lusts.

25 If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

26 Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

† Or, passions.

Here we have the best of cautions against abusing that liberty wherewith Christ has made us free. "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." We should not so much as wish to sin if we were thoroughly occupied with the work of holiness. For as "the flesh lusteth against the Spirit," so also does "the Spirit against the flesh." "And these are contrary the one to the other." How vain then is all attempt on our part to gratify them both at once! It cannot, no, it cannot be. We cannot at once serve God and mammon. We cannot be at once following where the Spirit leads, and also complying with what the flesh requires. Let us not in this matter be deceived. Are we led by the Spirit? If not, we may be sure, however little we suspect it, we are following the lusts of the flesh. Or again, would we be delivered from the bondage of the flesh? There is no other way but this, we must be led by the Spirit. Without the guidance and help of the Spirit, we cannot do the things that we would. But if we be "led of the Spirit," then we are not under the Law. Then we obey, not because we fear, but because we love; not because we dare not sin, but because we would not if we durst.

We are here very plainly told what the works of the flesh are, and also, that "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." And thus there is no room for evasion or escape, on the part of those who wish to turn into licentiousness the liberty of the Gospel. However boundless may be the mercy of God, yet they who do these things have no part in his kingdom. And these things are the very same which are forbidden in the Law, "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." These things, if we are Christ's, we have crucified, even "the flesh with the affections and lusts." Away with them, away with them, crucify them. This is the language we ought to hold towards all such abominations. It is not fit for such things to be. And here let us remember how it is written, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Ch. 3. 13. Let these things that are to be crucified become accursed in our estimation. Let us "abhor that which is evil." Rom. 12. 9. Let us consider how sin has cost our Saviour's blood. Let us think how each time it is renewed, it does, as it were, crucify Him afresh. Far be it from us to aggravate his sufferings! Far be it from us to take part with his enemies! Far be it from us to be unclean, or drunken, contentious, or superstitious, vain glorious, malicious, or envious!

No, let us set our hearts upon the fruit of the Spirit. Let us love each other, and love God; "the fruit of the Spirit is love." Let us rejoice always; "the fruit of the Spirit is joy." Let us labour for peace with others; let us be at peace among ourselves; the fruit of the Spirit is "peace." It is "long suffering;" let us be patient. It is "gentleness;" let us be gentle. It is "goodness;" let us be kind to one another. It is "faith," let us be faithful; "meekness," let us be meek; "temperance," let us be pure and sober. "Against such there is no law." We are not under the Law if we are such. We can become such only by being under the Gospel. If we are really under the Gospel, if we really live by the Spirit, let us prove it by also walking by the Spirit. Here is advancement without emulation; a race in which there is no strife; victory without vain glory; success without envying of others who succeed. We walk, but we desire to have company in our journey. We run, and also wish to be first; and yet we wish our brethren to be first also. We long for every one of our fellow creatures to enjoy the same gifts, to wear the same crown, to dwell in the same heaven, to be with the same Christ for ever.

Oh that God may prosper them and us! Oh that we may be able, through being Christ's, to crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts! Oh that we, through the Spirit, may mortify the deeds of the body, and live for evermore! See Rom. 8. 13.

The concluding exhortations.

1 Brethren, || if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

2 Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

3 For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.

4 But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another.

5 For every man shall bear his own burden.

6 Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

7 Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

8 For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

9 And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

10 As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

11 Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand.

12 As many as desire to make a fair shew in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

13 For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh.

14 But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, † by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.

15 For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature.

16 And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

17 From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

18 Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

|| Or, although.

† Or, whereby.

§ 554. That we must glory in the cross of Christ.

"Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth." 1 Cor. 8. 1. They who know much, and love little, are apt to censure their brethren, and to be severe with those who fall, forgetting how much they themselves are in need of forgiveness. But the more truly we are spiritual, we shall be the more forbearing towards each other, we shall be the more watchful lest we be overtaken in a fault ourselves. We shall bear one another's burdens, not triumphing, but sorrowing with godly sorrow, over them that sin; not eager to shut them out from our society, but glad of an opportunity to restore them, in the spirit of meekness. "Who is weak?" we shall be able to say truly, with St. Paul: "who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?" 2 Cor. 11. 29. Instead of busying ourselves to judge our brethren, we shall be diligent in proving our own work, examining our own hearts, watching against our own besetting sins. It is for these that we shall have to answer at the day of judgment. Our own burdens we then must bear. And if these through God's grace prove light, if by God's help we now flee from sin, we shall then have ground of rejoicing in ourselves, whatever may be the condition of our brethren. Oh, let us therefore help them, but judge ourselves. Oh, let us be at once severe to mark the least that we do ourselves amiss; and kind to overlook the worst of their offences against ourselves, yea, to plead for their reconciliation unto God.

"Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." This is a doctrine which teachers are often reluctant to enforce; lest they should be suspected of interested views. But where God has thus plainly revealed it, no man ought to venture to suppress it. Be it remembered then that this is the duty of every Christian: to communicate, or impart, unto those who teach him in the Lord, out of the store with which God has blessed him. And in this matter, be it remembered, God will not be mocked. In this matter, as in all kinds of giving, nay and also in all our conduct, be it what it may, "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Let us look to it then that we sow whilst it yet is seed time. Let us look to it that we sow what we should wish to reap. Let us take care that we give freely, of that which is our own, for the support of the ministers of religion. Let us do good as we have opportunity unto all men. Let us especially persevere in our bountiful attentions towards "them who are of the household of faith." "Behold, the husbandman," says St. James, "waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth." And shall not we be content to wait for the joys of heaven? He "hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain." James 5. 7. And shall we be weary in well doing, when God already gives the dew of his grace, to help us in our Christian growth, when He assures us of our spiritual sowing, that "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not?" No; let us sow diligently, let us sow hopefully, let us work without weariness, let us wait without impatience. Let us sow not to the flesh but to the Spirit. And of the Spirit we shall "reap life everlasting."

St. Paul wrote this Epistle with his own hand, because he wished to shew the Galatians how anxious he felt in the chief matter about which he had to write. And to this he now again refers at the conclusion,

"the cross of Christ," the only way of salvation, as opposed to the works of the law of Moses. For there were at that time many who insisted on obedience to the Law, especially in respect to circumcision, in such a way as to make the Gospel of none effect. Seeing then how St. Paul dwells upon this subject, how often he refers to it, how large a space it takes up in his epistles, we may be sure that it is a subject on which it is good for us often and seriously to meditate. Is it then, let us ask, is it the desire of our hearts, to glory in nothing else except only in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ? Do we feel that by Him the world is crucified to us, and we unto the world? Do we find in ourselves that new creation, here insisted on, as being that which really avails? Do we find the peace in our hearts, which St. Paul here prays for, in behalf of all who walk by this rule? Have we a firm trust in God's mercy? Are our hopes deep rooted in his promises? Have we now in our lives the evidence of his grace? Have we in his grace given unto us at present, the evidence of his salvation to be given unto us in the end?

This is the state of feeling St. Paul would have us to attain. This is the new creation to be formed in us. And it is for this end that he so frequently insists on this doctrine of Christ crucified. "Other foundation can no man lay." 1 Cor. 3. 11. "Neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature;" or, as it is before expressed, "neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love;" Ch. 5. 6; or, as in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, 7. 19, "circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God." These commandments are those which Christ enforced. This new creature is Christ formed in us. This faith is faith in Christ. This love is love of God in Christ. This work is the work which Christ has ordained. And it is only in Christ Jesus that it avails. Oh, that we who have been signed with the sign of the cross, may ever remember how we bear in our bodies this mark of the Lord Jesus! Oh, that the grace of our Lord Jesus may ever be with our spirit! Amen.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS: 1. 1—14.

St. Paul blesseth God for the election of his people.

1 Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus:

2 Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly || places in Christ:

4 According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love:

5 Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will,

6 To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved.

7 In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace;

8 Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence,

9 Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself:

10 That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in † heaven, and which are on earth; even in him:

11 In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

12 That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first ‡ trusted in Christ.

13 In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise,

14 Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

|| Or, things.

† Gr, the heavens.

‡ Or, hoped.

§ 555. The Holy Spirit the earnest of our inheritance.

We read of Ephesus, in the Acts of the Apostles, how much the people of that city used to put their trust in their goddess Diana, how heartily very many of them notwithstanding, were turned to the Lord by the preaching of St. Paul, and how affectionately the same apostle exhorted the elders of their church, when he sent for them to meet him at Miletus. See Acts ch. 19. Here we have an Epistle written with the like warmth of love, "to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus;" in the opening of which St. Paul first expresses after his usual manner his desire that they may enjoy grace and peace, and then pours forth in their behalf the most animated thanks to God, for the inestimable blessings vouchsafed unto mankind through Jesus Christ our Lord.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." This is one of the most endearing of all the names of God. Not only is He our Father; He is the Father of our Lord. Not only is He the Father of Jesus Christ, inasmuch as Jesus Christ is man; but inasmuch as Jesus is also God, He is God the Son, and his Father is God the Father. It is in the Son, "in Christ," that the Father has "blessed us, with all spiritual blessings," and therefore it is for the Son that we must give thanks unto the Father, and it is to the Father that we must give thanks for the Son. Oh, that we may have wisdom to understand how Father, and Son, and Holy Ghost are Three, and yet are One, are Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and yet are One God! Oh, that we may desire to know all we can, and have grace to love even further than we know! Oh that we may be sensible of the many blessings with which God has blessed us in things heavenly, and may bless Him, and praise Him, and thank Him, not only with our lips but with our lives!

For truly we may take unto ourselves the great things here said of the Ephesians. We may look upon ourselves as having been chosen in Christ "before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." We may consider that God "hath predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved." And what can we imagine more to thank God for than this? How can we sufficiently accuse ourselves of sin, if for this we are not thankful? Has God chosen us to be holy, from the foundation of the world, and shall we still love to lead a life of wickedness? Has He chosen us to be blameless; and shall we still prefer to offend? Has He settled it in his purpose, that we should, as adopted sons, live according to his pleasure, and to the praise of his marvellous gift, in that He has thus through Christ accepted us? And shall we, can we, thanklessly continue to serve Him, not as children freely and affectionately, but as servants grudgingly and by constraint? Far be it from us thus unworthily to return his love! What, have we not redemption in Christ through his blood, redemption from the bondage of iniquity? And had we rather be still slaves of sin? Have we not forgiveness of sin, according to the riches of his grace? And shall we presume upon the gift we have already received, to draw more largely on his bounty, to trespass more boldly against his will? No, let us make this his goodness the foundation of our affectionate obedience. Let us endeavour to learn how greatly He has loved us, for our direction as to the love we ought to feel for Him.

God has abounded towards us in the riches of his grace, in the costly and precious gifts which He has bestowed on us. He has abounded to us "in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure;" so that we are no longer ignorant of our duty whilst on earth, or of the glory which awaits us as the end of our obedience. He has shewn us that it is his purpose to gather together in one all things in Christ; that we which are on earth might have joint inheritance with them that are in heaven. He has revealed it, that to this we are predestinated, and that, by Him "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." Who then shall be against us? What need we fear? How can we doubt? Why do we one moment hesitate to believe that heaven is really ours? And how, if we believe this really, how can we any longer live unto the earth? Surely this will be the most effectual help towards our living to the praise of God's glory, for us to trust in Christ, for us to believe that through his grace we might thus live! Surely we cannot hear the word of truth, and know it to be the Gospel of our salvation, and yet not believe, not trust! Surely, if we believe, we shall also be "sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." "The earnest of our inheritance;" a pledge of it, a pledge consisting of a part of it, a portion of our inheritance itself, given us for our present possession, and in order to assure us that we shall receive the rest. This is what the Holy Spirit of promise is. This is what the Holy Ghost is, that Spirit which is promised to all who pray for a gift so excellent. The grace He imparts, the holiness He helps us to attain, the faith, and hope, and charity, which now, through his help, abide in us, these are a part of the possession purchased for us by Christ, a part sufficient to assure us of the rest, as an earnest, but yet compared with the rest so small as to be counted for an earnest only. Oh, how excellent then must heaven be itself! How holy, how pure, how good, the joys of our heavenly inheritance! Oh, how earnestly must we strive to attain unto the full possession of the whole! Oh, how yet more diligently must we persevere, out of regard to the honour of our Lord, for the praise of the glory of Christ!

St. Paul prays for the Ephesians.

15 Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints,

16 Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers;

17 That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation || in the knowledge of him :

18 The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints,

19 And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the working † of his mighty power,

20 Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places,

21 Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come:

22 And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church,

23 Which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all.

|| Or, for the acknowledgment.

† Gr. Of the might of his power.

§ 556. The knowledge of Christ.

St. Paul, when he contemplated the riches of God's mercy in Christ, could not help breaking forth into a strain of thanksgiving. And especially he gave thanks for those of whose faith and love he heard a good report. But whilst he offered thanks, he neglected not also to offer prayers. And for ourselves it is no less necessary that we should pray to God for help in time to come, as well as thank Him for mercies already received. We have seen what we chiefly have to be thankful for; let us here learn for what we might most profitably pray. Let us learn with a view to praying for the things here mentioned. Let us pray, as feeling how much we want them, as longing to have them, as knowing that we cannot have them except of God, except we ask of Him in prayer, and as being also fully assured that He is more willing to hear than we to pray, and is wont to give more than we desire; how infinitely more than we deserve!

The chief thing then for which we here are taught to pray to God, is spiritual wisdom, "the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him." And this means, that the eyes of our understanding should be enlightened, for us to "know what is the hope of his calling," the hope to which He has called us; "and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints," which He has prepared for the saints; "and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe," power manifested in imparting holiness and joy unto believers. This we ought to pray to understand; this we ought most earnestly to desire that we may know. But can we know the love of God? Nay, it passeth knowledge. And yet we must long to know as much of it as we can. And we may know as much as God has revealed for our instruction. We may know what it is which He has invited us to hope for, life eternal. We may know what are the riches of the glory which He has laid up for the inheritance of the saints, even to be with Christ, where He is. We may know what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, even to make us holy and happy for ever. Such is the working of his mighty power! Such are the mysteries which we must pray to understand! Such are the marvellous things which we must look into with eyes enlightened by his grace! things "which he wrought in Christ;" as when He raised Christ from the dead; as when He set Christ at his own right hand in the heavenly places; as when He exalted Christ above every thing, both in earth and heaven, making Him "the head over all things," to his body the church! Would that we might really know these things as God has been pleased to reveal them! For then how could we help loving to know them more and more? how not love to do that which we find to be God's will? how not long to enjoy that which we are told is his glory?

These things cannot rightly be said to be known by such as live a worldly life. A man cannot be thought to know that he may have heaven if he will, when he proceeds steadily in the way to hell. A man cannot be thought to know that his sins are forgiven, and that he is redeemed from the power of sin, when we see him still afraid to resist temptation, afraid that he shall fail in the attempt, and yet afraid also that he shall be punished for his transgressions, afraid that when he dies he shall perish everlastingly. Oh that God may make us know more clearly, that we may do more diligently! Oh that God may help us to teach others, that they may not perish for lack of knowledge! Oh that we may communicate that knowledge which ends not in profession, but in practice, by not merely professing, but practising ourselves! And especially let us here learn to know of Jesus Christ, how high He is, how great, how glorious; how above all things else, but only God; nay, how He is God Himself. For the church is his body; but it is the Church of God. See Col. 1. 24. Christ is the Head, "that filleth all in all." And God is in the end "all in all." 1 Cor. 15. 28. Thus Christ is God. Oh that He may be all in all to us! Oh that He may fill all, in us, and in all men! Oh that He may fill all our hearts with the Holy Spirit, that proceedeth from the Father and the Son, and with the fervent love, and devout obedience, which only the Holy Spirit can impart!

How the dead in sins are quickened in Christ.

1 And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins;

2 Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience:

3 Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling † the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, † Gr. the wills.

5 Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;)

6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus:

7 That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

8 For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God:

9 Not of works, lest any man should boast.

10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before || ordained that we should walk in them.

§ 557. By grace we are saved through faith.

Both Jews and Gentiles were by nature dead in trespasses and sins. Both walked therein, in time past, "according to the course of this world," as men naturally would walk, who knew of no world but this, and who in all things were guided by the practices of the world, going on from sin to sin. Both were thus advancing in iniquity, "according to the prince of the power of the air," as satan would wish all to transgress, satan, who is elsewhere called the "prince of this world," John 12. 31, "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," still influencing, according to his pleasure, the lives of those Christians who disobey their Lord. In this way it was, that both Jews and Gentiles used to live by nature, thus "fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind," the evil appetites of the body, and the corrupt inclinations of the soul; being by nature the children of wrath, one even as the other; both born to an inheritance of endless misery. This then was our case also. Thus it was that we also should have been born, thus have lived, thus died, and thus have perished for ever, had not God, according to the working of his mighty power, raised Christ from the dead. See ch. 1. 19, 20.

But God "is rich in mercy." It is in love that He most largely abounds. It is with great love that He has loved us. And in this is his love made manifest, that "when we were dead in sins" He "quickened us together with Christ;" first forgiving us our sins for his Son's sake, then giving us freely the gift of newness of life. He raised us up together with Christ, raised us from sin to holiness; and "made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus;" entitled us to a portion in that heavenly glory which is the proper inheritance of our Lord, even where He is seated at the right hand of the Father. See ch. 1. 20. "That in the ages to come," in all future periods of this world, and in the endless ages of eternity, God "might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us, through Christ Jesus." This is one great object of this world's continuance. This is one of the chief things which will constitute the joy and the glory of heaven; the exercise of God's goodness towards the children of men, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. For this end it is consistent with God's goodness, that these many wicked and adulterous generations should be permitted to flourish in the world. For this He suffers still the cruel to oppress, the covetous to hoard, the scorner to blaspheme. How great then must his kindness be! How greatly must God delight in shewing it! in feeling it, in making it to be felt! How nigh to heaven might we find our sojourn on the earth, if our hearts were filled with the contemplation of God's love towards us through Christ Jesus!

"For by grace are ye saved through faith." Here we have some of the chief particulars of God's love set forth. "By grace," by free gift, by undeserved mercy. We are saved; we are delivered from that danger in which otherwise we stood, from the misery in which we must else have dwelt for ever. "Through faith;" through our believing in God, that He justifies the ungodly for his Son's sake. "And that not of yourselves." Our salvation is not of our own doing. It is of God's doing. "It is the gift of God." "Not of works, lest any man should boast." We are not saved by our obedience, we are not saved by our faith; but "by grace;" by God's free gift, by the merits of our Saviour Christ; so that no flesh can glory in his presence. For our good works are not altogether ours, but God's, as is also our faith, and hope, and love; or rather, as we also are ourselves. "For we are his workmanship," we are God's creatures, made by his power at the first, and now anew "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them," or for which He has ordained us, that we might walk therein. Let us walk therefore according to this our new creation. Let us walk according to the will of Him who created us anew. Let us walk according to the image of Him in whom we are created. Let us walk in those good works which God has in his word appointed, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

How Christ reconciled both Jews and Gentiles to God.

11 Wherefore remember that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands;

12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:

13 But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

14 For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us;

15 Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain, one new man, so making peace;

16 And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby:

17 And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh.

18 For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father.

19 Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God;

20 And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone;

21 In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord:

22 In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

|| Or, in himself.

§ 558. Agreement of Christians with each other.

The Ephesian Christians had for the most part been "in time past Gentiles in the flesh," Gentiles by their natural descent. And St. Paul here speaks of himself, and of such of them as were Jewish converts, as having been a distinct party. And it is his object to shew wherein the distinction had consisted, how it had been done away with by Christ, and how all parties, now by Him brought together, ought to form one body, holy unto the Lord. The distinction was marked by the names of the Circumcision and the Uncircumcision. The one party had the covenant of promise. The other had not. The one had hope. The others were hopeless. The one had the knowledge of the true God. The others were without God in the world. These differences formed the real partition between Jews and Gentiles, of which the middle wall in the temple was a sign and symbol. And to these must be added especially the ceremonial law, "the law of commandments contained in ordinances," a law whence much of enmity arose between Jew and Gentile, each reckoning the other for aliens, for members of a kind of commonwealth entirely distinct.

But this law Christ fulfilled by his death, and utterly abolished it, or put an end to it. And by this means, even by his blood, He brought nigh them that were before far off; far off from God, and from God's people. He "made both one." He made "in himself," or rather by Himself, by his death, "of twain one new man." He made peace between the two, by making both at peace with God. He reconciled both unto God by his own body put to death upon the cross. He came and preached peace, the same peace, both to them that were afar off, and to them that were nigh. "For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." Through Jesus Christ! How plainly in this passage is the whole work of our salvation set down to the atonement of his blood! How entirely does the argument of St. Paul depend on its being first known and acknowledged, that it is "by the blood of Christ," that it was "in himself," "in one body by the cross," by these means, and by these only, that we are reconciled unto the Father. "He is our peace." It is through Him that we have access. But it is unto the Father that we have access. And it is "by one Spirit" that we have access. "Through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." Here then we see the whole mystery of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, revealed in a single verse. Here we learn how they are Three as persons; how they are One as God. Let us desire and endeavour to draw nigh unto the Father. Let us ever bear in mind that only through the Son we can approach Him. Let us be no less firmly persuaded, and no less continually mindful, that it is by one Spirit, and by one only, even by the Holy Ghost making our hearts holy, only by his blessed influence it is that we can be where we fain would be, in full communion with our Father which is in heaven.

Now, therefore, let us feel as if we were no more strangers and foreigners, not strangers unto God, nor foreigners amongst each other, "but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." If Jews and Gentiles ought to feel towards each other this cordial assurance of mutual regard, how much more ought we who are of one family according to the flesh, as we are also of one household of faith! With what affection ought we to approach unto each other! With what delightful conviction that we shall be affectionately received! All are built on the one and same foundation, that of the apostles and prophets. All rest on the same chief corner stone, Jesus Christ. How fitly is the building framed together in Him! Oh that we were as we ought to be, in harmony with each other! Oh that we might help each in his respective place to the growth of this living temple, the church of the Lord! Oh that we may be built into it as living stones, being ourselves, and helping to make the church, "through the Spirit," an habitation fit for God to dwell in!

The eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus.

1 For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles,

2 (If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward :

3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery ; (as I wrote || afore in few words ;

4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,)

5 Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto the holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit ;

6 That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ, by the gospel :

7 Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me, by the effectual working of his power.

8 Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ ;

9 And to make all men see, what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ :

10 To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God,

11 According to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord :

12 In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him.

13 Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

|| Or, a little before.

§ 559. How we should help to make God's goodness known.

St. Paul here calls himself "the prisoner of Jesus Christ." And yet Christ came to give liberty to the captives. See Luke 4. 18. And in like manner, though peace on earth was one chief purpose of his coming, see Luke 2. 14, the result in regard to many of mankind has been not peace but a sword. See Matt. 10. 34. This arises from our own evil passions, from pride and perversity, from anger and cruelty; through these it is that Christians are so oftentimes at variance, through these St. Paul was delivered by the Jews a prisoner into the hands of the Romans. Oh that we may be glad for Christ's sake, to bear cheerfully whatever men lay upon us! Oh that we may have grace to lay upon ourselves, upon our own evil tempers and propensities, such restraints, denial, and confinement, as may make us worthy to be called prisoners of the Lord!

The apostle calls himself "the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles." It was for the faithfulness with which he preached the Gospel to the Gentiles, that the Jews had accused him to the Romans. And having alluded to this his case, he goes on, without finishing his sentence, to dwell throughout this chapter on the gracious message with which he had been entrusted; namely, "that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body," and partakers of the promise of God in Christ by the Gospel. Most glad tidings of most great joy! Who could have thought, that saw the nations of the Gentiles living without God in the world, who could have thought that for them God still cared, that for them in due time He would give his Son, that for them, and for their children after them, He would proclaim forgiveness of sin, and the inheritance of the saints in light? And who that should now contemplate the indifference of reputed Christians to the glad tidings which they cannot avoid hearing, who could guess that for these men heaven is now open, and that but for their own fault they might all now be making good their entrance therein?

Of this Gospel St. Paul was made a minister. And this he counted for a signal instance of the grace of God, and of the effectual working of his power. Far beyond any deserts of his he felt it, especially considering that he had once persecuted the church; far beyond his deserts that he should "preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ;" that he should help towards making "all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery," how widely that Gospel is extended, which heretofore had been "hid in God," concealed purposely from mankind. So high an honour did St. Paul count his office, that even the tribulations to which it exposed him were matter of glorying, and that not only to him he reckoned, but to those in whose behalf he suffered. How great then ought to be our joy and thankfulness, to find that with little risk of any such tribulation as St. Paul's, we may have part in the same glorious work, even in making known the Gospel to mankind. This, let us remember this was the great glorying of St. Paul. This helps to make known God's manifold wisdom not only to mankind on earth, but also to the principalities and powers in heavenly places. And this it was God's eternal purpose thus to have made known. And this "he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord: in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him." What can we have more for our encouragement in spreading abroad the knowledge of salvation? It is God's purpose. He purposed it in Christ. It is the purpose of that very Saviour in whom alone we have, through faith, access unto God. Do we use this access? Do we exercise this faith? Do we feel this peace and joy in believing? Let us endeavour to communicate the like joy to our fellow creatures. Let us speak for the Gospel. Let us give for the Gospel. Let us live for the Gospel. Let us make our light shine before men, with this single object ever in our view, that they may, through Jesus Christ, glorify our Father which is in heaven.

St. Paul bows his knees unto God in our behalf.

14 For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,

15 Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named,

16 That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man;

17 That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love,

18 May be able to comprehend, with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height;

19 And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.

20 Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us,

21 Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

§ 560. Knowledge, faith, and love.

To feel ourselves entrusted with the dispensation of the grace of God, to be persuaded that by the influence of our words, and works, we may help to make men wise unto salvation, and so help to make known throughout the universe the manifold wisdom of God, this is one of the most stirring of all motives to holiness of life, this is the chief lesson we have endeavoured to learn from St. Paul's account of his own commission. Let us now further observe how he seconded his exertions by his prayers, or rather how his prayers held a chief place in his exertions, as they ought to hold a chief place in ours. "For this cause I bow my knees," this is the apostle's way of saying that he prayed. This may teach us, that when we pray, we ought to kneel upon our knees, to make the posture of the body agree with the devotion of the soul. "I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." This shews us how in our praying we ought to think of God, even as the Father of our Saviour, even as having given for us his Son, to die for our sins, upon the cross. How then can we doubt but that He who gave us a gift so far beyond all that we could expect, will likewise for his sake, if we ask, freely give us all things?

And especially let us pray, that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith; that we may believe, and that believing we may become meet for the indwelling of our Saviour, even a temple holy unto the Lord. And for this end let us beseech God, that we may be rooted and grounded in love. Let us pray, that love may be to our lives as a root to the tree, as a foundation to the temple, that which conveys nourishment and stability to the whole. Only by means of love can we believe as we ought to do. Only by means of love can we know all we might. It is true we must know first, ere we can believe. It is true we must first believe, in order for us to love. But if our knowledge lead not to our believing, it is in vain. And if our faith work not love, it is fruitless. And when we both know, and believe, it is only if thereupon we love, that we can succeed in believing more and knowing more. Each grace is assistant to the other. As we grow in one, this helps us to grow in all the rest. And thus it is only by being rooted and grounded in love, that we can approach towards knowing that which passeth knowledge, the love of Christ, or that we can comprehend as far, as it is given unto saints to comprehend, its "breadth, and length, and depth, and height." Thus might we be "filled with all the fulness of God." Thus might we go on from strength to strength, from grace to grace, until we are all that God would have us be, even all that Christ has commanded us.

Able God is "to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." Able He has proved to be, and willing also, in all that He has done for us already. Able and willing we shall find Him, in all that He has prepared for us hereafter. Oh let us then trust in his promises, pray for his help, and praise Him for his goodness. "Unto him be glory in the church." Unto Him be glory in us; in our lips and in our lives. "By Christ Jesus;" by Him dwelling in our hearts, by Him manifest in our words and actions. "Throughout all ages;" in time past, and present, and to come. "World without end;" even when time shall cease. "Amen." So be it, we pray Thee, gracious God. So may thy will be accomplished! so may thy glory be magnified! so may thy Gospel flourish! so may thy church prosper! So may we thy servants help to glorify thy name! "Amen."

St. Paul exhorts to unity.

1 I therefore, the prisoner || of the Lord,) beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,

2 With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love;

3 Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

4 There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling;

5 One Lord, one faith, one baptism,

6 One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

7 But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ.

8 Wherefore he saith, † When he ascended up on high, he led † captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

9 (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?

10 He that descended, is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might † fill all things.)

11 * And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

12 For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

13 Till we all come § in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the ¶ stature of the fulness of Christ:

14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive;

15 But * speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ:

16 † From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love.

|| Or, in the Lord.

† Ps. 68. 18.

† Or, a multitude of captives.

† Or, fulfil.

‡ 1 Cor. 12. 28.

§ Or, into the unity.

¶ Or, age.

* Or, being sincere.

‡ Col. 2. 19.

§ 561. Sincerity in love.

Unity of faith, unity in the church, even for all believers in Christ to be of one mind and of one heart, this is the duty which is here first recommended. And this is described as “the unity of the Spirit,” being that which is most agreeable to the Holy Spirit of God. “There is one body, and one Spirit,” one church of Christ’s faithful people, one Holy Ghost to make them holy. There is one hope of our calling, one heaven, and one only. And so also there is only “one Lord, one faith, one baptism;” no other sacrament can be right, no other faith correct, no other Christ can be a Saviour, save what is in the Gospel set forth. And so also God is one, and one only. How then can we imagine that any other religion than one can be right? How can we be indifferent as to which is the right one? God does indeed through Christ give to different persons different kinds and measures of grace. And Christ, who first descended to this lower earth, and afterwards ascended into heaven, Christ, who “led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men,” has undoubtedly appointed in his church a variety of officers. But this has been done, not to promote distinctions, but to ensure union. This has been ordered on purpose to secure the great end of “perfecting the saints,” of bringing all believers unto the same belief, the same knowledge of the Son of God, the same complete holiness of life, here significantly called “the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.” But when will the day arrive for us to be all thus full grown in holiness and love? When shall we cease to be the sport of idle controversy, to be the prey of interested deceivers? When shall we be united to one another no less firmly than members of one body; the joints all firm, the limbs all sound, all working together for mutual good, all following in all things the direction of Him “which is the head?”

Our way and means thereto are clearly laid down in these few striking words, “Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.” Nay they are more briefly set forth, and scarce less fully, in this other expression of the apostle, “speaking the truth in love.” We must cleave to the truth in our minds. We must recommend it by charity in our words. We must endeavour to hold fast that faith once delivered to the saints, which whilst errors may be countless, can be only one. But the bond by which we keep it must be peace. No force but that of lowliness and meekness, no constraint must be employed in our holy cause, but that of long suffering and kind forbearance. With these St. Paul begins what he had to say upon this subject, with recommending as means towards our union, these particulars of Christian love. And love is still the last word he has to write, when he has enlarged on the advantages of our being united. Have we yet tried this method thoroughly? Have we manifested towards those who differ from us, this humility, meekness, kindness? Have we felt affection? Have our hearts glowed with the warmth of unfeigned desire to be one with them, and they with us? or are we not often tempted to feel glad that we are apart, each proud of his own position, ready to raise, instead of remove, the barriers of separation, and to plead that we are contending for the truth, when all that we feel really to be at stake is our own credit, interest, or success?

God grant that we may long for unity! God help us to promote it by charity! God preserve us in that truth which can be but one! God bring us to that heaven where there is room for all!

That we must put off the old man, and put on the new.

17 This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind,

18 Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the ¹|| blindness of their heart:

19 Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. *

20 But ye have not so learned Christ;

21 If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus:

22 That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;

23 And be renewed in the spirit of your mind;

24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and † true holiness.

25 Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another.

26 Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath:

27 Neither give place to the devil.

28 Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have ‡ to give to him that needeth.

29 Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good § to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

30 And grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

31 Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice:

32 And ² be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

† Or, holiness of truth.

‡ Or, to distribute.

§ Or, to edify profitably.

* 2 Cor. 2. 10.

§ 562. That we must advance in holiness, as well as avoid sin.

See to what the vanity of our minds would bring us, if we had not rightly learned Christ! See what warnings, what words of exhortation, St. Paul thought necessary, even for those who had been taught "as the truth is in Jesus." We are still liable to sin. We are still within reach of being tempted to walk, as the rest of the Gentiles walk; as they walk who are not yet Christians. Nay, are we not surrounded in this Christian land by numbers who thus walk? Can we shut our eyes upon the many instances of men, whose understanding, in all things relating to God's will, seems to be covered with thick darkness; who, through this ignorance, are strangers to the heavenly life they ought to lead; whose ignorance comes of blindness in the heart; who seem to have outgrown all sense of shame, in the greediness with which they rush into sensual excesses, those corrupt and deceitful lusts, which promise pleasure for a time, but yield only pain for ever. God forbid that we should cease to feel most deep concern for these our offending brethren! God forbid that we should witness their offences, without considering how precious is our privilege, in having better learnt of Christ, how tenfold shameful if we fall is our fall; if we, through presumption or inconstancy, should be guilty of the sins which we ought to loathe and abhor!

But not only must we not walk in the sins of the heathen; we must be renewed in the spirit of our mind. Not only must we "put off concerning the former conversation the old man," we must "put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." To put away lying is not enough; we must also speak every man truth with his neighbour. We must not only never wilfully deceive, but we must come forward to say the whole of what is true; we must be free to testify that which we do know, whether it be in God's cause, or in the cause of man, though it be to our own harm. It is not enough to steal no more. We must labour, working whether with hand or mind, the thing which is good; we must be diligent, patient, and laborious, in order that we may have to give to him that needeth. It is not enough that no corrupt communication proceed out of our mouth, nothing which tends to corrupt the hearers or ourselves. There must issue thence a fountain of holy conversation, even "that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearers." We must speak always out of heavenly motives, often of heavenly things. We must speak always on a Christian principle; oftentimes concerning the love of God manifested in Christ dying for us, the gift of the Spirit, the pleasures of holiness, the hope of heaven.

And so likewise in anger, that passion which of all others is of most frequent occurrence, it is not enough not to sin in being angry, not to harbour anger, not to yield in this evil temper to the suggestions of Satan; it is not enough to put away all bitterness, all wrath, all malice. We must add to this much more. We must be kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven us. God has not merely put away our sins. He has given us for the present grace and hope, peace and joy in believing, and hereafter life everlasting. Thus must we forgive, thus must we give unto each other; thus freely, thus affectionately, thus bountifully, thus for Christ's sake. And also it must be out of regard to the Holy Ghost, the Holy Spirit of God, by whom we are "sealed unto the day of redemption." His impression is upon us. Let us watch that the seal be safe. Let us watch that we grieve not Him who has enabled us so greatly to rejoice.

That we must walk in love, not in uncleanness.

1 Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children;

2 And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour.

3 But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints;

4 Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks.

5 For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

6 Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of || disobedience.

7 Be not ye therefore partakers with them.

|| Or, unbelief.

† Or, discovered.

8 For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light:

9 (For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth;)

10 Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

11 And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

12 For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

13 But all things that are † reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

14 Wherefore he saith, 'Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

15 ‡ See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise,

16 Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.

‡ 1s. 60. 1.

‡ Col. 4. 5.

§ 563. Spiritual wakefulness, and circumspection.

Because "God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us," Eph. 4. 32, therefore we must be "followers of God, as dear children," imitating the gracious dealings of our Father, and thankfully walking in the steps of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

But how far from such giving of thanks as this, how far are the evil practices here spoken of, these pollutions of the flesh and of the spirit, the love of filthy pleasure, or the love of filthy lucre, "fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness!" These are things never to be named among saints, never to be spoken of in our common conversation; lest the mere mention of them should stir up evil thoughts. For these are things on which the mind is intent by nature, things on which the tongue is prone to talk, the ears to listen, and the mind to dwell. And because our corrupted nature is apt to lead us into these iniquities, there are many who hence argue that they are not so very sinful; many, who with vain words would deceive us, if we are so foolish as to suffer them. Let us mark then the plain testimony here borne by St. Paul to the contrary. These things "are not convenient." They are not agreeable to our Christian vows. They are not agreeable to our Christian privileges. They are not agreeable to our Christian hopes. And further, "because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience." Now it was to save us from this wrath that Christ died. It was to save us from these sins. And not only did He deliver us from wrath, He gave us an inheritance in heaven. And this we know, "that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God."

"Be not ye therefore partakers with them." Renounce all partnership in their evil traffic. Their merchandise is sin. Their gain is endless misery. Renounce the deeds of darkness, and "walk as children of light." The one is not enough without the other. You must not only abhor evil; you must cleave to that which is good. See Rom. 12. 9. You must prove, "what is acceptable unto the Lord," recommending it by your lives. Besides having "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," you must "reprove them." And though "it is a shame to speak of those things which are done of them in secret," you may administer reproof by deeds if not by words; you must, by your pure and heavenly life, put to shame their worldly conversation. For as it is light that disperses the darkness, so it is by truth that we can best put falsehood to the blush, by our self denial, sensuality, by our heavenly tempers, a worldly mind. "Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." For here the same image is employed. It is night with sinners; and their souls are heavy with sleep. Or they are awake, but slothful, and unwilling to arise. Or they are dead in trespasses and sins. But Christ is as the Sun of Righteousness to shine into their heart to pierce the veil of their ignorance, to revive in them the powers of the soul, to give them light and life. "See then that ye walk circumspectly," for it is darkness all around. "Not as fools," ignorantly listening to the vain words of the deceitful; "but as wise," as enlightened by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. "Redeeming the time," using the opportunity of life for its proper end, setting it free from the abuses of the world; "because the days are evil," because sin besets us, because death awaits us, because the world entices us, the flesh rebels, and our adversary the devil is watching to devour us.

God give us light to see our danger, and strength to prevail against our enemy! God help us to renounce the works of darkness, to reprove them by a life of holiness, yea to prove in our own lives "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God!" Rom. 12. 2.

Against drunkenness. Duties of husbands and wives.

17 Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

18 And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit;

19 Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord;

20 Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ;

21 Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

22 Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.

23 For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the saviour of the body.

24 Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing.

25 Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it;

26 That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word,

27 That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

28 So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

29 For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church:

30 For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.

31 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh.

32 This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church.

33 Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

§ 564. The spiritual marriage of Christ with his church.

How seasonably does the apostle here intreat us to be "understanding what the will of the Lord is!" How largely does he help us to understand it! How forcibly has he already in this chapter warned us against one kind of profligacy! How plainly does he here denounce another, no less frequently thought excusable in the world! "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess." Let no man then deceive us with vain words. Drunkenness is sin. Drunkenness is one of the things for which the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience. See ver. 6. And here again observe, it is not enough to be not drunken. We must delight in far other pleasures: we must be filled with the Spirit. And instead of the loud mirth, profane singing, and fierce strife, which usually accompany drunkenness, we ought to speak to ourselves "in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs;" we ought to sing and make melody in our hearts to the Lord, we ought to give thanks always for all things unto God, even the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; we ought to submit ourselves "one to another in the fear of God."

Wives especially may here learn that they ought to submit themselves unto their own husbands. For in marriage is represented the spiritual union which is between Christ and his church. And as He is the head and Saviour to his body the church, so is the husband in authority over the wife; and so ought the wife to be in every thing subject unto the husband, even as the church to Christ. What an effectual antidote is here provided against that tendency to strife, which often embitters the most near and dear of domestic ties! What a lesson for all members of Christ's church, that they ought to have their wills in subjection unto Christ, even as a wife unto a husband!

But if the wife must submit unto the husband's rule, the husband is here instructed no less plainly that he must rule with submission to the will of the Lord, may with deference also to the wishes of the wife. For did not Christ so love his church as to give Himself for it? Was it not his object to sanctify it and cleanse it, by his ordinance of baptism, in that solemn form of words, that He might make us a peculiar people zealous of good works? See Tit. 2. 14. And how can husbands in like manner love their wives; if they spare any pains or self denial in maintaining the affection of their wives? "So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies." For so has Christ loved us, even as Himself. So has the Lord loved and cherished the church, even as "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Mysterious similitude, here graciously revealed to the apostle, to teach us both our duty to each other, and our duty to our Lord; to shew husbands how they ought to love their wives, and Christians how Christ has loved them! What can be more mysterious than that affection, which shall cause a man to leave father and mother, and be joined as one flesh to one before a stranger? What but that Christ should leave the mansions of his Father's glory, for the sake of presenting to Himself his spotless church, to be one with Him, and He one with us! How great must have been his love for us! How devout must be our submission unto Him! How ought every Christian husband to learn from this heavenly mystery, so to love his wife even as himself! How ought every Christian wife hence to look to it that she reverence her husband.

God grant that we all in our several relations may do our duty to each other, out of reverence for our Lord! God grant that however close may be our union with all others, we may above all things desire to be one with Christ!

Duties of children, parents, servants, and masters.

1 Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

2 Honour thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise;

3 That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

4 And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

5 Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ;

|| Or, moderating.

6 Not with eye service, as menpleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart;

7 With good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men:

8 Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

9 And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, || forbearing threatening: knowing that ~~†~~ your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him.

† Some read, both your and their master.

§ 565. That we must do all as unto the Lord.

How delightful is the harmony of a Christian family, in which every member is guided by the directions here given by St. Paul! How different is the case where no such influence prevails! Where God's word is not the rule, where God's grace is not the strength, how plainly may be seen in domestic unhappiness the insufficiency of mere natural affection. Children, wayward, wilful, and perverse. Parents now spoiling them by fond indulgence, now alienating their affection by oppressive punishment. Servants doing as little for their masters and as much for themselves as they can contrive, indifferent whether they stay or go, wasteful, deceitful, idle, intemperate. Masters ruling by threats, expecting more than reasonable attention to their wants and wishes, and making no allowance for the feelings of their servants. Add to this the frequent struggle for the mastery between master and mistress, husband and wife, whose will ought to be as one. And we have then a just notion of the common case of families where the fear of God is set at nought, where the love of Christ is not predominant. However fine the house may shew without, however well it may be swept and garnished within, it is the abode of pride and selfishness, of injustice, unkindness, wrath, and discontent; it is not the abode of happiness or of peace.

But now see how great is the alteration which comes of obeying the Gospel of Jesus Christ, even as it is set forth by St. Paul in this Epistle. How true would be the affection, how close the union between husband and wife, has been already shewn. How equally sincere would be the love subsisting between parents and children, masters and servants, is here pointed out. And here also all depends on this one principle, all is to be done "as to the Lord." All is to be done as service due to Christ, as homage which we owe to Him, and which we rejoice to pay to Him, as a free will offering of love, which we present with thankful hearts unto Him who to us is every thing. "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right." It is right that you pay this due respect of honour and obedience unto your father and mother upon earth. It is right that you do it out of devout affection to your Almighty Parent in the heavens. And this is the very earliest and first to be put in practice, of all the duties we have to do in this present life. And therefore has God made mention of it, and added to this commandment a promise of long life, in that comprehensive summary of his will concerning us, which He revealed from heaven to the children of Israel. "And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Watch over your own tempers that you aggravate not theirs. For anger is like a consuming fire, that first kindles what is nigh to it, and then destroys. Receive therefore your little ones in the name of Christ, with the same kindness and gentleness which you owe unto your Lord, teaching and training them, chastening or encouraging them, just as you might suppose that Christ would best approve.

Servants too must serve as unto Christ; and must be obedient to their masters upon earth, because they fear to displease their Lord which is in heaven, because they love to please Him, who gave Himself for all, whether bond or free, and through whom alone either slave, servant, or master, can receive any good thing at the hand of God. And masters in like manner, must in the treatment of their servants, remember that they also have a Master which is in heaven; with whom there is no respect of persons, and who will call them to account hereafter for the way in which they now treat these their fellow servants. Let them therefore give that which is just and equal, not only to the good, but also to the froward. And let servants be obedient and attached, not only to the kind, but also to the hard master. Let parents be patient with the most perverse of children; and children dutiful to the most negligent of parents. For in any case, the Lord is still the same, all just, all kind, all good. Him we are in any case still bound to serve. Him it is our greatest gain in any case to serve freely, cheerfully. And the less returns we meet with from those we live amongst on earth, we may feel so much the more sure, if we do our duty unto God, to have the reward of our Father which is in heaven.

Christian armour against spiritual enemies.

10 Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

11 Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.

12 For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against || spiritual wickedness in † high places.

13 Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and ‡ having done all, to stand.

14 Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness;

15 And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace;

16 Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

17 And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God:

18 Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints;

19 And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel,

20 For which I am an ambassador in § bonds: that ¶ therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak.

21 But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things:

22 Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.

23 Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ  in sincerity. Amen.

§ 566. The duty of praying for each other.

"Finally, my brethren," after well weighing all that has been said of God's love for us, and of the love we owe to Him, "finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." It is only "in the Lord" that we can "be strong." It is only "in the power of his might" that we can do the things here enjoined. Of ourselves we are weak, naked, defenceless. We must seek for strength from Him. We must put on his armour. And it must be all his armour. One part will not suffice without the other. The girdle without the breast plate, the shield without the sword, or both without the helmet, will not enable us to stand against an enemy so fierce, so powerful, as we have to contend with. It is "the devil." It is the evil spirit who desires to make us miserable for ever. It is against him we wrestle, against him and against his angels, "principalities" as they here are called by reason of the rank they fell from; "powers," having still influence allowed them for a time; "rulers of the darkness of this world," because they use their influence to promote ignorance and iniquity; "spiritual wickedness in high places," because they are wicked spirits, dwelling in that world unseen, which is altogether above out of our reach. And yet they can reach us; aye, and do reach us. They reach our minds, there suggesting evil thoughts. They reach our hearts, there raising evil desires. They reach our bodies, there adding to the temptations which otherwise arise from flesh and blood. They reach our souls, there instilling pride and presumption, high esteem of ourselves, scorn of our brethren, and unthankful regards towards God.

These then are the enemies with whom we have to wrestle, not only against our own corrupted nature. And the assistances provided for us by God are these, truth, righteousness, the preparation of the Gospel of peace, faith, salvation, the word of God, and watchfulness in prayer. This armour will enable us both to defend ourselves, and also to put our adversary to flight. We can both protect ourselves against his fiery darts, and also inflict wounds upon him, to his shame and pain, and to the glory of our Lord. Let us then be girt about with truth, being sincere in all things, in our words, in our deeds, and above all, in our religion. Let us wear righteousness high unto our hearts, desiring to be entirely righteous if we could, and thankful to have been counted so for Christ's sake, even though through our frailty we in all things fail. And having our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Not one step let us take without the Gospel for our support, that Gospel which will prevent us from wandering into error, or from falling whilst we are in the right way, that Gospel which teaches us the way of peace, peace with God, and peace within ourselves, peace here, and peace for ever. "Above all, taking the shield of faith," for else we cannot escape, much less conquer. Without faith we shall be at the mercy of our enemy. Without faith in the atonement of the death of Christ, we stand guilty, as Satan would fain have us, in the sight of God; we fall an easy prey to his devices, we are pierced through by his fiery darts. The shield protects the body, the helmet the head. Our helmet is salvation, the hope of salvation, the confident persuasion that we have been forgiven for Christ's sake, and that through Christ we shall live for ever. The sword is for the wounding of our enemy, as well as for warding off his blows. Our sword is "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." Let us use it as did our Lord when He was tempted. Let us bethink ourselves of some passage that applies to our temptation. Let us therewith encourage our own hearts, and therewith put to flight our enemy.

But all this, let us remember, is God's armour, not our own. He alone can give it us. He will give it us only if we ask. And therefore we must pray continually; and watch continually unto prayer. We must pray with watchfulness and perseverance, not only for ourselves, "but for all saints." For thus if we all pray in earnest for all others, as well as for ourselves, the armoury of God will open to our supplications, our hands will be strengthened, our defence made good, our victory accomplished.

St. Paul would especially have the Ephesians pray for himself. This is the only favour he asks of them. This is the boon for which we might most properly make interest with one another. Give me a place not at your feast but in your prayers; not in your show of worldly vanity, but in the outpouring of your hearts' affection before the throne of grace. This is the kind of comfort the apostle asks for. This is the kind of comfort he imparts to the Ephesians. He sends, indeed, also Tychicus to tell them of his affairs. But he sends first his petitions unto God, that there may be peace "to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." He prays that there may be "grace with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." He prays then for us also, if we sincerely love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. God has promised, that for such there shall be grace. God has promised; and therefore the apostle prays. Let us also pray for the very things which God has promised to give. We pray, not for his information. He best knows what we want. We pray, not with a view to change his purposes. He is not a man that He should repent. We pray, because He has bidden us. We pray, because our Lord has said, "Ask, and it shall be given you." Matt. 7. 7. "Amen." Lord, let us ask as Thou wouldst have us. Let us receive that which Thou desirest to give us! Let us pray for grace! Let us pray for grace in behalf of all men! Let us watch unto prayer! Let us pray always!

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS, 1. 1—18.

St. Paul writeth of his thankfulness and prayers in his bonds.

1 Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons:

2 Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 I thank my God upon every remembrance of you,

4 Always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy,

5 For your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now;

6 Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you¹ will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ:

7 Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because² I have you in my heart; inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are³ partakers of my grace.

8 For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ.

9 And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all⁴ judgment;

10 That ye may⁵ approve things that⁶ are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ;

11 Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God.

12 But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel;

13 So that my bonds⁷ in Christ are manifest in all the⁸ palace, and⁹ in all other places;

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

15 Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will:

16 The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds:

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel.

18 What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

§ 567. That we must in any case rejoice if Christ be preached.

The church at Philippi appears to have been one of the most flourishing, that is to say, one of the most eminent in faith and love, of all which were founded by St. Paul. For in this Epistle we find no note of censure, no reproof for sin, but only thankfulness for progress already made, with exhortation unto further proficiency. Happy is that Christian to whose enlightened apprehension and sanctified life, the word of God presents not so much conviction of sin, as motives unto increase in holiness. Happy were the Philippians, and especially their ministers, of whatsoever order or degree; for whom St. Paul, every time he remembered them, felt cause to thank his God! Always in every prayer of his for them, he made his request with joy. He prayed for them, not with sorrow of heart, as for sinners whose condition filled him with apprehension; but with rejoicing of the spirit, as for saints, of whom he was confident, that God, who had begun in them so excellent a work, would also perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Happy are they in whose behalf the ministers of the Gospel can now feel such confidence as this! Happy are we, if we can feel it, if we have ground for feeling it for ourselves; if we desire, and endeavour, and have good reason to feel it in behalf of each other.

And how may we best attain unto this joyful conviction? How was it that St. Paul came thus to think of the Philippians? First, there was the fact that God had begun in them a good work. Proficiency already attained is the first ground on which to build our hope of further attainments. The next point is affection in our own hearts towards them in whose behalf we hope. "Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart." And again, "for God is my record how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ." "Charity hopeth all things." 1 Cor. 13. 7. Love for our fellow Christians, glowing in our hearts, will help greatly towards giving us a good hope in their behalf. And the more we hope in earnest, we shall the more in earnest help, we shall the more in earnest pray for their spiritual prosperity. And this is the way in which the apostle cherished his confidence in regard to the Philippians; not trusting so as to work the less, but to his trust adding all means in his power for the accomplishment of that on which he reckoned. Therefore he wrote this Epistle. Therefore he expressed this confidence, that it might raise a good hope, and stir up renewed exertions in those to whom he wrote. And therefore he offered up this prayer in their behalf, that their "love might abound yet more and more in knowledge, and in all judgment." And like to this must be our conduct, if we have Christian confidence; the more we trust, we must the more labour and the more pray. The more we trust, either for our brethren or for ourselves, we must strive the more earnestly at the throne of grace; we must pray the more fervently for the increase both of love and of knowledge, both that we may know what is good from what is evil, and that we may do the one and avoid the other; both that we may be "without offence," and also be "filled with the fruits of righteousness," fruits which we owe not to our own labour, and for which we must not take praise unto ourselves; for they "are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God."

St. Paul wrote this Epistle from Rome, where he had been for some time detained as a prisoner. And he was anxious to shew the Philippians that this his bondage, instead of proving a hindrance, had "fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel." For by this means he had been able to make known the truth in the chief places, and amongst the chief persons in that city; and to recommend it by the patience, meekness, and cheerfulness, with which he suffered imprisonment for Christ's sake. And hence also the brethren were encouraged to speak the word without fear; learning from his example to make light of the afflictions of this present world, for the sake of preaching the Gospel of Christ. Some indeed, who were hostile to St. Paul, took occasion from his confinement, to bestir themselves more actively in making converts to the Gospel, with a view to gaining over numbers to their own respective parties, supposing to add affliction to his bonds. These probably were such as held the necessity of circumcision, or some other out of the various false doctrines which are apt to pass current in the company of truth. But little did they know of the apostle's temper, little did they understand his zeal for the Gospel, if they thought to wound his feelings by any measure which enlarged the kingdom of his Lord. "What then?" he remarks, "notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." He rejoiced not in the envy and strife. He rejoiced not in the pretence. He rejoiced not in the divisions which were likely to ensue. For these he mourned. Against these he often and earnestly elsewhere protests. But in the preaching of Christ, as far as by any means his Gospel was preached effectively, as far as by any means sinners were really converted from the error of their way, brought from ignorance to the knowledge of the truth, and from sin to holiness and life; in this St. Paul rejoiced, in this he would have us rejoice. In the midst, therefore, of the scandalous divisions which still rend the community of professing Christians, in the midst of the heart sickening envyings, jealousies, and strife, which still proclaim to an unbelieving world that we Christians are far from one, let us observe with thankfulness and joy, how many are brought nigh unto the kingdom of heaven, even by those who preach Christ out of pretence or contention. We cannot too deeply grieve for their pretence. We cannot too heartily mourn for their contention. But neither can we too greatly rejoice in any real success they have; in any fruit of faith and love which God makes to follow on their preaching. His is all the glory. Theirs is all the sin. Theirs; and ours also, if we are contentious; if it be more out of rivalry with each other, than out of love for Christ that we preach, or in any way promote the Gospel. Oh that all who receive our Gospel, would work together in one spirit! Oh that all who preach one Christ, would preach Christ always out of love!

St. Paul trusteth that he shall glorify Christ.

19 For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ,

20 According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death.

21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

22 But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not.

23 For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better:

24 Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.

25 And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith;

26 That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again.

27 Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel;

28 And in nothing terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God.

29 For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;

30 Having the same conflict which ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

§ 568. Spiritual courage.

We have here all the blessings of the Gospel summed up in a few short words: "to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." A holy life, and a happy death. Happiness in living, happiness in dying, happiness in that which is after death. This was St. Paul's view of his own case. He knew that all things would work together for his good, he had an earnest expectation and hope that in nothing he should be ashamed, He was full of trust at the present, and he trusted that he should be full of trust for the future. How much to be desired is any anxiety at all for our everlasting welfare! How many are content with what on earth they can enjoy, without thought of the necessity of caring for the soul! What, can we be within a moment of eternity, and not care to know what our eternity will be? Do we own that we must be either happy for ever, or miserable without end, and yet take no anxious thought to know which of the two will be our lot, to know it with a view to securing for ourselves the best that is within our reach? Few things will more move us to take pains, than the persuasion that our pains will not be lost. Few things will more help us to rejoice, than an earnest expectation and hope that in nothing we shall be put to shame by the enemy of souls, that Christ will be magnified by us in all things, "whether it be by life, or by death."

For see how dispiriting it is to think beforehand that we are sure to fall! See how encouraging it is to live under the impression that our death will certainly be gain! To be so sure of heaven, and yet so eager to do good on earth, that we know not which to choose; to feel our happiness so great in either case, that we are in a strait between two; to have an earnest desire to depart, and to have it qualified not by the fear of sinning, not by the dread of punishment, but only by the desire to be continued to our brethren for their "furtherance and joy of faith;" thus it is that to live is Christ, and to them which so live to die is gain. The two cannot be separated. We cannot be sure of dying to our gain unless we live to Christ. Unless we live as He would have us, unless we live a life of love, of love for Christ, and love for all our brethren, we must not expect to find our gain in death. Far be from us all false presumption! Far be from us all unworthy fear! Far be from us the spirit of bondage, that would make us not so much averse to sinning as apprehensive that we shall sin! Far be from us all selfish anxiety to enjoy in haste our own endless joy, when we might better wait awhile on earth, better for God's glory, better for the good of our fellow creatures!

But alas who is in haste for heaven at all? How few! How seldom hear we any mention of death as gain! How many look on it as the worst of evils! How rare is that faith, how scarce that love, which would enable us at once to count heaven for our own, and to be willing for a while to forego it ourselves, that we may help our brethren to attain unto the same glorious inheritance! For this is the good we ought to aim at imparting; this is the only benefit in prospect, which would make it worth while to live; this was the object which led St. Paul to conclude that he should be somewhat longer spared to the Philippians, that their rejoicing might "be more abundant in Jesus Christ," that their conversation might be "as it becometh the gospel of Christ." Let us in like manner encourage and exhort one another to "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." Let us bid one another be in nothing terrified, and be in nothing terrified ourselves by our adversaries, the spiritual enemies who would destroy our souls. Let us cherish and promote that courage which they may count in us for a token of perdition, but which we reckon to be a proof of God's work in the soul, with a view to our salvation. And whatever we may suffer from adversaries on earth, or from the assaults of wicked spirits against the soul, let us esteem it a privilege to have the same conflict with the apostle, even to suffer here for Christ.

St. Paul exhorteth to unity and humility.

1 If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies,

2 Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

3 Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory: but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

4 Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:

6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God:

7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men:

8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

9 Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name:

10 That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

11 And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

12 Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.

13 For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

|| Or, habit.

§ 569. God's help is our great encouragement.

Though St. Paul could rejoice, if in any way Christ was preached, yet he earnestly desired that we should all "be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, and of one mind." And this he calls fulfilling his joy, so entirely did his joys arise from that which was conducive to the saving of souls and to the honour of his heavenly Master. Would that our chief delight might always thus consist in that which gives glory unto God! Would that we might thus long to be likeminded, and to make as many as we can to have the same love, and to be of one accord and of one mind! Would that we might truly experience, what consolation there is in Christ, what comfort in love, how precious is the fellowship of the Spirit, how sweet it is to have our hearts yearn with affection for our brethren, how sweet to think God has shewed mercy upon all men.

Let then "nothing be done through strife or vain glory." For these are the springs of nearly all our differences. "But in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." For thus should we be more apt to submit ourselves to each other in the fear of God. Thus should we more carefully observe that subjection to such as are in authority, which is one chief provision towards unity in the church. "Look not every man on his own things," on his own knowledge, judgment, or ability; "but every man also on the things of others," on the advantages, and claims, and opinions of his brethren. For by allowing them their due weight, putting ourselves in the situation of others, and considering how we should ourselves have acted in their place, we shall more readily attain to being humble, in seeing our own errors, instead of censorious in denouncing theirs. And these rules we may most profitably apply to many things besides the furtherance of unity in religion. In many things, nay in all, we must be more ready to see faults in ourselves than in our brethren.

But above all, let us in this and in all other matters, endeavour to have in us the very same mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." See how great was his condescension! See how He humbled Himself! See how high He was from all eternity, even in the form of God! even in such sort the eternal Son of God, that He "thought it not robbery to be equal with God!" See next how He made Himself for our sakes low, how "he was despised, and we esteemed him not!" Isa. 53. 3. See how when He "was made in the likeness of men," He "took upon him the form of a servant!" See how "he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." This is the pattern for our humility! This is the rule we are to live by, in our loving one another. And would we know what will be the fruit of our obedience, of our following our Saviour's steps? See then further how highly God exalted Him! See how it is ordained that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of all beings in heaven, in earth, and under the earth; and how every tongue should confess that He is Lord, to the glory of God the Father!

Let us then follow the example of our Lord. Let us obey the exhortation of his apostle. Let us do what he here enjoins, as a part of that heavenly work, which is described as working out our own salvation. God is ready to work in us "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Else indeed we might despond. Else we might despair. Else we could have no reason to expect success. But if God be with us, who can be against us? If God help, who can hinder? Now we may have a good hope, a good courage. Now we may with good ground of reason feel assured of victory. And yet how tenfold grievous must be our failure, if now we fail! With what tenfold fear and trembling must we now apprehend the risk of failing!

God give us that salutary fear which helps to keep us humble, together with that courage which fills us full with hope! God grant that we may fear nothing so much as his displeasure! God grant that we may hope all things by reason of his love!

Of Timotheus, and Epaphroditus.

14 Do all things without murmurings and disputings:

15 That ye may be blameless and || harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom † ye shine as lights in the world;

16 Holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain.

17 Yea, and if I ‡ be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all.

18 For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

19 § But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

20 For I have no man ¶ likeninded, who will naturally care for your state.

21 For all seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's.

22 But ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel.

¶ Or, sincere. † Or, shine ye. ‡ Gr. poured forth. § Or, Moreover. ¶ Or, so dear unto me. * Or, honour such.

§ 570. What characters are most to be esteemed.

To "do all things without murmurings and disputings" is one way towards being "blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke." We must neither murmur against God, nor dispute amongst each other. For what can be further from our duty as children than to find fault with the dispensations of our heavenly Father? And what can more expose us to rebuke from Him, than that we should wrangle and contend with one another? See how eminent is our calling, how important our office, to "shine as lights in the world," "in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation." As the heavens declare the glory of God, as there is nothing hid from the heat of the sun, see Ps. 19. 1, 6, so ought our Christian life and conversation to tell it out among all beholders, that the Lord is our God, and that we are not ashamed of Christ and of his words; so ought the influence of our Christian love to dispel all doubts, to silence all murmurs and disputes, and to shed abroad amongst all within our reach the light of truth, the warmth of charity. Thus might we hold forth the word of life. Thus might we add to the joy of St. Paul in the day of Christ, if we profit by his labours, if we help to shew that he did not run nor labour in vain.

How cheerfully, how thankfully, does St. Paul here speak of the advantages to arise from his self devotion! Yet how carefully does he elsewhere guard against having his own services, however faithful, confounded in the apprehension of his converts, with the inestimable value of the death of Christ! "Was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" 1 Cor. 1. 13. How carefully ought we to watch also, that our joy in Christ's service lead us not to think too highly of our services; that whilst we rejoice, and bid each other also to have joy in the faith which we help to spread abroad amongst mankind, we still give all the glory unto Him who alone giveth the increase.

St. Paul, when he would send Timothy to the Philippians, sends with him this high character, that he was likeninded unto himself, caring with the natural affection of a parent for the state of the Philippians. And in this he presented a delightful contrast to the spirit which animates the generality of mankind. "All seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's." This was the case in the time of the apostle. Is not this also the case amongst ourselves? Do not all, or nearly all, look more to their own profit or pleasure, than to advancing the kingdom of their Saviour? Happy are they who, like Timotheus, care for others as well as for themselves, and care for others for the sake of Christ! Happy are they who, like Epaphroditus, minister to the wants, and grieve for the sorrows of their brethren! He had been sick nigh unto death. And he was full of heaviness, not because of his own sickness, but because the Philippians had heard that he had been sick. Well might St. Paul bid them to receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness, and to hold such in reputation. Do we follow these directions? Do we hold in reputation such as these? Do we value and love above all others of mankind those who most love their Lord; those who, for the work of Christ, spare not to be nigh unto death, not regarding their lives, so that they may be helpful for Christ's sake to the health or to the eternal life of their brethren? Oh how much more of real greatness, how much more of real goodness, might we discern in such zeal and charity as this, than in the deeds of violence, or the gifts of ostentation, which most commonly are reckoned for illustrious, which most commonly have obtained the names of good and great!

St. Paul's ground of confidence.

1 Finally, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord.* To write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.

2 Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision.

3 For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh.

4 Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more :

5 Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews ; as touching the law, a Pharisee ;

6 Concerning zeal, persecuting the church ; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless.

7 But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ.

8 Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord : for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ,

9 And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith :

10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death ;

11 If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

§ 571. That we must count all things loss for Christ.

In this passage we may see how different is true Christian faith from that which was pretended by false teachers, here called "dogs," as tearing to pieces the church, "evil workers," because they did more harm than good by their exertions, "the concision," because they taught the necessity of circumcision according to the flesh, instead of that which was in the heart and in the spirit. Of these St. Paul warns us to beware. And, at the same time, he tells us to "rejoice in the Lord;" and teaches us, that the true circumcision are they which "worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." These therefore are the doctrines which he would have us keep safe. It was in order to our safe possession of them that he set down in writing what he had before been used to preach. And it is only by holding fast unto this precious faith, that we can ourselves be safe in the day of the Lord.

See then how great is the difference between having confidence in the flesh, and rejoicing in the Lord. The apostle tells us how strong were his own grounds of having confidence in the flesh. He had been circumcised on the eighth day, as appointed in the Law. See Gen. 17. 10, 12. He was "of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews;" not merely a proselyte, but a literal descendant of the father of the faithful, through Jacob and Benjamin. He was a Pharisee, the most strict sect of the Jews. He had proved his zeal in behalf of these his privileges and principles, both by persecuting the Christian church, and by exact fulfilment of all the ordinances of the Law. So that if any man could have been justified by the works of the Law, he might have been sure of safety. And fully persuaded he was in his own mind at the time, that in these things he had great gain. And so are also they who now trust in their good works, in themselves, that they are righteous. So are also they who trust in their possessions on the earth. So are also they who trust in their fair character with men. These all count for gain what they ought to count for loss, in comparison with the advantage of gaining Christ. They suppose themselves to be rich and increased with goods, and in need of nothing, and know not that they are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. See Rev. 3. 17.

"But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." This is the way we ought to think of our natural advantages. This is the light in which we ought to view our worldly possessions. How much more ought we thus to count for loss our former mistaken notions of the truth! If we have been used to think that by our own exertions we could save ourselves, let us now reckon our best service to be unprofitable. If we have been used to trust partly in our Saviour, and partly in ourselves, let us now learn that He only is our strength, and we have been losing, not gaining, by all reliance which we have placed upon ourselves. To "win Christ," this is that which by its preciousness makes all other things to be counted mere dross and refuse. To "win Christ," this is that which we must hold for the chief object of our desire. To "win Christ, and be found in him," not having our own righteousness, "which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith," that righteousness which God, for Christ's sake, imputes to or counts to be in believers. This is real righteousness. For that which God counts, is. Oh that we may believe what He requires us, and we should then be what He offers to esteem us! We should then know our Lord as He really is. We should then cheerfully partake of his sufferings, with a view to partake of his resurrection. We should then be glad to be made conformable to his death, if by any means we might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

God grant that we may be ready to count all things but loss for Christ's sake! God grant that whatever we lose on earth, we may gain in heaven eternal life, and rejoice in the Lord alway!

Exhortations to be like minded and heavenly minded.

12 Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before,

14 I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

15 Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you.

16 Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing.

17 Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an example.

18 (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ:

19 Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly; and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.)

20 For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

21 Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

§ 572. The excellency of our Christian inheritance.

St. Paul having been led to mention how he counted all things loss for the sake of Christ, and how earnestly he desired to attain unto the resurrection of the dead, now guards against being understood to express himself with any thing like presumptuous confidence: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." He would not be thought to say that he was all that Christ would have him, no, nor that he had infallibly secured all that Christ had to give him. By no means; he was still following after, with a view to obtain that for which also he had been himself pressed into the service of his Master. He was reaching forth to what he had yet to do, setting no store by that which he had done already. He was pressing on as in a race for the prize; his prize the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. And the nearer we are to perfect, the more he would have us to "be thus minded," to esteem ourselves still deficient. And if we have not yet thus learned to abase ourselves, there is still at least one great lesson to be revealed to us by God. So that it would be one sign of our being perfect, if we were to feel that we are not so already. And, on the other hand, to reckon that we have already attained, is a sure sign that we have not.

"Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." Whatsoever be our proficiency, whether large or small, this is the way towards our advancing further, agreement, unanimity. We must be of one mind, and that the right mind. We must be followers together of St. Paul, even as he was of Christ. We must beware of following the many who walk otherwise. See how St. Paul tells us of them, even weeping, that they are "the enemies of the cross of Christ." What an awful condition, to be at enmity with the cross, to be at enmity with Him who hung thereon! to put no trust in Christ crucified! to hate the glorious truth, that He died for us men, and for our salvation! And why is this doctrine hateful to the natural heart of man? Not only because it is humbling, but also because it is most purifying, it is most forcible to constrain to holiness of life, and to a heavenly mind. The enemies of the cross of Christ are the same as they "whose God is their belly," and "who mind earthly things." Their "glory is in their shame." So often do they boast of that which is their very chief disgrace! Their "end is destruction." So surely does their course of life end in misery, both in this world and in that which is to come! These then are they whose example we must avoid. Far be it from us to be of one mind with these!

No; let us look to those whose "conversation is in heaven;" let us mark them, in order to mind the same thing with them. Citizens they are of a heavenly country, looking for the appearance of their King from thence. He is gone before to prepare a place for them. He is coming to fetch them, to dwell there with Himself. They know that He is coming. They live as if He were coming. They "look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ." They watch for his arriving. They expect that when He comes He will "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Vile as sin has made us, thoroughly as it has debased us, deeply as it has degraded both body and soul, yet Christ can "subdue all things unto himself." He will raise the body from corruption, He will make it like unto his own, He will give both to body and to soul a glorious immortality. What would we wish for more than to be made like to Him who is the express image of the Father? What language can more forcibly convey to us the notion of most exalted happiness, than that we shall be joint heirs with Christ in that glory which is his for ever? Shall we any longer deign to make our bodies vile, when we expect that He will make them glorious? Can we any longer bear to abuse them, by sloth or sensual excess, when it is the purpose of our Lord and Saviour that they should be holy and heavenly as his own? Oh let us rejoice to think to what great privileges we are admitted, to what great joy we are called, of what all sufficient grace we are partakers, of what all surpassing glory we are heirs!

St. Paul exhorteth to steadfastness in all good things.

1 Therefore, my brethren dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.

2 I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord.

3 And I intreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which laboured with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow labourers, whose names are in the book of life.

4 Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice.

5 Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand.

6 Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God.

7 And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

8 Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report: if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things:

9 Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you.

|| Or, venerable.

§ 573. Of the peace of God keeping our hearts and minds.

See how the apostle strives to win us by affection! "Brethren, dearly beloved and longed for," he calls us; his "joy and crown," his "dearly beloved." Let us try whether we cannot, by means like these, win our brethren, especially to this, that they stand fast in the Lord. See how he beseeches Euodias, and beseeches Syntyche, when no doubt he had authority to command them! Let us use the same means towards the same good end. Let us prefer beseeching to commanding; let us use intreaty in preference to exercising authority; especially for the purpose of inducing our brethren to "be of the same mind in the Lord." See how he intreats one whom he calls his true yokefellow, probably a joint labourer in the Lord's vineyard at Philippi. Let us in like manner deal with those who are our yokefellow, our partners in the joys and sorrows of life, our husband or wife, brethren or sisters, or fellow servants; let us intreat rather than demand; and let us especially intreat them that they help others rather than ourselves, and of all others especially those "whose names are written in the book of life." Happiest of mankind! Least of all do they need our help. Most of all ought we to be glad to help them. Happiest of mankind; to be enrolled as citizens of that heavenly country, where none know what it is to want; to have a share and interest in that heavenly treasure, which neither rust nor moth corrupt, and which thieves do not break through nor steal. See Matt. 6. 19, 20.

It is to such as these, to such Christians as shall hereafter profit by the death of Christ, it is to these that St. Paul repeats the stirring exhortation, "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, rejoice." See ch. 3. 1. "Let your moderation," he adds, "be known unto all men." For he would not have us triumph to excess. He would not have us proud and presumptuous, but humble, and meek, and soberminded. "The Lord is at hand." We ought daily to expect that He will come to judge the world. We may be sure that if He come not soon to us, it cannot be long ere we go to Him, ere we are taken away by death from this present world, to stand before the judgment seat of Christ. This is a reason to be modest in our estimate of ourselves, merciful in our judgments of our neighbours. This is a reason to "be careful for nothing;" to let no troubles we here meet with distract us, to let no wrath or art of our evil enemy terrify us. But "in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving," let us make known our requests unto God. He is at hand to hear. His Holy Spirit is at hand to help. Can we believe this, and not ask for his assistance? Can we ask, and not receive? Can we receive, and not give thanks, with thankfulness of heart? Oh how passing all understanding is that peace of God, which thus keeps the hearts and minds of those who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity! to refer unto God all their wants, to thank God for all that they receive, to feel in all their trouble that the Lord is at hand, and in their joy to "rejoice in the Lord always!"

But with whom shall this peace of God abide? With those who not only learn, and receive, and hear, and see, whatsoever things God has revealed, but who also "think on these things," who also "do" them. What then are our actions? Yea, what are our thoughts? Which way do our minds run most freely, most willingly? Which way do our thoughts actually run at all? Which way do our lives incline? to what is false, or to what is true? to what is dishonest, or to what is honest? to what is unjust or just, unclean or pure, hateful or lovely, of evil report or of good, to what is blameable and vicious, or to virtue and to praise? Let us look into these particulars. Let us search and see which way we ourselves are bent. Let us strive against the wrong bias of our nature, and pray to be guided into the right way of grace. Let us endeavour to do always what God would have us do, and to think what God would have us think. Then will the God of peace be with us. Then will the peace of God keep our hearts and minds. It passeth all understanding. We cannot comprehend how it is. It is more than the reasonable and natural result of our endeavours to be moderate and joyful. It is the peace of God. It is the work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. It is "through Christ Jesus."

St. Paul's contentment, thankfulness, salutations.

10 But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me || hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity.

11 Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.

12 I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need.

13 I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.

14 Notwithstanding ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction.

15 Now, ye Philippians, know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only.

|| Or, is revived.

16 For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity.

17 Not because I desire a gift: but I desire fruit that may abound to your account.

18 But † I have all, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.

19 But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

20 Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

21 Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The brethren which are with me greet you.

22 All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cæsar's household.

23 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

† Or, I have received all.

§ 574. That we must give largely, and for God's glory.

Among the many striking lessons contained in this Epistle, there is no one more worthy of our attention than this of contentment. And this duty is here set forth in the most affecting manner by St. Paul's example. For it appears, that during the time of his being detained as a prisoner at Rome, he had by some means been left in want of what was needful for his support. But now the Philippians had succoured him again. And for this he sends them thankful praise; expressing his conviction that they had wished to do so all along, but were hindered for lack of opportunity, and shewing them that he was mindful of their having done so oftentimes, since he had departed from Macedonia. Lest, however, they should think that in the interval he had been put to any serious distress, he adds, "not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." Whether he had much or little, he was sure to have enough, if he was content with what he had. This is true contentment; not the being at ease in the midst of plenty, but the being cheerful in the midst of want; not the being contented when all things prosper, but the being thankful also when all things fail. "I know both how to be abased, and how to abound." And the last is perhaps the hardest of the two; so often do they who have much, still crave for more; so often are they most discontented, who seem to have most ground for contentment.

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." This was the secret of St. Paul's contentment. This it was which made him satisfied whether in want or in abundance. This, and this alone, can make the rich man happy in his riches, and the poor man no less happy in his poverty. Yes, ye Philippians, the apostle seems to say, I was rich, when for lack of opportunity, ye left me poor. When I was having nothing, I yet possessed all things. See 2 Cor. 6. 10. I felt indeed no less of hunger. But "through Christ which strengtheneth me" I was contented to be hungry. I suffered no less by thirst. But "through Christ which strengtheneth me" I was content to be athirst. I endured no less pain of body for lack of these refreshments, which your kindness so oftentimes supplied. But be not ye afflicted. "Through Christ which strengtheneth me," I was enabled to count my sufferings for joy. Thus was St. Paul content in whatever state he was. Thus would he teach us to be contented.

But let no one here suppose that because the Christian rejoices in tribulation, therefore it is not the duty of his brother Christian to console, assist, relieve him. "Notwithstanding ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction." These are the words of the same apostle who was content to be afflicted. It is not that the believer does not feel, but that what he feels he bears with patience. It is not that he is not heir to all the ills of his fellow men, but that he has grace not to murmur when they befall him. There would be no grace in resignation, if there were no pain to be endured. And wherever there is pain, there also is opportunity to relieve it. And we should most of all be glad to extend our help to those who are the most contented to do without it. Let us remember that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20. 35. We are more concerned to see that we rightly give assistance, than the poor are, that they plentifully obtain it. And most earnestly we ought to seek for occasions of doing good unto them who are of the household of faith, of supplying the worldly wants of such as we may best believe to be heirs of heaven. And therefore it was good for the Philippians to supply the wants of St. Paul, that fruit might abound to their account. For now, when through their bounty he had all that he could want, he assured them that their supply was "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God;" and he doubted not that God would in like manner supply all their need, "according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Let this then be what we look to, chiefly in our gifts, which way can we offer sacrifice most acceptable unto God through Christ? which way have we best ground to hope that we shall obtain from God, through the same Saviour's merits and intercession, the grace we need, the heavenly riches, the crown of glory, which fadeth not away? See 1 Pet. 5: 4.

"Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen." This must be the motive of all our motives, the end of all our ends; God's glory. For this we must be content, when we are in want. For this we must be willing to relieve the needy. For this we must desire to greet and to be greeted, to enjoy and to communicate, as far as in us lies, "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ:" God's glory; the praise of his goodness, greatness, might, majesty, and dominion. Far above out of our reach is all that concerns Him. We can neither take from the brightness of the light in which He dwells, nor add to it. And yet He has been pleased to have it written in his word that we may in some sort minister to his praise. See Isa. 43. 21.

And certainly we can by no means so effectually do this, as by spreading abroad the glad tidings of redemption through Christ, the grace of our Lord Jesus. May it be with all. "Amen." May it extend throughout all the world! May it be heard by savages in distant lands! May it be received into the heart by Christians at home! "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS, 1. 1—17.

St. Paul giveth thanks, and prayeth, for the Colossians.

1 Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother,

2 To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you,

4 Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints,

5 For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel;

6 Which is come unto you, as it ~~is~~ in all the world; and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth:

7 As ye also learned of Epaphras our dear fellow servant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ;

8 Who also declared unto us your love in the Spirit.

9 For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding;

† Gr. the Son of his love.

10 That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing; being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God;

11 Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness;

12 Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light:

13 Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of || his dear Son:

14 In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins:

15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature:

16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him:

17 ¹ And he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

§ 575. Who it is that gave Himself for us.

The Epistle to the Colossians, written about the same time as that to the Ephesians, contains many passages of nearly the same force and meaning. Have we laid to heart all that there we read? Then how glad shall we be, to be assured of it again! Have we already forgotten some of it, transgressed some of it? Have we but faintly fulfilled any of it? Then how thankful must we feel that the doctrine is again revealed, the duty again enforced, the motive again pressed on our attention; the motive, the duty, the doctrine, which we might else never sufficiently lay to heart! God now once more help us to understand these words of St. Paul! God grant that we may be meet to be numbered amongst those whom he addresses, "saints and faithful brethren in Christ!"

And see here what great variety is contrived by the apostle, or rather by the Holy Spirit who instructed him to write, what variety in setting forth the same doctrines and duties, the same promises, and threatenings, and commands! Sometimes in his Epistles he exhorts. Sometimes he relates facts. Sometimes he asks questions. Sometimes he prays. Sometimes he gives thanks. Here he does but tell the Colossians of his praying and giving thanks. And yet still there bursts forth the same faithful satement of Christian truth, the same plain directions for Christian practice. For when he tells them of his thankfulness, what is it that he tells them he gives thanks for? What, but their faith in Christ Jesus? What, but their love to all the saints? What, but the hope which is laid up for them in heaven? These then are things most highly to be prized. These are the things we ought to be glad of in each other. These are the things we ought to value in ourselves. Oh how is it that we so readily express our joy in the worldly prosperity of our brethren, and are so slow to take interest in their spiritual progress? How are we so eager to tell abroad the tidings of any happiness which befalls them here, and remain so indifferent when we are told that "the word of the truth of the gospel" is come unto them? Surely we do not value as we ought that word ourselves, or we should rejoice to know that it is extended to our brethren. We should make it our earnest prayer in their behalf that it may bring forth fruit since the day when first they hear it, and know "the grace of God in truth." God knows it has not been thus fruitful in ourselves. God knows how many times, since first we knew his will in Christ concerning us, we have gone back from what we felt to be our duty. Thanks be to his name that yet He spares us, that yet He tries us. Let us now at length go on without halting in the way. Let us at length bear fruit unto perfection.

Here we may learn what it is to be fruitful. For that which St. Paul prayed for in behalf of the Colossians is what he would have us labour to attain: to be filled with the knowledge of the will of God. For this we must read his word, wait on his ordinances, listen to his ministers, and watch to do all we know already. This is our road to "all wisdom and spiritual understanding;" to "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing." This is the use of knowing God's will, to do it; to be "fruitful in every good work;"

not in some few that seem most easy to us, but in all, to do all things through Christ strengthening us, see Phil. 4. 13, with "patience and long suffering," so as not to be weary of well doing, and to work with joy, and with thankfulness to God for the holiness we now have, for the heaven we hope for. This is the way God makes us fit for heaven, by making us first holy upon earth. He delivers us from the power of darkness, when He translates us into the kingdom of his dear Son. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Thus we have been brought step by step to the foundation of all right faith, and of all holy living, the atonement of the death of Christ. Thus we are taught to refer to Him, and to his blood shed for us, all hope of our sins being forgiven, all hope of being delivered from sinning.

Let us observe, then, who it is that we are to trust in. It is One who is the image of the invisible God, it is One who was begotten before any creature was created. It is One who is God Himself. "He is the image of God, inasmuch as He took on Him our flesh, and therein made manifest to us what God is, namely, love. He is the first born of every creature, that is to say, begotten before every creature, inasmuch as by Him, and for Him, for his glory all created things were made. Thus "he is before all things, and by him all things consist." He precedes them in time, for He was before them in eternity. They consist in Him. For without Him they perish. Who then shall deprive us of our hope? What enemy shall pluck us out of our Redeemer's hand? He is all great, all good, all glorious. He gave Himself for us. He will give us all things needful for our salvation. He will save us. He has saved us. We have redemption in Him, through his blood. Let us act as if it were ours. Let us feel that it is ours. It is God who gives it us. It is the Father who gave his Son. It is the Son who gave Himself. Therefore to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be all glory henceforth for ever.

St. Paul setteth forth his ministry.

18 And he is the head of the body, the church : who is the beginning, the first born from the dead; that || in all things he might have the preeminence.

19 For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell;

20 And, † having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven.

21 And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies ‡ in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled

22 In the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreprouable in his sight:

23 If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister;

24 Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for your body's sake, which is the church:

25 Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, ¶ to fulfil the word of God;

26 Even, the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints:

27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ  in you, the hope of glory:

28 Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus:

29 Whereunto I also labour, striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily.

† Or, by your mind in wicked works.

 Or, among you.

§ 576. What is behind of the afflictions of Christ.

What an object was this for St. Paul to labour for, to "present every man perfect in Christ Jesus!" What an end for each Christian minister to aim at! How diligently ought all people to help in the good work, striving together with them, striving according to the working of Him who alone can give success unto their labours! One way only there is for us to follow, and this is the way in which St. Paul has gone before; and this is to preach Christ, to promote the preaching of Christ, the warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, the making known the riches of the glory of this mystery among all mankind. What pains are we now taking for this end? What help are we now giving? In what sense, to what degree, are we labouring, or assisting them that labour? Let us not rest till we find some way to help. Let us not be contented to know the truth ourselves, without striving to impart it as widely as we can unto our perishing fellow creatures. How few of all now living in the world can we expect to see presented in the end "perfect in Christ Jesus." How little do we know of what awaits the rest! How much have we to fear in their behalf! How much have we ourselves to answer for if we take little pains for their instruction!

Let us note then how St. Paul preached Christ. Our Redeemer, he tells us, "is the head of the body, the church." Thus it has seemed good unto the Father "that in him should all fulness dwell." The outward world is of his creation. The world within, the soul, is his also. He is as the head, and we the body. He rules. And we obey. And in the fulness of his power it pleased Him to humble Himself for our sakes, that "through the blood of his cross" He might make peace for us, and "reconcile all things unto himself." Such is the humiliation He submitted to in the world, for us men and for our salvation. And shall all this be done for nought? Shall all this be done, and we not be reconciled? Are we still alienated and enemies in our minds by wicked works? Has the body of his flesh suffered death in vain? Shall He not have in the end to present us "holy and unblameable, and unreprouable in his sight?" All depends upon our continuing "in the faith, grounded and settled;" upon our being not moved away from the hope of the Gospel, which we have heard. Let us examine ourselves then, Are we in the faith? Have we been ever in it? Do we continue in it? What hope have we at this moment? Is it a hope full of immortality? Is it such a hope as would make us rejoice with St. Paul in any sufferings we may be called upon to endure?

He rejoiced in his sufferings, and considered that thereby he was filling up that which was behind of the afflictions of Christ, that he was filling it up in his flesh, to the profit of the church. Is this the view we take of our sufferings? Is this the spirit in which we have hitherto received them? Is this the temper in which we are prepared to receive them for the future? It pleased God to make perfect the Captain of our salvation through sufferings. And as He is engaged in bringing many sons unto glory, it pleases Him that they also should suffer. This then is what is behind of the afflictions of Christ. This is what must be endured in addition to his sufferings. We also must suffer. And we also must glory in tribulations. We must really feel that it is good for us to be afflicted. And for this it will be helpful for us to think that we are filling up in our flesh that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ. Happy are they who thus suffer with Him; who shall be also glorified together! Happy they who so receive the chastisements which God inflicts, as that they may be counted to be filling up what is ordered by his will, in addition to the sufferings of Christ!

Blessed Lord, who sufferedst for us, the just for the unjust, grant that in our sufferings we may fulfil thy work, grant that we may suffer according to thy will!

St. Paul had great conflict for his converts.

1 For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh;

2 That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgement of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ;

3 † In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

4 And this I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words.

5 For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the stedfastness of your faith in Christ.

6 As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him:

|| Or, fear, or, care.

† Or, wherein.

7 Rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith; as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving.

8 Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ.

9 For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

10 And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power:

11 In whom ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ:

12 Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.

† Or, elements.

§ 577. That baptism is Christian circumcision.

Hear ye that live at ease, ye who are careless about your own salvation, and much more about the salvation of your brethren; hear what great conflict St. Paul had, not only for his converts whom he knew, but for as many as had not seen his face in the flesh, and amongst them even for us also! Hear what it is that he longs for, and strives for, in our behalf; that our "hearts may be comforted," even by the Comforter Himself, that we may be "knit together in love," not separate as Christians now are into sects, but closely joined in one body; and that we may be rich in "the full assurance of understanding," so as both to know the whole amount of our privileges in the Gospel, and to believe that they are ours for ever; "to the acknowledgement of the mystery of God," that we may be free to confess God before men, to declare to others what we feel ourselves, that God is to us a Father, that Christ who died for us is his ever blessed Son, and that in Him, even in our Saviour Christ, "are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge!" What then need we to know more, than the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord? What need we to possess more, than the riches of his redeeming love?

St. Paul dwelt on these matters the more earnestly, for fear any one should beguile the Colossians with enticing words. For there were even then, as now, amongst believers many errors passing current for the truth. And they who held false doctrines were, as now, active and artful in enticing converts to join their ranks. Order, and stedfastness of faith in Christ, these were the two things which the apostle rejoiced to see in the Colossians, for their security against being led astray. Let us then be careful to observe order, and due subordination. Let us obey them who are in authority over us. Let us, like a well disciplined army, be subject one to another, and all together unto Him which is the head. And let us be stedfast in the faith. Let us be stedfast in our faith in Christ. Let us walk in Jesus Christ our Lord, even as we have received Him, as we have received the faith of Christ from our fathers, as the Colossians received it from St. Paul. This is our best way of safety; for this is our only way of stedfastness; to walk according to our faith, to live according to our profession. They who walk by faith, they who live in hope and joy, they who found the happiness of their whole lives on their Saviour's love, they who abound therein with thanksgiving, these will be the last to be corrupted by the vain deceits of man's invention, these will be the last to swerve from the true faith of Christ. In Him they find themselves complete, thoroughly assured of pardon, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. In Him they are therefore persuaded by their own experience, in "him dwelleth all the fulness of the godhead bodily." Oh how can He be less than God, whom we find able to save us from our sins, of whom we believe that He reconciled us to the Father, and whom we daily experience to be able to move our inmost hearts!

And here, for our further confirmation, let us consider when it was that we first received Christ, even when we were baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This then is the faith in which we must continue stedfast. For baptism is to us the "circumcision made without hands," it is "the circumcision of Christ," or Christian circumcision; it is to Christians what circumcision was to Jews, a pledge and token of the faith revealed to us by God, a pledge and token of our willingness to walk therein continually. Buried we were with Christ in baptism, buried to all other doctrines, buried to all other pursuits, buried to all other desires, except those to which we then were pledged. And as we were then buried with Him, so must we also count ourselves to have risen with Him, risen to a life like his, "through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Oh what avails all other faith, if we believe not in this our resurrection, if we hold not that like as Christ was raised from the dead, so ought we also to walk in newness of life? See Rom. 6. 4.

Ordinances that were against us blotted out.

13 And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses;

14 Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross;

15 And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it.

16 Let no man therefore judge you of meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days:

17 Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.

18 Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels, intruding, into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, 19 And not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.

20 Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances,

21 (Touch not; taste not; handle not;

22 Which all are to perish with the using;) after the commandments and doctrines of men?

23 Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will worship, and humility, and †† neglecting of the body; but in any honour to the satisfying of the flesh.

§ 578. How carefully we must hold the Head, even Christ.

At our birth we were no better than dead in sins. At our baptism God quickened us, implanted in us the principle of a new life. He quickened us together with Christ. As He raised Christ from the dead, so He raised us up from our spiritual death, to spiritual life. This is our present condition. These privileges are now actually ours. But we must believe that they are so. We must reckon ourselves to be thus dead to sin. We must be thoroughly persuaded in our hearts that God has for Christ's sake forgiven us all trespasses; that He has blotted out "the handwriting of ordinances that was against us," that this is now taken out of the way, being made null and void by the cross of Christ. We must share in faith the spoils of our Redeemer's victory. We must join in his triumph over the principalities and powers of darkness. We must act, and speak, and think, at once with most deep humility in respect to our own powers, and with most entire confidence in respect to our success through the strength of our blessed Lord.

How different from this state of triumph is the ordinary frame of mind and behaviour, even of such as pass for devout believers in the Lord! How often are they dispirited by apprehended dangers! How often rejected by the defeat of their plans, or by the failure of their purposes! How often are they harassed by contentions about trifles; how often turned out of their heavenward course by anxiety about the vanities of earth! How often are they unhappy in their lives; how often at the same time afraid to die! Nor is it uncommon to find them troubled by the judgments of others about such things as meat or drink, holidays, or Sabbaths; or beguiled by the fair show of affected humility, in such practices as the worshipping of angels, as if men were not competent to apply to God in prayer, except through their means and intercession. Most vain pretence! Most gross misapprehension of our Christian privilege! Most mischievous invention of the carnal mind, which refuses the commandments of God, but delights to fulfil commandments of its own; which disobeyed the law of Moses as long as it was binding, and when it was annulled then desired to retain it; which would make a shew of wisdom in will worship, instead of being really wise, and really self denying; not having the body in any honour, but for the satisfaction of itself, of the flesh or carnal mind!

Be it our care to hold "the Head," to cleave to Christ as our Head; and to derive, as members of his body, our nourishment from our union with Him. Let us study to conform our will to his, to worship in the way that He would have us, and with real humility to trust that through his mediation we may approach unto the Father as adopted children, reconciled through the death of our Redeemer. Let us have no confidence in our own strength, no pleasure in our own wisdom, for the wisdom of men is foolishness with God, see 1 Cor. 1, 20, and when we are weak, then we are strong, when we are most thoroughly sensible of our own weakness, then we have most ground to hope for the strength of God. The Holy Spirit will then most surely dwell within our hearts. For we shall then most earnestly pray for this heavenly help. And with the help of the Holy Spirit we may most confidently hope that we shall increase "with the increase of God," grow in every thing that is good, even as God would have us. This is our Christian triumph; to overcome sin, the world, and the devil; to know that our own wisdom is folly, to feel that our own strength is weakness, to overcome our own passion, pride, and prejudices, in one word, to overcome ourselves. And this triumph is not ours, but the triumph of God. It is the Father who first quickens us, having forgiven us all trespasses. It is the Son who, by his cross, blots out our sins. It is the Holy Ghost who makes us holy. God gives us the victory. God give us the grace to give Him all the praise!

How to be risen with Christ.

1 If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.

2 Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.

3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.

4 When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

5 Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry:

6 For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience:

7 In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them.

|| Or, mind.

8 But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth.

9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds;

10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him.

11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all.

12 Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering;

13 Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.

† Or, complaint.

§ 579. That we cannot at once wear two characters.

Oh where are true Christians to be found if this be their correct description? Where are they who are risen with Christ, if they are to be known by seeking "those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God?" They seek them, they set their affections on them, "not on things on the earth." Where are they whose heart's desire is not on earthly things? They are dead, or rather the life they have is hid with Christ in God. They are dead as far as the love of this world is concerned. They are dead to the things that are in the world. They are alive to God. They are alive to heaven. They are alive to heavenly things. They care not to make a fine appearance here in the esteem of men. They are bent upon appearing in glory with Christ, when He shall come at the end of the world to judge the quick and the dead. And therefore they do these two things, they put off sin, they put on holiness. They put off the "garment spotted by the flesh." Jude 23. They put on the white linen of the Gospel, which is the righteousness of saints. See Rev. 19. 8.

See then how many things must be now put off by those who would hereafter appear with Christ in glory! Those sins of which it is a shame to speak, and that covetousness in which men are not ashamed to glory, the wrath which embitters us against each other, the blasphemy which is the height of daring against God, the corrupt conversation which propagates evil thoughts, and falsehood which violates the chief end and use of speech, which is communication of the truth. These are things for which the "wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience." These are things in some of which it is to be feared that very many even of Christians have been used to walk. But how then can they have been risen with Christ? How grievously in them must the grace of God have been neglected! How grossly inconsistent is every one of these practices, in even the least degree, with that heavenly frame of mind, and heavenly kind of life, to which every Christian is pledged in baptism, in which it should be the chief object of education to train up every Christian child, and in which every Christian, when grown up, should labour daily to increase. Can these be they who have put off the old man with his deeds, these whose lips are so free to swear, so ready to deceive, these whose temper is so hasty, whose affections are so earnestly set on earthly riches, or on the pleasures of fleshly lusts? Is this the life that is hidden with Christ in God?

But say we have put off such gross sins, as are here mentioned, say we are not guilty of these manifest ill practices, we must further be careful to maintain good works, we must "put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Nor shall we indeed ever thoroughly do the one without the other. The house that is swept and garnished will not be long empty. Either it must be filled with the Spirit, or Satan will soon again take possession. See Matt. 12. 44, 45. We cannot serve two masters. See Matt. 6. 24. Christ must be all, and in all, or He has no part in us, and we have no part or lot in Him. Let us then put on, as becomes the elect of God, let us put on the graces of the Gospel. Let us, in place of the rejected garments of iniquity, be clothed with the robes of righteousness. And especially, instead of pride, anger, and malice, let us be merciful, kind, humble, meek, long suffering, willing to bear with one another, apt to forgive, always bearing in mind this short and affecting rule, "Even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." Christ forgave us. "God for Christ's sake hath forgiven" us. Eph. 4. 32. And yet God will not forgive us our trespasses unless we forgive our brethren theirs. See Matt. 16. 15. Far be from us then all lurking bitterness against those who have affronted us! Far be from us all secret grudge against those who have done us wrong! Let us hope that they did not intend it. Let us forgive them even if they did. Let us be willing to believe that they did not. Let us pray as did our Lord for his enemies; "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Luke 23. 34.

Charity. Family relationship.

14 And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

15 And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful.

16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

17 And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

18 Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord.

19 Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.

20 Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord.

21 Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.

22 Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye service, as men pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God:

23 And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men;

24 Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ.

25 But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons.

§ 580. The connection of our relative duties.

Charity is to be put on above all the other graces of the Christian character, being as a girdle to bind the rest together. For charity is love. And it is therefore the bond of perfectness, because God Himself is love. See 1 John 4. 8. And with love there will come the peace of God, ruling in our hearts, peace amongst one another, as members of one body, peace within ourselves, as between ourselves and God. And with peace there will be also thankfulness. And with thankfulness a high esteem for the word of Christ, as a treasure of inestimable value; together with an earnest desire to make it profitable to our brethren. So that we shall be anxious to teach and admonish one another, to stir up one another, and ourselves also, by psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. Thus whether we speak, or whether we sing, whether we act, or think, or feel, we shall "do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." Oh, happy state of mind, for a child of fallen Adam to attain! Oh, heaven upon earth, to have thankfulness instead of murmuring, peace instead of strife, love animating our hearts, and grace guiding the utterance of our lips! "Happy are the people that are in such a case; yea, blessed are the people who have the Lord for their God." Ps. 144. 15.

But the apostle is not content with general directions. He guards against the prevalent inclination of mankind, to say, Lord, Lord, whilst they do not their Father's will. And besides telling us to do all things in the name of Christ, he mentions several duties in particular, and gives exact instructions in every instance. Wives are here taught how to behave towards their husbands, namely to submit themselves, "as it is fit in the Lord," as is agreeable to the will of their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Husbands by the same rule here learn to love their wives; and to be not bitter against them. For it is to bitterness that they are tempted, if their authority is set at naught, to a sullen temper, to cold and unkind treatment. But this is not the right way for them to rule. This is not the Christian way to establish their due authority. "Even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." Ver. 13. Bear with the infirmities of the weak. Overcome in your wives evil with good. Rule, but let it be with affection. Allow not wrong; and yet revenge it not. Children have their rule of conduct expressed in one word, obedience. They are to obey their parents "in all things, for this is well pleasing unto the Lord." Whilst parents, on the other hand, must lay no harsh commands upon their children, must not try their tempers, or wantonly thwart their inclinations. Servants too must in like manner obey their masters. And masters, are immediately afterwards directed to give to their servants that which is just and equal, to give them all their due, to treat them as far as possible as equals; considering themselves as fellow servants of a Master which is in heaven. Ch. 4. 1.

And in all this let us observe how suitably each duty is connected with its fellow, how each party has his own proper work made easy by the behaviour which is enjoined upon the other. How delightful to the wife is submission, when the husband is not bitter but affectionate! How pleasant for the husband to love, when the wife knows her own place and submits! In children, and in servants, how willing is obedience to a kind master, to a compassionate father! In a father or a master how much more ready is compassion towards obedient children, and kindness to attentive servants! Such is the harmony of Christian precepts. Such is the universal peace and joy which would flow from their general adoption. But where one party is froward, the other must still act "as it is fit in the Lord." And in any case it must be our heart's desire to please the Lord and not men, to consider ourselves as serving Christ, and to remember that we shall have to give account to Him. For then, whether those with whom we live agree to do his will or not, we "shall receive the reward of the inheritance." Whilst "he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done," we shall be replenished with peace even here, and be removed in due time from the contradiction of sinners upon earth, to the full communion of saints in heaven.

Concluding salutations.

1 Masters give unto your servants that which is just and equal, knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven.

2 Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving;

3 Withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds:

4 That I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak.

5 Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time.

6 Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man.

7 All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister, and fellow servant in the Lord:

8 Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts;

9 With Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here.

10 Aristarchus my fellow prisoner saluteth you, and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas (touching whom ye received commandments: if he come unto you, receive him;)

11 And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the eireumeision. These only are my fellow workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me.

12 Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always || labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and † complete in all the will of God.

13 For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis.

14 Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you.

15 Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house.

16 And when this epistle is *†*read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.

17 And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it.

18 The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Remember my bonds. Grace be with you. Amen.

|| Or, striving.

† Or, filled.

§ 581. Christian fellowship.

“Continue in prayer.” This is a rule often repeated by St. Paul. It is a lesson of which we need to be oftentimes reminded. For are we not by nature most averse to pray? Do we not find ourselves continually tempted to neglect our prayers? Let us on the contrary take pleasure in praying. Let us “watch in the same with thanksgiving.” Let us be thankful that we are allowed thus to draw near to God. Let us be thankful that He so graciously draws near to us. Let ministers pray earnestly for the people committed to their charge. Let the people pray for ministers, that God would open unto them a door of utterance, that they may have opportunity to speak the mystery of Christ, and that they may be eager to seize the opportunity; that they may not shrink from bonds or persecution; and that they may make manifest the mystery as they ought to speak. A praying ministry, and a praying people; what a delightful condition for a Christian community! How different from what Satan tries to make us, the ministers and the people at variance with each other! What can be more grievous than such dissensions? What more hurtful to the prevalence of the Gospel? What more opposite to that wisdom in which we ought to walk towards them that are without? Oh let us in this respect, as well as in all others, redeem the time! Let us daily draw into more close communion with each other, ministers with the people, and the people with ministers. Let our communion be the interchange of prayers for each other, offices of mutual kindness, edifying conversation, and joint diligence in doing good unto all men. Thus having our speech always seasoned with grace, full of kindness towards each other and to all men, we shall be better able to convince the gainsayers, we shall have better reason to hope that we may convert the world.

Nothing is a greater hindrance to the success of those exertions, which Christians are now making for the diffusion of the truth, nothing is a greater hindrance than the coldness and distrust which prevails amongst the most eminent professors, the lack of free and kindly intercourse, of mutual prayers for each other and with each other. See how different was the state of things when St. Paul wrote to the Colossians. “See how kindly he speaks of Tychicus, “a beloved brother, and a faithful minister and fellow servant in the Lord.” See how he desires to let them know all his state, not doubting that they were deeply interested, and how he wishes also through Tychicus to know theirs! How different is the comfort of the heart here so unaffectedly expressed, from the language of compliment and worldly civility, with which even ministers of the Gospel now suppose themselves constrained to address one another! Oh that all who hope so soon to dwell together in one heaven, would now aim at more cordial communion! Oh that all who expect there to be received graciously by God, and admitted into one glorious inheritance, were now more free to receive each other !

Amongst these kindly salutations, we see an especial direction respecting "Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas." And this was written, let us remember, after the contention about Mark, between Paul and Barnabas, when "they departed asunder one from the other : and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus." Acts 15. 39. How delightful is this proof of renewed cordiality ! How profitable is this lesson unto us, that no private differences must be allowed to keep asunder the servants of the same Saviour Christ ! Again, it is mentioned both of Marcus and of Justus, that they were "of the circumcision." And we know how violent was the opposition which they of the circumcision had almost uniformly manifested towards St. Paul. We know that it was owing to their decrees that St. Paul was at Rome in bonds at the very time when this Epistle was written. Yet behold these two, though the only two Jewish converts who were his "fellow workers unto the kingdom of God," these two were of signal comfort to the apostle. So sweet ought it to be to us to meet with help and community of spirit amongst the members of an opposing party ! So ready ought we to be to acknowledge it ; so willing to return it ! Again, of Epaphras it is testified that he always laboured fervently in prayer for the Colossians. So urgently ought we to pray for each other, and for ourselves, that our prayers should deserve the name of labour, that we should be weary, not through disinclination to attend, but by reason of the earnestness of our attention !

"And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans ; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea." Here is another counsel of Christian kindness, another instance of Christian communion. Even letters are not private, between them who have all things in common, between those who, whether they speak or write, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus. What we write for good we shall be glad to have read by all whom it may concern. What we receive in writing that may profit others, we should be unwilling to confine exclusively to ourselves. The admonition to Archippus, and the salutation of Paul, and the exhortation to remember his bonds, though private, and particular, when first written to Colosse, become thus of universal interest to all churches of Christ for ever.

God grant that we may be anxious to communicate with each other, in all that can help forward our eternal welfare ! God grant that we may cordially cooperate with each other in all that best promotes the honour of our Lord !

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS, 1. 1—10.

St. Paul prays and gives thanks for the Thessalonians.

- 1 Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.
- 2 We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers;
- 3 Remembering, without ceasing, your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father;
- 4 Knowing, brethren || beloved, your election of God.
- 5 For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.
- 6 And ye became followers of us and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost:
- 7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.
- 8 For from you sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.
- 9 For they themselves shew of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God;
- 10 And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

|| Or, beloved of God, your election.

Thessalonica was one of the places in which St. Paul planted a Christian church, in which he was the first to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. And after he had been driven from the city by the unbelieving Jews, he sent thither from Corinth this Epistle; in order to confirm his converts in their faith, and to urge them to a life suitable to their Christian calling. The apostle joins with himself Silvanus and Timotheus, elsewhere called the one Silas, the other Timothy. And this is his method in most of his Epistles. He strengthens his own sentence by the voice of others of God's servants. Apostle though he was, and well as he knew that God did indeed authorize what he wrote, he was glad to establish every word by the mouth of two or three witnesses. See 2 Cor. 13. 1. How much more ought those of us, who now bear rule in Christ's church, to take sweet counsel together for good; and especially in the exercise of authority, to be slow to act alone, glad to have the support and sanction of our brethren in the Lord! In his prayers, no less than in his instructions, St. Paul is joined by Silvanus and Timotheus. "Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." Let us then join also in prayer for each other. And let these be the things we chiefly pray for. When we meet, or when we part, when we communicate by letters, by messengers, or by mutual friends, let us wish for each other not merely temporal prosperity, but that grace and peace which this world cannot give, but only "God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ."

Besides praying for the Thessalonians, St. Paul also gives thanks for their Christian proficiency. Very greatly he rejoiced to think of their faith, and hope, and love, to know of their "election of God." This is indeed the chief of blessings, to have been chosen, as all we have been, of God's free mercy, chosen to hear the tidings of salvation, chosen to know the love of Christ in dying for us, chosen to enjoy the ordinances of the Christian church, chosen to be Christians in profession, Christians in privileges, and Christians, unless it be our own fault, in the enjoyment of Christ for ever. This Gospel was preached to the Thessalonians, not "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." It had every confirmation from the miracles which were wrought, from the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost which were imparted. God grant that to us also it may come with force to convince, with the testimony of the Holy Spirit in our hearts to persuade, and with that lively assurance of its excellence, which arises from our own personal experience! God grant that we may taste and see how gracious the Lord is! God grant that we may live up to the account here given of St. Paul's converts, that they became followers of him and of the Lord, "having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost!"

See how greatly the Thessalonians profited by the word! See how largely they helped others to profit! See how great is the gain, to have joy even in affliction, to have in "much affliction" "joy in the Holy Ghost!" See how powerful is the force of a good example, how widely it spreads, how long it endures! The Thessalonians were "ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." And from them "sounded out the word of the Lord," not only in those two countries, "but also in every place" their "faith to Godward" was spread abroad. Converts in every place were continually proving the effect of St. Paul's visit to Thessalonica. He needed not to speak any thing; for they were forward to shew him what they had heard of his success with the Thessalonians, how they "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God." Let us, who live in a world still teeming with idolaters, put in practice this method for their conversion, that we be ourselves thoroughly converted. Let us live a Christian life at home. Let it be heard of us, throughout all the world, that we are Christians in our own country, that amongst ourselves we obey the Gospel from the heart. Let our obedience be seen when we go abroad. Let the lives of Christians in foreign countries be such as shew to unbelievers the force of truth, the power of grace, the joy of holiness. Then should we scarce need "to speak any thing." Then would every Christian, whether seaman or merchant, or whatever were his employment, then would every Christian be a missionary.

Let us then wait for Christ from heaven. Let us live as they who watch for his coming. Let us consider that God raised his Son from the dead, "even Jesus;" and that this is He who delivereth us "from the wrath to come." Let us have a lively apprehension of the certainty that this wrath will come, that there is after death the judgment. See Heb. 9. 27. Let us have a thankful sense of the love of Christ in delivering us from the terrors of that dreadful day. And then how earnestly shall we long for his appearing, when we consider that it is for this end He comes; that as far as we are concerned it is to take us to Himself, delivered from sin, from death, from hell! And if thus we wait with longing and with love, if thus we look for his second coming with desire, how diligently shall we in the meantime obey his word, how heartily turn to God from this world's idols, to serve the living and true God!

Lord, hasten the day of thine appearing! Lord, enable us to help in turning many unto righteousness that they too may rejoice when Thou shalt appear!

How St. Paul had preached the Gospel to the Thessalonians.

1 For yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain :

2 But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention.

3 For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile :

4 But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak ; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.

5 For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness ; God is witness :

6 Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have || been burdensome as the apostles of Christ.

7 But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children :

8 So being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

9 For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail : for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God.

10 Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe :

11 As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12 That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

|| Or, used authority.

§ 583. How we may best propagate the Gospel in the world.

How freely does the apostle here write to the Thessalonians of his own labours and behaviour ! How plainly does he tell them of his own praiseworthy conduct ! And yet how utterly does he keep clear of all approach to vain glorying ! It was for their good that he thus wrote, and not for his own pleasure. It was painful to himself thus to speak his own praise ; but it was profitable for them. And therefore, in spite of all the pain, he did it. Oh that we may be thus willing, in all things, to do violence to our own feelings, for the sake of doing good unto our brethren ! Oh that we may be alike able with truth to say, that we would willingly impart to our brethren, “not the Gospel of God only,” but also, for the Gospel’s sake, even our own lives !

It was for this that St. Paul had exposed himself to suffer before. For this he was glad to have been shamefully entreated at Philippi. For this, after all this ill usage, he was bold, in the strength of God, to speak with much contention, with much eagerness and zeal, the truth as it is in Jesus. His zeal was without pretence. It came not of corrupt nature, or of guile. He felt himself “put in trust with the gospel.” He felt it a privilege to be thus entrusted. And in order to discharge his trust faithfully, he spake “not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.” This is an example of the deepest interest to those who have been devoted to the work of the ministry. But it will not be without its profit to any of us, if it help to kindle in us the like concern for the souls of our brethren, and an earnest desire to do all in our power, according to our respective stations in life, towards the edification of the world. Here we may learn never to use “flattering words,” by way of persuading men to their duty, but faithfully to speak the truth. Here we may learn never to make religion “a cloke of covetousness,” never to seek glory of men, never to press our own rights to the uttermost, but to be gentle in our behaviour, as a nurse towards children, affectionately desiring, for all whom we converse with, that we may recommend to them the truth which we profess.

St. Paul, in order to make his ministry more acceptable, laboured night and day for his own support, so as not to be chargeable to his converts. See Acts 20. 34. Might we not hence well learn, to labour with our hands, or to deny ourselves the enjoyment of that which we possess, in order to have the more to give towards the preaching of the Gospel ? St. Paul called men, and also God, to witness, how holily, and justly, and unblameably he had behaved among them that believed. Might we not hence be made aware, that the utmost circumspection on our part is needed, for us to give no offence to believers, as well as the utmost self denial, diligence, and bountifulness, that we may gain unbelievers to the truth. We must live “holily,” as in the presence of God, as under a constant sense of his presence. We must live “justly,” as owing much in many ways to our fellow creatures, and as being anxious to give to every one his due. We must live “unblameably,” as being subject to the observation of mankind, and as being watchful that our good should not be evil spoken of. See Rom. 14. 16. Thus we must make our light to shine before men, in order for them to glorify our Father which is in heaven. See Matt. 5. 16. And to the influence of our lives we must add exhortation with our lips. We must be ready, without forwardness, and yet without false shame, to exhort, and comfort, and charge every one, in some such terms as these : Brother, walk worthy of God ; consider how He “hath called you unto his kingdom and glory !” Think how great are your privileges ! Think how excellent is your inheritance ! Think how utterly unprofitable is your best of service ! Think how utterly unworthy of your calling is any service short of your very best !

St. Paul thanks God on behalf of the Thessalonians.

13 For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judæa are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews:

15 Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men:

|| Or, chased us out.

16 Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

17 But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you; even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us.

19 For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

† Or, glorying.

§ 584. How we ought to wish to help in the conversion of the heathen.

See for what St. Paul here thanked God, without ceasing, in behalf of the Thessalonians, that when they heard the Gospel, they “received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God.” Let us therefore ourselves thus receive it. Let us look upon what we read in this volume with as much reverence as if we could hear God speaking it. Let us feel as well assured of his promises, let us stand as much in awe of his threatenings, as if again they were pronounced in our hearing by Himself, in the midst of thunderings and lightnings, from mount Sinai. And let us be also, as the Thessalonians were, followers of those churches of God, which have been noted for their purity and devotion. It is well to stand in the old ways. It is well to ask for the old paths. See Jer. 6. 16. It is well, because these probably are most nigh unto the pattern which was originally approved by God. For in the case of the Thessalonians, the apostle gave thanks, not merely for their being followers of the churches in Judæa, but because they were “followers of the churches of God which in Judæa are in Christ Jesus.” This is the only reason why the earliest churches, and the primitive Christians, were the best, and only thus far were they the best, as far as they were most “of God,” as far as they were most “in Christ Jesus.”

The primitive Christians suffered much by persecution. And in nothing were they more tried than this, that the Jews would have hindered them if they could from speaking “to the Gentiles that they might be saved.” And this, St. Paul says, was “to fill up their sins alway; for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.” So grievous is the offence of hindering the preaching of Christ’s Gospel! So great is the duty of promoting its influence in the world! So helpful towards being saved is hearing the Gospel! So great ought to be our grief if we hear it not ourselves, if we are hindered from helping to have it heard by others! Let us then study to help in this delightful work. Let us not rest without giving something towards the conversion of the heathen. Let us save, that we may have more to give for this object. Let us work, that we may have more to spare, more to save. Let us save, and spare, and give, out of a persuasion that it is no less than the eternal salvation of our brethren, which may be either hindered by our indifference, or promoted by our zeal.

See how St. Paul once and again desired to go to the Thessalonians! See how he considered it to be of Satan’s hindering that he was not able to fulfil his wishes! Will not this make us almost long ourselves to go out and visit those, whom we might help to edify in the truth! Though it be not in our power, it would be something if our hearts were thus inclined. It would be better, far better of the two, that we should wish, if we indulge in wishing at all, that we should wish to become missionaries, than that we should desire to see sights, in foreign lands. It would be better, far better, to travel for the conversion of the heathen, than for our own entertainment or instruction. Yet see what thousands crowd abroad in search of pleasure, for one who travels on purpose to do good! See what perils are encountered by sea and land, for the sake of adding to the stock of worldly knowledge, or increasing the store of worldly gain; whilst the slightest apprehended inconvenience deters men who are professed soldiers and servants of the Lord from attempting to preach the Gospel to the heathen! Oh that we, who in this country have such excellent advantages in the possession of the truth, may be more diligent and more adventurous in diffusing it abroad! Oh that we may feel the souls of our fellow creatures to be our hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing; yea, look upon the many sinners whom we help to convert from the error of their ways, as “our glory and joy,” “in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming!”

St. Paul testifieth his regard for the Thessalonians.

1 Wherefore when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone;

2 And sent Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellowlabourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith:

3 That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto.

4 For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

6 But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you:

7 Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith:

8 For now we ¹live, if ye stand fast in the Lord.

9 For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, ^{||} direct our way unto you.

12 And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you:

13 To the end he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

§ 585. That we must increase in love daily.

When St. Paul was in trouble he was anxious for his converts, lest the tempter should have tempted them, and his labour have been in their case vain. For they might easily have been led to reflect: can this be really the Gospel of God, seeing that its preachers suffer so much from the hand of man? Would He, who rules in heaven and in earth, allow his own ministers and messengers to fare the worst of all men? But God's ways are not our ways. His wisdom is far above out of our reach. And the end has shewn that the strength of his church consisted in the sufferings of his prophets and apostles, and of those whom they were the means of converting. For by these sufferings it is made manifest, that they who suffered must needs have been in earnest. We are sure that they would not have knowingly laid down their lives for a cunningly devised fable. And the more weak and lowly were the messengers of truth; we see in their success the more ample proof that it was the truth, and that God was with them.

The risk to which his converts were exposed was a great source of anxiety to St. Paul in his tribulation. In like manner he derived no little of his comfort from their stability, and faith, and perseverance. "We are comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith." And again, "we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord." Happy are they whose happiness arises from the faith and steadfastness of them they love! Happy are they who rejoice in the spiritual prosperity of their friends, and live in their spiritual life! Let us try to regulate our views of happiness by this standard. Let us accustom ourselves to speak of joy and sorrow, as if heaven were really infinitely better than earth, and the soul infinitely more precious than all things else. Then should we think it no strange matter to speak to one another of our spiritual privileges, or to express the pleasure we derive in each other's spiritual proficiency. Then should we render thanks to God for all the joy we have, if our joy were such as comes from Him alone, and if we felt it to be indeed his gift. Then should we also, like St. Paul, pray exceedingly, even "night and day," that we may have both the will and opportunity to perfect that which is lacking in the faith of our brethren.

And what we pray for, let us at the same time strive to compass, that all whom we can influence may abound in love one towards another, and that we may abound in love to them, to the end that Christ may stablish both our hearts and theirs "unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all his saints." The end is our being approved when our Lord shall come. Love is our means thereto. Let us see then, let us examine, let us search honestly into our own hearts, is our love on the increase? do we abound more and more? What signs do we find within ourselves, what tokens in our conduct, of the increase of our love? Are we more free to give? Are we more apt to pardon? Are we more lowly in our estimate of ourselves? Are we more diligent in doing good? Are we more thankful unto God for his goodness? Are we more earnestly desirous to shew forth his praise, not only with our lips but in our lives? In these things, and such as these, do we really grow? Are we more advanced this year than a year ago, this day than yesterday? Each day, let us remember, brings us nearer and nearer to our end, the coming of the Lord draws more and more nigh. He comes "with all his saints." What ground have we to hope that we shall belong unto that holy company? He comes to make eternal separation between the wheat and the tares, the holy and the wicked. What reason have we for trusting that we shall be then found "unblameable in holiness before God?"

Exhortations to advancement in purity and love.

1 Furthermore then we || beseech you, brethren, and * exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more.

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

3. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication:

4 That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour;

5 Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God:

6 That no man go beyond and † defraud his brother ‡ in any matter: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

|| Or, request.

* Or, beseech.

§ Or, rejecteth.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness.

8 He therefore that § despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more;

11 And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

12 That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack ¶ of nothing.

† Or, oppress, or, overreach.

¶ Or, of no man.

‡ Or, in the matter.

§ 586. Why we must be quiet and mind our own business.

The apostle here immediately repeats the important lesson of Christian progress. We, who have received how we ought to walk and to please God, must daily endeavour to "abound more and more." For these are among the chief things we are to learn and know, that hitherto we know not as we ought to know, do not as we ought to do, love not as we ought to love, obey not as we ought to obey. We must be always improving in all things; not wavering in our course, but going on towards perfection, not swerving from one and the same direction, but advancing in it faster and faster. We must note from time to time in what we are most tempted still to err, and in this we must labour to amend. We must examine in what duty we are most deficient, and in this we must take pains to make advancement. We must consider also in what grace we have hitherto most prospered, and in this we must take very great pains indeed, that we continue to abound more and more.

This rule of continual improvement is here applied by St. Paul to the duties of chastity. And to these duties he particularly referred, because they were most notoriously neglected amongst the heathens. That which amongst them was the most rare of virtues, is the plain duty of every one of us Christians. Instead of fornication every Christian must know how to keep his body "in sanctification and honour." A hard lesson this to our corrupted nature. But it must be learnt; for "it is the will of God," even our sanctification. And in this thing, each must especially beware that he wrong not nor defraud his brother. For "the Lord is the avenger of all such" as are wronged or defrauded. He will bring to punishment the adulterer, and adulteress. "God hath not called us to uncleanness, but unto holiness." And whosoever makes light of this his call, of these his commandments, despises "not man, but God;" not only wrongs his brother, but offends his Maker, "who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit." And what an aggravation of all our sins is this! We grieve the Holy Ghost. We sin against the inward light of grace. We sin against the godly motions of Him who strives to make us holy. We sin unthankfully; in despite of God's good gift. We sin presumptuously; in defiance of God's ever present power.

But the sins here particularly spoken of are not only against God, but also against man, are inconsistent not only with the love of God but also with the love of man. And therefore the apostle takes care to add this affecting exhortation to brotherly love: "as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." This is the way in which he would work upon our affections. This is the way in which he would turn them towards God. This is the way in which he would induce us, in this as in all other things, to "increase more and more." He needs not to write, and yet he writes. He writes, but it is to say he needs not. He commends without flattery where honestly he can, that he may move us to desire the greater praise. And in the very terms of his commendation he reminds us, that it is of God that we are taught, that we owe our knowledge and our practice both to Him; and that from Him we must seek for help in our further advancement. And to this he adds directions that we study to be quiet, and to do our own business, and to work with our own hands. And by this means he instructs us that two objects will be promoted, the one, that we "walk honestly toward them that are without," the other, that we "have lack of nothing." Let this then be our way to plenty and to peace, not inordinate and meddling activity, but diligence in our proper work, and contentment in our proper station. And let this be the line of conduct which we endeavour to maintain, more especially with a view to our influence on the world. For there is nothing which the worldly minded more quickly discern to be inconsistent with our Christian profession, than over anxious thought for the morrow, or overweening confidence in ourselves. Nor is there any thing more likely to conciliate their regard towards the truth, in the conduct of those who hold it, than if they see us at once diligent and contented, at once anxious to work for God, and yet resigned when we are hindered by the dispensations of his will.

St. Paul would not have us ignorant concerning the deceased.

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

15 For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

16 For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first:

17 Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

18 Wherefore || comfort one another with these words.

§ 587. The resurrection of the dead at the coming of Christ.

The death of those whom we love on earth, whom we love with undissembled affection, is to the natural man the most severe and hopeless of afflictions. The Christian too on such occasions is sorrowful. But in no case is it more true than in this, that he is "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." 2 Cor. 6. 10. He sorrows not "as others which have no hope." He has hope. He has ground for hoping. He hopes. His hope is founded on his faith. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again," we doubt not that in like manner God will bring to a new and glorious life "them also which sleep in Jesus," all who having lived unto the Lord, die in the Lord. This is one chief article of our belief, the resurrection of the saints unto everlasting happiness. And therefore we are enabled to give thanks to God, in behalf of our departed brethren, that it has pleased God to take them out of the miseries of this sinful world. For how much better must it be, to be where they are who sleep in Jesus, than here in the midst of many who scorn his name! How much better to be where they weep no more, neither is there any more death, see Rev. 21. 4, than in a world where sorrow and mortality embitter the most excellent of earthly pleasures! Oh that our affection may be weaned from earth and set on things above! Oh that we may contemplate with joy, both for our friends and for ourselves, the resurrection of the dead unto life eternal!

We are here graciously informed of some particulars of that which will take place when the dead arise. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout." A powerful impression will be made upon our senses by some sound unheard-of before, as of the shout of a conquering army, "with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." And then, as St. Paul has elsewhere described it, "every man in his own order" 1 Cor. 15. 23. will arise. First, they who have died in the faith and love of Christ, will rise again with their bodies. And then all those saints who shall be alive upon the earth at the time of our Lord's appearing, will be caught up together with the others, "in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." And both together will "ever be with the Lord." This is eternal life indeed, to be with Christ, to be with Christ for ever. This is that end of our believing, the salvation of our souls, which makes all we suffer here to be as dust in the balance. What matters it with whom we may be here bound to associate? Soon it will come to pass that we shall "ever be with the Lord." What matters it though they of our own household prove our foes? Soon, we trust, we shall be with Christ, where He is. See John 14. 3.

St. Paul here as elsewhere speaks of himself, and of other Christians then alive, as though they might possibly be alive at the coming of Christ. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man." Matt. 24. 36. And therefore all men at all times ought to be looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God; see 2 Pet. 3. 12; all men at all times ought to speak and think of themselves as having a common interest in an event, which must happen in some generation, and may for aught they know happen in theirs. Nay, so eager ought to be our anxiety for that day, so lively our hope of its coming whilst we live, so high our esteem of its joyfulness, that it seems as if our sorrow in the death of Christian friends might be apt to arise from an apprehension, lest they should miss any of the joy of receiving our Lord. And it is to meet an apprehension such as this, that the apostle here declares, that those of us who at that day shall be living, will not prevent, will have no preference over, them which are asleep. On the contrary, the dead in Christ will rise first, ere ever the living are caught up in the clouds; and these having arisen, both will be caught up together. Oh heavenly comfort, provided against heavenly minded grief! How does it put to shame our carnal sorrowing for friends departed! How much better might we do, to be concerned lest they should lose any of the joy of their Lord's appearing, than to regret that they have been taken away from any of the pleasures they were enjoying upon the earth! How much better, than to wish our time prolonged in this world, how much better should we do, to pray to God that it may please Him shortly to accomplish the number of his elect, and to hasten his kingdom! (Burial Service).

St. Paul exhorteth to watchfulness.

1 But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you.

2 For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night.

3 For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape.

4 But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief.

5 Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

6 Therefore, let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober.

7 For they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night.

8 But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation.

9 For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ,

10 Who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

11 Wherefore || comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do.

12 And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you;

13 And to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. And be at peace among yourselves.

|| Or, exhort.

§ 588. Thankfulness for the help of ministers.

The coming of the Lord is the chief topic of comfort set forth in the preceding chapter, to those who mourn for departed friends. But as to when the Lord shall come, of this there was no need for St. Paul to write. For the Thessalonians were already well aware "that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." So at least it will be to them who look not for his coming. "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape." Oh how fearful then is the case of those, who live at ease, but without God in the world! Oh how near is death unto the most healthful! How close at hand to the most careless is the day of judgment! Never may we forget the need we have to watch! Never may we say unto ourselves or to our brethren, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace." Jer. 8. 11. Never may we neglect our opportunity to escape, or wrest to our destruction our means of escaping!

That day will not thus surprise the children of light. That day will not overtake them as a thief. They who daily look for it will rather think it long in coming, than marvel that it comes so soon. How long, they will be apt to say, how long, O blessed Lord, how long shall we yet suffer upon the earth? how long shalt Thou be so dishonoured? Soon may we be with Thee where Thou art! "Thy kingdom come!" Matt. 6. 10. And come Thou with it! Even so, come quickly! See Rev. 22. 20. Let us cease to be exposed to risk of sinning! Let us begin to sing songs of praise in the land of our inheritance! What unseen glories will there greet our eyes. Oh how we long to see them! What sounds of sweetest melody will there enchant our ears. Oh how we long to hear them! Oh make us to long more! Quicken in us all good desires! Enliven in us all heavenly thoughts! Strengthen in us all holy purposes! Make us more and more meet to be inheritors with the saints in light! Then will that day never come upon us unawares if we look for it each hour of our lives. Nor can it ever be unwelcome when it comes, if we are continually longing for its arrival.

"Therefore, let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." Sleep here signifies spiritual sloth. And night is also spiritual darkness. "For they that sleep sleep in the night." It is night with us as long as we are spiritually asleep. And the spiritual and the natural night are alike in this, that each of them is the season for drunkenness, and for all manner of iniquity. Let us therefore be "of the day." Let us consider ourselves to be walking in the light of God's countenance. Let us reckon that He sees all we do. Let us delight to do that which He delights to see. Whether it be night or day let us be always on our guard, watching against sin, having clothed ourselves, by means of prayer, in the armour of God! "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him." Most merciful appointment this of God! Most marvellous life this which God preserves within us! Even whilst we sleep, we are still alive. Even whilst we from time to time are overtaken by spiritual slothfulness, God enables us to awake, and to arise from the dead.

With thoughts like these let us comfort ourselves together, and edify one another. And let us be thankful for the provision which God has made towards the edifying of his church, by the appointment of ministers to labour among the rest, to be over them in the Lord, and to admonish them. Let us esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake, not for themselves, their own gifts and graces, but for the holy work in which they are engaged, the commission they bear, the Lord whom they serve, and whose they are. This is the way to be at peace among ourselves when we are submissive to those who are set over us. This is the way to be at peace with God, when we receive with respect and lively faith the testimony which his messengers have to give us, concerning his Son our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

That St. Paul's doctrine is practical.

14 Now we ¶ exhort you, brethren, warn them that are † unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men.

15 See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

16 Rejoice evermore.

17 Pray without ceasing.

18 In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

19 Quench not the Spirit.

20 Despise not prophesyings.

21 Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

¶ Or, beseech.

† Or, disorderly.

22 Abstain from all appearance of evil.

23 And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

26 Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss.

27 ‡ I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

28 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, be with you. Amen.

‡ Or, adjure.

§ 589. How we ought to be blameless in all things.

How plainly does St. Paul shew us, at this conclusion of his Epistle, that the doctrine he has been teaching us is practical; that to do these things is quite as needful as to know and to believe them! How many and how eminent are the duties of holiness, which in these few verses he urges on our attention! "Warn them that are unruly." Let us never fail to tell such how great their danger is. Let us never fail to tell our brethren who offend against the settled rule and order of the church, that to despise those whom He appoints for his ministers, is little else than to despise Himself. See Luke 10. 16. "Comfort the feebleminded." Let us never fail to afford to such the help of Christian consolation. "Support the weak." Let us rejoice to help the helpless. Let us pray for those who pray not for themselves. "Be patient towards all men." Let us bear with the perversity of the most perverse. "See that none render evil for evil unto any man." Nay, let us rather do good to them who do ill to us; thus following after that which is good, not only amongst ourselves, but also to all men.

"Rejoice evermore;" even in all things that befall us. For we have always much to make us glad. "Pray without ceasing;" losing no opportunity of devotion, and being always in a devout frame of mind. For we have always much to ask for. "In every thing give thanks." For, behold, we owe all to God. And this is his will in all things, that we should find it pleasant to be thankful. "This is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning" us. For in his Son He has made it manifest how much He loves us. And to be thankful, what is this but to "love him because he first loved us?" 1 John 4. 19. "Quench not the Spirit." This would be to put out the light that is in us, the only light. And if thus we love darkness rather than light, how great is our darkness? "Despise not prophesyings;" or any spiritual gifts. This would be to make light of God's chiefest blessings. And if thus we profit not by what He bestows; how surely will He take from us even that we have. The scorner, if he make not haste and repent, must expect to be given up to a reprobate mind.

"Prove all things." This is the way to choose aright. "Hold fast that which is good." This is the way to profit by our choice. Oh let not us be tossed about by every wind of doctrine! Oh let not us be positive in any doctrine at all, till we have proved it to be indeed the truth of God! "Abstain from all appearance of evil;" from evil of every kind, whatever form or figure it put on, however tempting to the sense, however plausible to the judgment. Nay, though it be but the appearance only, still "let not your good be evil spoken of." Rom. 14. 16. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly." For in all these things, it is his strength which must be made perfect in our weakness. It is only through God's assistance that our "whole spirit and soul and body" can "be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." And what an end and object is this to set before us! What a height of holiness! What perfection of obedience! Our "whole spirit and soul and body!" What more could the apostle add? In what language could he more forcibly express his desire, that we should be altogether blameless. Oh how far have we been hitherto from this heavenly character! How little are we now like unto it! How little are we able, how little are we likely, to attain to it! And yet it is not so much our want of ability that keeps us back, as our conceiving ourselves to be more able than we are, and therefore not looking for the help which would enable us. "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." It must be God's doing. Let us ask and He will give. Let us believe that He will do it; for He will. "Brethren, pray for us." Let us believe, let us ask, not only for ourselves but also for each other. "Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss." Let us pray for each other out of pure affection. "I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren." Let us be free to communicate to each other all that most helps to edify ourselves.

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," his free gift of holiness and of heaven, be with us all. Amen.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS, 1. 1—12.

St. Paul speaketh of the righteous judgment of God.

1 Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:

2 Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth;

4 So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

5 Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer:

6 Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

7 And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with † his mighty angels,

8 In flaming fire || taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ:

9 Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power;

10 When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would *count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power:

12 That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

† Gr. the angels of his power.

|| Or, yielding.

* Or, vouchsafe.

§ 590. Christ glorified in his saints, and they in Him.

This second Epistle to the Thessalonians was written soon after the first, probably as soon as St. Paul had heard of the effect which the first produced. And in this, as in the former one, the apostle joins Silvanus and Timotheus with himself, both in the prayers which he puts up for his converts, and in the counsel which he sends them for their good. He prays that they may have grace and peace, "from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." He tells them how he feels himself bound always to thank God by reason of their faith and charity; and especially for the proof they gave of their patience and faith, manifested by their endurance of persecutions and tribulations. They then it seems were not only willing to bear afflictions, but in the midst of their afflictions they were full of love one to another; their temper not soured, their affections not chilled, but rather warmed towards each other with fresh fervour of love, the more they had to endure from the malice of their enemies. Let us when we encounter trouble, not only call to mind that "whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth;" Heb. 12. 6; but also out of our sense of God's love, be so much the more inclined to behave with love towards each other.

These tribulations thus endured St. Paul considers to be a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God; a proof that God will hereafter "judge the world in righteousness." Acts 17. 31. For it is evidently no more than justice, that God should in the end reward every man according as his work shall be. And therefore when we see on earth the wicked prosper, or the devout suffering adversity, we may be assured that there is a judgment yet to come, when God will recompense tribulation to them that trouble his servants, and minister peace to the troubled. Then shall the Lord Jesus "be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God," on such as might have known Him but would not; "and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," who knew these things but would not do them. These "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." They will be shut out from heaven for ever. Nay more, they will be sentenced to that endless misery which is here called "everlasting destruction;" to be always dying, never dead; to be always in flames, and yet not consumed; to be always in fire which cannot be quenched, gnawed on by a worm that "dieth not." Mark 9. 44.

But in that same day, our blessed Lord shall be "glorified in his saints." He will "be admired in all them that believe;" and amongst others, in many of the Thessalonians; because the testimony of the apostle among them had been believed. See then how great a thing it is to believe! See how this is of the first importance to believe the word of God, to receive the witness of God's ministers. Let us but believe in earnest, and we shall both love and obey. Let us believe, obey, and love, and we shall be among those in whom our Lord is glorified, and we in Him. And for this end let us pray diligently, that God would count us worthy of his heavenly calling, that He would fulfil in us "all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power." And then what an honour, what a privilege is this for sinners, that Christ should be glorified in them; here in their patient endurance of tribulation, hereafter in their partaking of everlasting joy! Yes, what a joy, what a glory is this to be offered to the most sinful of mankind, that they through repentance and faith, through God's calling, and by his good pleasure, and by his fulfilling in them the work of faith with power, they, instead of "destruction from the presence of the Lord," even they may be glorified in Christ!

Of the man of sin.

1 Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him,

2 That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition;

4 Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God.

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

6 And now ye know what || withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming:

9 Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie:

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

|| Or, holdeth.

§ 591. The deceivableness of unrighteousness.

The Thessalonians, it appears, had mistaken what St. Paul wrote in his first Epistle about the coming of the Lord. Or they had been shaken in mind and troubled by some words or letter purporting to be his, but not his in reality, and professing to give them certain information of the near coming of Christ to judgment. But the day of Christ is not exactly known to any man. And though it is good for us to be under a constant expectation that it may probably soon come, it is not well for us to be under a false impression, as if we knew just how soon this would be. And therefore St. Paul has here instructed us, by the word of revelation, that before that day of Christ there will be "a falling away first." And besides this also, before that day, there will be revealed "that man of sin," "the son of perdition." Of these things the apostle had before spoken to the Thessalonians, when he was yet with them. And here he describes for the information of all Christians, he describes the man of sin, as one "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God."

What a falling away is this! What an awful state of unbelief and blasphemy! How hardened in sin must that man be whose character is here set forth! How may we know what particular iniquity is here intended? How may we be secure from falling into the offences here denounced? Let us consider whether there have been any falling away amongst Christians which at all answers to the account here given. Let us examine, and learn whether any among Christians have ever opposed themselves in rivalry against God, yea exalted themselves above God, yea have seated themselves in the temple of God, shewing themselves as though they were in God's place. In St. Paul's time there was something which hindered the manifestation of these horrors; though even then this marvellous iniquity had begun to work. Even then there had crept into the Christian church some leaven of that unchristian spirit, which would sanctify the pride and passions of man, under the pretence of religion, and the assumed authority of God. Is that which then prevented its full development now removed? Has "that wicked one" been now revealed? Has his coming been signalized, "after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders," with false miracles and pretended prophecies, "and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish?" And is the day now nigh at hand when the Lord shall "consume" him "with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy" him "with the brightness of his coming?" Lord, Thou only knowest! Lord, we pray Thee, save our brethren from this gross delusion! Lord, let not us, we pray Thee, believe this lie!

Thus much is most clear, in this prophecy so hard to be understood, thus much is clear, that God sends this strong delusion, for the condemnation of those who love the darkness rather than the light. It is for this cause He sends it, "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." And He sends it to those "who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." See then the "deceivableness of unrighteousness." See the credulity of unbelief! See how greedily the same men, who will not believe the truth, yet swallow down a lie! And why? Because the lie is their own; and they love it. The truth they hate; for it is not their own, but God's. It is "with the heart" that "man believeth." Rom. 10. 10. It is by love that faith is nourished. And it is for want of love towards God that men will not receive the truth, though they so readily give ear to falsehood.

Lord, help us to love Thee; that we may more heartily believe! Lord, help us to believe, that we may love Thee more!

St. Paul gives thanks and prays for the Thessalonians.

13 But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth:

14 Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

15 Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

16 Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, 17 Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.

§ 592. The end and means of God's election.

On contemplating the delusion which awaits many in the last days, St. Paul felt himself bound to give thanks alway to God, for those to whom he wrote, because God had from the beginning chosen them "to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth," whereunto God had called them by the Gospel, "to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." These expressions shew us the way of God's election; the end to which He calls us, and the means which He uses thereunto. The end to which He calls us is "salvation." It is to be saved, both soul and body, from that wrath to come, which is revealed against all unrighteousness of men. It is the "obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ," even the sharing with Him in his heavenly inheritance. It is not only to be redeemed from endless misery, but to be happy in heaven for ever. Nay, it is to have peace and joy in believing, whilst on earth; as well as glory in the presence of God when we enter into eternity.

This is the end of our calling. And the means are these, "sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth." These are the means ordained by God. We must be made holy by the Holy Ghost, or we are not "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." Col. 1. 12. We must be made holy. And it is the Holy Ghost which must make us holy. He can. And only He is able. For our parts we must believe the truth. We must believe the Gospel. For the Gospel is the truth. We must believe; and we must be steadfast in our faith. We must stand fast and hold that which we have been taught, whether by the written word of Scripture, or by our living teachers in the church, whose teaching and preaching, according to God's word, is ordained by God for the instruction of his people. Let not us neglect our part. Let not us suppose that we have the benefit of the covenant when we take no pleasure in the work. God has done his part in calling us. God will do his part in saving us. The Spirit will sanctify us, is sanctifying us, is striving to make us holy, moving us to be made holy. Our Lord Jesus Christ, and God even our Father, "hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation, and good hope through grace," and is ready also to comfort our hearts and to stablish us in every good word and work.

We cannot doubt that God will fulfil his promises. We do not really call in question the truth of his word. But do we act as if it were really true? Do we stand fast in that which we have heard? Do we live the life of faith? Do we consider ourselves chosen of God unto salvation? Do we cherish the godly motions of the Spirit in our hearts? Are we glad to feel Him moving us? Do we reckon our bodies to be his temple? Do we keep them holy as if they were? If not, how dare we to expect that we shall in the end be saved? If not, how dare we to live on, being as we are in daily danger of death, how dare we to be at ease, with the wrath to come so fiercely raging, so near approaching, and we having no security provided to assure us of help and deliverance? Most lamentable of all foolishness is this, to trust that God's mercy will be our safeguard then, if it be not now effectual to our amendment of life. And little less than madness is the thought, that because Christ died to save sinners, therefore we may sin more safely. And worse than folly, worse than madness is this most fatal fallacy, that because God has chosen us to salvation, therefore we shall in any case be saved. See, whether it be not thus that He has chosen us, "through sanctification of the Spirit." And yet we are not holy. See whether it be not also through "belief of the truth." And yet many will not believe. Nay, in this very Epistle, soon afterwards, St. Paul speaks of some among the brethren, who walked disorderly. Ch. 3. 6, 11. So that God's choice may be dishonoured by man's perversity. And besides his choosing us, we give all diligence to make our calling and election sure. See 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Oh let us then exert all the strength that is within us, out of regard to the call of God who strengtheneth us. Let us at once work with all our might, and put all our trust in God. His promises were never meant to lead us to presumption. They are ample to inspire us with hope and confidence, with faith and courage, and love.

St. Paul's own example, and his salutation.

1 Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord \parallel may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you:

2 And that we may be delivered from \dagger unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith.

3 But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil.

4 And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you.

5 And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into \ddagger the patient waiting for Christ.

6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.

7 For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you:

8 Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

9 Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us.

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat.

For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies.

12 Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.

13 But ye, brethren, \S be not weary in well doing.

14 And if any man obey not our word \parallel by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed.

15 Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.

16 Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all.

17 The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write.

18 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

§ 593. How to behave towards them who walk disorderly.

St. Paul asks the Thessalonians to pray for him. The most advanced in piety are at the same time the most sincerely desirous to profit by the prayers of their brethren. Let us then pray for all men. And especially for ministers of the Gospel, let us pray that through their means "the word of the Lord may have free course" and may "be glorified." Many are their difficulties; and in some cases great their persecutions. "For all men have not faith." And the faithless have not charity. And the uncharitable are at enmity with the messengers of peace. "But the Lord is faithful." This no doubt is their comfort in their tribulation. This should be our encouragement to persevere in prayer. "The Lord is faithful." He has promised. He will perform. He knows how to deliver his servants out of their afflictions, and how to stablish and keep those who pray for them. Happy are the people who thus pray for their ministers. Happy are the ministers who have this confidence in their people, that they both do, and will do, the things which they enjoin. Oh may the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, that thus we may feel a true Christian love, whether ministers or people, towards each other! Oh may the Lord direct our hearts unto the "patient waiting for Christ," that we may, as He did, suffer gladly, if it be God's will, and persevere stedfastly both in prayer and in well-doing, as long as it is God's pleasure!

St. Paul here reveals God's will in the difficult matter of our behaviour towards such Christian brethren as walk disorderly, not after the Christian rule of faith or conduct. He refers especially to some of the Christian converts who desired to eat their bread in idleness on the strength of their connexion with the Christian church. As if the Gospel, which bids the rich to relieve the wants of the poor, would allow the idle to prey upon the resources of the diligent. As if the ample provision herein made for the sick, the aged, the infirm, were designed to maintain in sloth and plenty the young, the healthy, and the strong. How different was the example which St. Paul himself had set; when he "wrought with labour and travail, night and day," on purpose that he might not be chargeable to any, not because he had not power, but to make himself an example for us to follow! How well did he by this example enforce his command, "that if any would not work, neither should he eat!" How earnestly did he exhort those who acted otherwise, that they would work with quietness, "and eat their own bread!" And how plainly does he shew us that this is one of the most important duties of a Christian, when he considers the neglect of it to be a reason why we should withdraw ourselves from the communion of the offenders! Never then may we thus presume upon our spiritual privileges to neglect our duties in the world! Never may we give this handle to the scorner to blaspheme, as if Christians, under the plea of heavenly mindedness, might be slothful and selfish, in this present world!

And now let us observe how we are to behave towards those who in this or any other way walk disorderly, and set at nought the rule of Christian faith or practice. "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed." We are to withdraw ourselves from him. We are to try, by our estrangement, to bring him to a sense of sinfulness in the sight of God. "Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." "Go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Matt. 18. 15. Most needful warning, too often most grievously overlooked! So often in the community of Christ's professed disciples, have differences of opinion and departures from the faith been the signal for most bitter enmity! So often has the sword of persecution been applied instead of the word of brotherly admonition! We are reluctant to admonish our erring fellow Christians, we are reluctant to admonish them as brethren. This is to do violence to our own ease; and we profess that we are averse to give them pain. And yet they who are too tender to admonish, are found willing and eager to reproach and censure, to imprison, or even to put to death. So cruel are the tender mercies of the wicked. See Prov. 12. 10. So near akin is activity in wrong, to indolence in doing that which is right! Let us rouse ourselves to the duty of admonishing each other, and we shall be less likely to have need for separation and estrangement. And if there be any from whom we needs must be estranged, let us be on our guard against giving way to the feelings of hostility. In all our differences, in all our separations, may the Lord of peace give us "peace always by all means!" As far as possible may we be all of one mind, all of one community! And as far as this is still found to be not practicable, may we still be of one heart and spirit; may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ still be with us all! Amen.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY, 1. 1—11.

St. Paul bids Timothy abide in Ephesus, and why.

1 Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope;

2 Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

3 As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine,

4 Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do.

5 Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned:

6 From which some || having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling;

7 Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

8 But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully;

9 Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers,

10 For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine;

11 According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust.

The Epistles to Timothy and to Titus are especially of interest to ministers of the Gospel, having been written to instruct these two faithful bishops in the duties of their sacred office. But that which greatly concerns ministers must needs also very greatly concern the people committed to their charge. For the ministry of the one is ordained for the edifying of the other. And whilst pastors are here taught how weighty is their charge, how far beyond all strength of man; the flock may learn at once neither to expect too much of their frail fellow creatures, nor yet to be well satisfied with too little. And besides this, all Christians, in proportion as they advance in Christian proficiency, are bound to become helpers of their brethren, and to assist ministers in their work, by helping to convert sinners from the error of their ways. So that all Christians ought to resort to these Epistles, for their own guidance in the work of edifying their brethren. And there is yet one more appropriate use which we may all find in what was written to Timothy and Titus. And this is, that as we here see what ministers ought to be, we learn also what the rest ought to pray for in their behalf. "Finally, brethren, pray for us." 2 Thes. 3. 1. These were among the last exhortations which St. Paul and Timothy together addressed to the Thessalonians. And now when the one writes to the other, we learn what we might have prayed for in behalf of either, we learn what we ought now actually to pray for in behalf of those who minister amongst ourselves. Let us therefore as we read, continually lift up our hearts in prayer to God, that it may please Him to bless those who are set over us in the Lord, even that they may have "grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord."

St. Paul directs Timothy to abide still at Ephesus. And this direction he gives in the form of a request: "As I besought thee." It is well then to have subordination among ministers. It is well that some should give directions, and others obey them. It is well that they who obey should obey willingly, and that they who order should give their directions courteously. St. Paul's directions were not without their reason. He assigned the reason when he gave them. He would have Timothy abide at Ephesus, in order to charge some not to teach false doctrine, and not to give heed to such subjects as tended to disputation, rather than to that "godly edifying which is in faith." Here is a warning of great use and necessity to such as desire by their religious conversation to minister grace unto the hearers. If this be among the wishes of our hearts, let us take heed and avoid curious speculations on questions which tend to exercise ingenuity in argument, rather than to promote improvement in practice. "The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned." This is the apostle's remark to those who raised their curious disputes on questions of the Jewish law. And this remark may well serve for us, under the Gospel, to guide us aright as to the objects we ought constantly to aim at, constantly desire to advance. "Charity;" not the display of our own power in argument, but the quickening of our own affections, and the affections of those whom we converse with, both towards man and towards God. "A pure heart;" not a heart puffed up with a conceit of wisdom, and therefore the more likely to fall into sensual folly, but a heart set in earnest upon God, desiring to see Him, whose presence the pure in heart, and they only, can enjoy. "A good conscience," enlightened by the experience of Christian friends, and confirmed in goodness by the force of their example. "Faith unfeigned," rooted and grounded in love, and also working by love, so as to bring forth the fruits of holiness and joy. Oh that in our conversation we may aim at forwarding such ends as these! Oh that these precious fruits may abundantly testify to the faithfulness and devotion of our ministers!

One of the chief subjects of unprofitable disputation and "vain jangling," which used to beset Christians in the time of St. Paul, was the Law revealed to the Jews by Moses. Here we see how this very law might afford matter of most profitable consideration to all. Let us observe how good the Law is, if a man use it lawfully. Let us observe how well the enactments of the Law accord with "the glorious gospel of the blessed God." Under the Law there is no sentence against the righteous. And so also under the Gospel, "against such there is no law." Gal. 5. 23. Under the Law punishment is denounced against the lawless and disobedient, whatever be the form of their enormity. Under the Gospel it is no less plainly declared of such as do these things, that they "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Gal. 3. 21. Here then are matters which admit of no controversy, and yet are calculated to engage our most anxious attention. On these and such as these let us confer without disputing. Let us warn each other of our risk, lest we fall into these sins. Let us take sweet counsel together that we may make progress in this righteousness. Instead of arguing whether or no the Law be good, or the Gospel true, let us prove their truth and excellency, by using them lawfully, by living according to the rules they give, by believing, and obeying what is therein revealed.

St. Paul giveth thanks for his own conversion.

12 And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry;

13 Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.

14 And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

15 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

16 Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

17 Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

18 This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare;

19 Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck:

20 Of whom is Hymenæus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

§ 595. That we must thankfully conform to the will of God.

See how God bends to the promoting of his own purposes the will of his most stubborn enemies! Saul the persecutor is put into the ministry. And Satan's malice is made to help in correcting Hymenæus and Alexander, that they may learn not to blaspheme. How vain then is all attempt of ours to frustrate the designs of the Most High! How foolish as well as wicked is it in us to murmur against the dispensations of Him, who is all powerful, all wise, all good! We murmur, and He chastens so much more. We set up our will for best; and He so much the more establishes his own. Oh, when shall we be content to cast all our care on Him, knowing that He careth for us? See 1 Pet. 5. 7. Oh, when shall we be satisfied to leave all that concerns us entirely to his ordering, knowing that whether we will or not, "his kingdom ruleth over all?" Ps. 103. 19.

St. Paul could now "thank Christ Jesus our Lord," who had enabled him to believe and obey the Gospel, who had called him to be an apostle, counting him faithful in the work. He could thankfully declare how he had obtained mercy, notwithstanding his blasphemies and the wrongs he had inflicted on the church, because he did it ignorantly in unbelief. He was aware that in this instance the free gift of God was exceeding abundant, both in forgiving him his offences, and in giving him opportunity and grace to believe and to love. And whilst he felt that he had been chief of sinners, he could glory in this faithful saying, "that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." This is the frame of mind which it is to be hoped that we shall come to, in whatsoever we have hitherto resisted God's will. To see the folly of our past course, to be thankful for having been thwarted and converted, to be sensible of the great mercy we experience in not being allowed to have our own way as we desired, to be not ashamed to own our bygone transgressions, but rather to make mention of them freely, on due occasions, as instances of God's abundant grace in forgiving us, and especially to feel that it is Christ who has saved us, that He came into the world to save sinners, that by Him and Him alone we are saved; this is the state of mind to which we must endeavour to attain, in proportion as we have been hitherto running counter to God's will. Nor must we suppose that it is for any worth of ours that God thus shews mercy on us. No; it is his own free goodness. It is in order that Christ may be glorified in our salvation. It is for this cause, that we having thus obtained mercy may be a pattern unto others, that they also may believe on Jesus Christ, unto everlasting life. Exalted privilege for sinful men; that we may do honour to the Son of God! Unlooked for gift of grace, that we, all unworthy as we are of the least of all God's mercies, should be set forth unto our brethren as instances of his utmost longsuffering and most signal goodness! How can we ever enough give thanks unto his name? How can we ever enough ascribe "unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God," "honour and glory for ever and ever?"

St. Paul gives it in charge to Timothy that he should bear witness to the truth of these doctrines, and make known God's gracious dealings among men; reminding him that he had been the subject of prophesyings, and exhorting him to war the good warfare, "holding faith and a good conscience." In like manner it ought to be an encouragement to us, to feel that of us it has been foretold, that we should come to the light of Christ. "The Gentiles shall come to thy light." Is. 60. 3. The prophecies which "went before on" Timothy did not exempt him from risk of falling. And therefore he still needed this charge to persevere. The prophecies which have of old time spoken of ourselves as heirs of the kingdom of Christ, leave it still in our power, if we will, to put away "faith and a good conscience." Let us also beware lest we concerning faith make shipwreck. Let us also remember that there is such a thing as to be delivered unto Satan not only for sufferings in this world, but for the endless torments of hell fire. "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord," 2 Cor. 5. 11, let us the more faithfully cling to the hope of his mercies. Knowing how sad is the end of ungodliness, let us the more stedfastly cleave to that which is good.

Prayers for kings.

1 I || exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, ~~and~~ giving of thanks, be made for all men;

2 For kings, and for all that are in † authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

3 For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour;

4 Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

5 For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus;

6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, ‡ to be testified in due time.

7 Whereunto I am ordained a preacher and an apostle, (I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not;) a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity.

|| Or, desire.

† Or, eminent place.

8 I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.

9 In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with § brodered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array;

10 But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works.

11 Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection.

12 But I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

13 For Adam was first formed, then Eve.

14 And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression.

15 Notwithstanding she shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

‡ Or, a testimony.

§ Or, plaited.

§ 596. How women must behave.

St. Paul would have us both in our prayers and in our thanksgivings make mention of all men. So affectionately ought we to feel towards all mankind! And especially he would have us do this for kings, and for all that are in authority. So great are the blessings which we derive from civil government! So greatly does the rule of civil governors assist us towards leading a quiet and peaceable life "in all godliness and honesty!" Let us try to conceive how great would be the confusion, if we were deprived of this wholesome restraint. Let us call to mind what misery has actually ensued where the laws and their due execution have been for a time suspended or set at nought. Let us think to ourselves, when we pray for kings, how manifold are the ills from which the rule of our kings keeps us free. Let us think when we give thanks for all that are in authority, how greatly we owe to them the manifold advantages of peace and plenty, upon earth, and the opportunity to pursue without disturbance our path towards everlasting joy in heaven.

This is the way in which God would have all men dwell; protected by good government from mutual wrongs, and assisted by the wholesome influence of the powers that be, in the knowledge of the truth and in the attainment of salvation. And this is God's will in our behalf, that all men should be saved, that all men should know the truth. And the truth is this, that there is "one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus," even man as well as God, "who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." Let us then pray that this truth may be testified to all men. Let us pray for peace and for good government, with a view to this blessed consequence, that by these means the Gospel may take deeper root, and more widely spread its branches, and more abundantly bear its fruit throughout all the world. Christ "gave himself a ransom for all." Whose fault is it, if it be not ours, that all men yet know not of this gift? Who but they which know of it already are bound to testify it unto them which are still ignorant? Oh that we therefore may help both by our prayers and by our gifts, towards the sending out preachers unto all lands, to teach "the Gentiles in faith and verity." Oh that they who have been instructed how to pray, may be every where engaged in intercession before God, "lifting up holy hands," having their lives answerable to their prayers; "without wrath and doubting," having peace amongst each other, and peace with God!

Nor must these duties of public prayer and thanksgiving, be neglected by Christian women. Only they must on such occasions be especially on their guard against a sin which most easily besets them, excess of apparel. They must remember on all occasions that their greatest ornaments are "shamefacedness and sobriety;" and "good works." In these let them delight to be eminent. Ill would it become their sex to set up for teachers of the rest, when they have been told to "learn in silence with all subjection." Ill would it become the woman, especially in the ordinances of religion, "to usurp authority over the man;" when St. Paul has here directed her "to be in silence." No, let her remember, which first was formed, not Eve but Adam. This is one ground of man's precedence. Next let her observe which first was deceived, which first was guilty of transgression; not Adam but Eve. This is the chief inferiority of the woman. To be first in sin is to be last in the esteem of God. Notwithstanding, God be praised, the last may oftentimes be first. The first of sinners, and the last, the chiefest or the least, all are alike called unto salvation, through the precious blood of Christ. Unto all, for the benefit of all, a Child is born; unto all, for the salvation of all, a Son is given. See Isa. 9. 6. That Child, the seed of the woman; that Son, the Son of God most High. And all, whether they be men or women, all shall through Christ be saved, all who "continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety."

St. Paul declareth how bishops ought to be qualified.

1 This is a true saying, if a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work.

2 A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach;

3 † Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous;

4 One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity;

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)

6 Not † a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

|| Or, modest.

† Or, Not ready to quarrel, and offer wrong, as one in wine.

‡ Or, one newly come to the faith.

§ 597. What is required of them who rule the church of God.

How many things does the apostle here require of such as shall be fit for the work of the ministry, whether as a bishop, or as an elder or priest. He that desires this holy office, desires indeed an excellent work. But it is a work which needs an excellent workman. How often need ministers say within themselves; "Who is sufficient for these things?" 2 Cor. 2. 16. How kindly ought the rest to consider the difficulties of their office, and to make allowances for their manifold imperfections!

To be "blameless" is the first point noted. And this St. Paul elsewhere mentions as his own practice, "giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed." 2 Cor. 6. 3. The sins of ministers never come single; besides offending God, they bring discredit on the Gospel in which they minister. Next they must be sure that in the matter of marriage they set due bounds to their desires, not only not marrying two wives at once, which among the heathen was no uncommon practice, but also not hasting to marry one after another. They must be "vigilant;" for the enemy of souls is always "seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5. 8. And therefore they who are set in office to prevent his success, must be always on the watch against his wiles. They must be "sober;" which here means soberminded; for afterwards we read "not given to wine." They must be "of good behaviour," conducting themselves with propriety towards all with whom they come into contact; "given to hospitality," fond of asking those who ask not again; see Luke 14. 12; "apt to teach," both willing and able to impart to others their own peace and joy in believing.

"Not given to wine," is another point of great importance in the character of a minister of the Gospel. For there is no sin more scandalous than drunkenness; no sin which more generally exposes the sinner to the scorn and censure of the beholders. He must also be "no striker," no, nor apt to quarrel; not addicted to wrangling in controversy, or to litigation in his temporal affairs. Nor must he be "greedy of filthy lucre." But on the contrary he must be "patient;" willing to put up with wrongs and blows, rather than return them; "no brawler," one who when he is reviled reviles not again; "not covetous," one who has no love for money in his heart, but is free to give, free to spend, and content to lose it, if it so happen, not sorry to have so much the less to answer for unto God. He must be "one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection," and this is to be done not by harsh severity, but by kindness, "with all gravity." For a man's fitness for the office of ruling others, may be known by his ability to rule his own family. And they to whom is entrusted the care of God's church, are in some sort commissioned to rule the rest; though only under the authority of the King of kings. He must be "not a novice," not one newly converted to the faith, "lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil;" become liable to the same sentence, as having been guilty of the same sin. So apt is knowledge newly gained to puff up its possessor! So much more likely are they who have known more and longer, to be aware that they as yet know little! So sure are they to fall who are lifted up with pride! So like is their fall to the fall of Satan and of his angels; their sin and their condemnation so near akin to his!

And yet again at the end it is set down of a bishop, that "he must have a good report of them which are without," even as at the beginning it is required of him to be "blameless." It is one thing to be proud, conceited, vain. It is another to have an eye to what men think or say of us, with a view to giving no one any cause of scandal. And this is a distinction which the rulers of the flock of Christ are most especially bound to keep in view. So ready are the rest to plead the failings of ministers in extenuation of their own, that in their case concealment seems almost to be a duty; and when they are transgressors, they need be at the same time hypocrites. Most awful condition; most loathsome to themselves; to know themselves to be guilty in God's sight, of the very sins which they are denouncing in their brethren! To be aware that they are transgressors against God, in the very duties, of which their brethren are taking them for examples! Oh that all who are in this pitiable case, may take the only safe way of avoiding scandal, even to sin no more! Oh that they, who are set over others in the Lord, may not only be without blame, but also unblameable; not only have a good report, but also do that which is good, and love to do it always, as unto the Lord!

The qualifications of deacons.

likewise ~~must~~ the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

9 Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

11 Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well.

13 For they that have || used the office of a deacon

|| Or, ministered.

well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly:

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and † ground of the truth.

16 And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

† Or, stay.

§ 598. The mystery of godliness.

Most of the qualities here mentioned in the character of a deacon, have been already dwelt upon in the character of a bishop. For the first office is of the same nature as the last; and the one is the way through which men pass unto the other. But even deacons must "first be proved." No one must be admitted even into the lowest order of the ministry, without trial and examination had, in the several matters which are here pointed out. Many are the precautions wisely taken, according to the order of our church, to prevent the admission of unfit persons to the sacred office. Most serious is the responsibility which rests on those who ordain. Most searching are the questions put to those who are ordained. Most weighty is the injunction given to the people amongst whom they have previously dwelt, that if any one know just cause why they should not be ordained, he come forward without delay and report it to the bishop. But how easily may they who examine be deceived! How easily may a man deceive himself as to his own fitness, his own motives, his own calling! How easily are the people tempted, out of false shame or false good nature, to withhold the information which they are bound to give, in case they know of the candidate's unfitness! Thus it is that there are sometimes ministers to be met with, who are lightminded instead of "grave," "double tongued," "given to much wine," "greedy of filthy lucre," ignorant of the faith, and impure in conscience. And these are not unlikely to have for wives not the grave but the gay, such as are apt to spread slander instead of healing strife, not sober but giddy, not faithful in all things, but busy about many things, and neglectful in the one thing needful. Happy are those women, who living according to the rule here laid down by the apostle, are adorned with a character like to that of ministers! Happy are those deacons, who, having been first proved, use the office of a deacon well, and thus ministering of the truth to others, grow also, their own selves, in grace and holiness, in the boldness of faith and hope!

St. Paul sent these particulars in writing to Timothy, for his instruction as to whom he should ordain; that he might know how he ought to behave in this matter, of so great importance to the church of the living God. For Timothy, though young, was entrusted with the oversight of the whole church at Ephesus. And there was no point in all his office of more weight, than the appointment of those, who under himself were to overlook the rest. For see how great a charge is in the hands of ministers, to feed the flock of Christ, to rule, to watch for, to edify, that church which is "the pillar and ground of the truth!" And see how great is "the mystery of godliness," which it is the office of ministers to preach and to explain! "God was manifest in the flesh;" in the person of Christ Jesus. God was "justified in the Spirit;" this also in the person of Jesus Christ, to whom the Spirit bare witness both by prophecy and miracle. God was "seen of angels," when in the person of Jesus Christ He wrought redemption for his people, "which things angels desire to look into." 1 Pet. 1. 12. God was "preached unto the Gentiles," when Christ was preached to the Gentiles. God was "believed on in the world," when Christ was believed on in the world. God was "received up into glory," when Christ was received up into glory. Oh mystery past man's conception! Oh mystery which angels gaze on with delight! Oh marvellous grace of God, that He has revealed all these things for our instruction! Oh most solemn of all charges with which man can be entrusted, to be put in trust with the ministry of this Gospel! The mystery is revealed, and men are made to help in revealing it. It is revealed. Even unto the Gentiles it is preached. Even in this wicked world there are some found who believe in Christ. They believe; and believers are the church. And the church thus formed is "the pillar and ground of the truth." It is the body of believers which puts the truth in a firm and commanding attitude before the eyes of the whole race of mankind. God grant that the ground may in no case prove unsound! God grant that no stone in all this goodly pillar may prove weak in its connexion, or unworthy of its place!

St. Paul telleth Timothy what to teach and do.

1 Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils;

2 Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

3 Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

4 For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving:

5 For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

6 If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained.

7 But refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness.

8 For bodily exercise profiteth little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

9 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation.

10 For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the saviour of all men, specially of those that believe.

11 These things command and teach.

12 Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear * to all.

16 Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

|| Or, for a little time.

* Or, in all things.

§ 599. Real godliness opposed to doctrines of devils.

Let us take warning against the errors of which the Spirit here "speaketh expressly." Let us beware of these "seducing spirits." Let not us adopt these "doctrines of devils." Let not us be induced to listen unto those false teachers, who speak lies in hypocrisy; who know that what they say is false, and who are notwithstanding so hardened in conscience that they persist in saying it as the truth. Such are they who forbid to marry, as if God had not Himself declared, "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him." Gen. 2. 18. Such are they who would have us to abstain from meats, as though any one were less allowable than any other, as though God had not created all "to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." "Every creature of God is good." Every thing which He has made is to be used according to the use for which He made it, is to be received with thankfulness towards Him who gave it. "For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer." It is holy to us, if we use it as God has directed us; if we pray for his blessing in the use of it. Vain then are these devices of men, here called "profane and old wives' fables," to substitute trifling distinctions in food, or imaginary holiness in a single life, which at the most are mere "bodily exercise," for "the words of faith and of good doctrine," for that godliness which "is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Let us listen to this faithful saying. Let us not be backward to accept it. Let us be neither slow to labour, nor reluctant to endure reproach, out of our trust in the living God, that He will make good his word. He "is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe." Therefore let us be tenfold more ready to deny ourselves, out of respect to his faithfulness and love, than ever we could have been out of the vain conceit that there is worth in what we do to secure his favour.

Such are the views of truth and duty which Timothy is here directed to teach and to command; and also to recommend by his own example, "in word, in conversation" or behaviour, "in charity, in spirit" a spiritual frame of mind, "in faith" or the profession of it, "in purity," both of heart and life. And for the more effectual dissemination of the Gospel, he was to "give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." He was to study what had been well said by others, and above all, what had been written by those holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. See 2 Pet. 1. 21. He was to read and learn, that he might be able to exhort and teach. He was to watch that he neglected not the gift that was in him, the gift of the Holy Spirit of God, the office of the ministry, to which he had been appointed by special prophecy, and yet not without the laying on of the hands of other ministers. But the more eminent was his outward calling and office, he was so much the more bound to meditate upon that which he had to teach, and to give himself wholly to the teaching of it, that his profiting might appear unto all men. For by taking heed to himself and to his doctrine, and continuing stedfast in the things he taught, he might, through God's great goodness, both save himself and them that heard him. Oh glorious privilege of ministers, to be helpful in the saving of their fellow creatures! Oh marvellous efficacy of truth, to be able to save them that hear! God be praised that we have heard! God help us to obey! God grant that we may long to help in telling others, what has given peace and joy unto ourselves!

Of christian widows.

1 Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren;

2 The elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

3 Honour widows that are widows indeed.

4 But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew || piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God.

5 Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

6 But she that liveth * in pleasure is dead while she liveth.

7 And these things give in charge that they may be blameless.

8 But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own † house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

9 Let not a widow be ‡ taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man,

|| Or, kindness.

* Or, delicately.

† Or, kindred.

‡ Or, chosen.

¶ Gr. for their railing.

10 Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.

11 But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry;

12 Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

13 And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busy bodies, speaking things which they ought not.

14 I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion ¶ to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

15 For some are already turned aside after Satan.

16 If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

§ 600. Female usefulness.

Ministers are here taught to look upon themselves, rather as helpers of their brethren, than as having dominion over their faith. See 2 Cor. 1. 24. Thus Timothy is instructed, in the exercise of his authority, to pay respect to the years of the aged, to entreat them as one would request a father; "and the younger men as brethren," not eager to use authority, but rather willing to appeal to love. And in like manner he was to entreat "the elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity." Here let us all, and not ministers alone, let us learn how to behave to one another. Let us view all our fellow creatures as though they belonged to one or other of these classes; and treat the old all as fathers or mothers, the younger all as brethren or sisters.

In his government of the church, Timothy has here particular directions as to widows; who appear under that name to have held the office of teachers, for the instruction of young female converts. These were to be honoured, provided for out of the common fund, when "widows indeed," when destitute of any children or descendants, who were able to maintain them. Else it was not fitting for the church to be charged. But in case a widow were left really friendless, she would be the more likely to trust entirely in God, she would be the less likely to live in pleasure; which is in truth to be dead whilst we live. That there might be no risk of any such scandal, St. Paul directs that none should be "taken into the number," except such as were of advanced age, and had been but once married, had a good character for benevolence, had well brought up such children as God had given them, had been hospitable, attentive, bountiful, and diligent in well doing. As for the younger widows, he preferred that they should again marry, and discharge the duties of wife, and mother, and mistress of a family. Nor would he have them by any means be admitted to the office of widows of the church. For if they should be tempted to "wax wanton against Christ," and marry again after they had devoted themselves to the service of the church in widowhood, this would both bring scandal on their office and condemnation on themselves. And though they should not go the whole length of "casting off their first faith," renouncing the office of a widow, yet would be apt to become idle in their proper business, and busy both in doing and "speaking things which they ought not."

How forcibly are the dangers here described which beset the female servants of Christ, in any duties which are in any degree of a public nature! What can be more scandalous to the cause she undertakes, what more hurtful to herself, than for her activity in the work of edifying her neighbours to degenerate into worldly conversation, to be made the cloak of idleness, talkativeness, censoriousness, of a disposition to spread slander abroad, rather than to do work at home! But shall the snares of Satan deter us from at all entering on the path of duty? No; let our Christian mothers and sisters, each according to her age and station, delight to do good as far as possible unto all mankind. In their youth they may pray much and give much for public objects. And by the faithful discharge of their domestic duties, they may lay in store that report for good works, which will justify them, as years advance, in more enlarged exertions for the honour of their Lord. Until at length, whether they be widows, or married, or single, they may do the work of widowhood, though the office be no more, and give good help, especially amongst the young of their own sex, in turning many to the love of Christ.

Of the maintenance and ordering of ministers.

17 Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

18 For the scripture saith, 'Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, 'The labourer is worthy of his reward.

19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but || before two or three witnesses.

20 Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

21 I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things * without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

22 Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.

24 Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after.

25 Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise cannot be hid.

² Matt. 10. 10.

|| Or, under.

* Or, without prejudice.

§ 601. Against partaking in other men's sins.

Since "every creature of God is good," and to be "received with thanksgiving," ch. 4. 4, who can doubt that God would have the ministers of his word enjoy of the abundance of the earth? And since it is their duty to devote their time to the sowing unto the rest in spiritual things, who that profits by their labours, can grudge that they should reap of the rest in carnal things? Ought we not rather to seize gladly each opportunity that offers, for rewarding with our worldly goods the labourer of our spiritual harvest? And are we not bound, as far as lies in our power, to put in practice the directions here given for the apportionment of the labourer's reward? Oh that those of us who have ought to pay* to ministers, may never "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn," may never pay grudgingly or as of necessity, but freely, cheerfully, and abundantly! Oh that those who have voice or influence in allotting the patrimony of the church, may conscientiously endeavour, to the best of their judgment, to give most large honour and emolument to "the elders that rule well," to those who most "labour in the word and doctrine!"

But alas! it is no uncommon thing for the clergy, instead of being held in honour of their brethren, to be the marked objects of censure, slander, and indignity! So apt are men to fancy that any fault which they can find or feign in their teachers, may serve for excuse of like failings in themselves! So unreasonably do they expect that perfection in their fellow creatures, which is to be met with only in our One great High Priest, eternal in the heavens! Well might each private Christian herein adopt the rule, which is prescribed to Timothy concerning an elder, to receive no accusation against such, "but before two or three witnesses." Hush, let us say to those who are finding fault with our pastor, I dare not so much as listen to your accusation, much less can I listen with satisfaction. If what you say be true, it could do me no good to hear of it. Take the charge to them which are in authority. Take with you at least two or three witnesses, and lay the matter before the rulers of the church. It is their duty to inquire. It is their duty, and I trust that they will discharge it faithfully; it is their duty to rebuke before all the ministers who sin, "that others also may fear." I trust that they will not forget the apostle's solemn charge, to observe these things "without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality." However much inconvenience it may cost us, let us not refrain in such a case, from offering them our testimony as to the things we know. This may help to justice. And whether it substantiate innocence, or tend to the removal of the guilty, it will promote the glory of Christ. But let us, at the same time, be continually on the watch that we neither revile nor suffer others in our presence to revile our ministers in private. Such censure is more easy, and to our selfish nature more agreeable, than a public accusation. But it is at once cruel and unjust to them, hurtful to ourselves, and detrimental to the honour of our Lord.

But how much better is precaution in ordaining ministers, so as that none shall need rebuke, than faithful severity in rebuking them that sin! How much is it to be desired that they who are entrusted with the divine commission, should "lay hands suddenly on no man," should never communicate the office of bishop, priest, or deacon, without ample time allowed for full enquiry, and for proof of the capacity and character, the zeal, faithfulness, and gravity, of those whom they appoint! How great is their risk, if they appoint improperly, of being partakers of other men's sins! How hard it is for them, in some cases, to know beforehand what the characters of other men will prove; seeing that whilst some are easily discerned, others, however faulty, are for a time concealed, though in the end they "cannot be hid." And this risk besets us all, in all appointments, in all engagements, in all intercourse we hold amongst each other. We are liable to be deceived. We are partakers, if through carelessness of ours we prefer the wicked to the good, we are partakers of other men's sins. Let us therefore watch and exert ourselves that we keep ourselves pure; not refusing to act, for fear of acting wrong, but acting with diligence and caution, with trust in God's guidance, and dependence on his mercy; not abstaining from the enjoyment of God's gifts for fear of using them to excess, but using them thankfully, within the bounds He sets us; to our own greater comfort and his greater glory.

Religion must not be made a cloak of covetousness.

1 Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

2 And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are || faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

3 If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness;

4 He is * proud, knowing nothing, but † doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings,

|| Or, believing.

* Or, a fool.

† Or, sick,

5 † Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself.

6 But godliness with contentment is great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

8 And having food and raiment let us be therewith content.

9 But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.

10 For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have ¶ erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

‡ Or, gallings one of another.

¶ Or, been seduced.

§ 602. The love of money the root of all evil.

The same Gospel which inclines masters to give liberty to their slaves, teaches slaves to be submissive to the power of their owners. For such was the state of servitude, and such were the servants signified, when this Epistle was written. Nor is this less true of the present time, in the duties of the two classes, master and servant; the master must be less inclined to assume authority, the servant more disposed to obey. This is that which either party gains by godliness; not advantage at the other's cost, but a temper that delights in the other's benefit. The master may not reason: Because the servant is taught to honour me, therefore I may more safely domineer. Nor may the servant conclude: If my master be an ill liver, I am better than he, and owe him no respect; or, if he be a Christian indeed, he is no more than my brother, and therefore we are on a footing of equality. This would be mere pride and ignorance, "questions and strifes of words whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds;" whose notion is, that godliness may be made a stepping stone to mere worldly advantages. From such let us withdraw ourselves, from such men, and from the notions which they hold; from all who either in this matter, or in any other, make religion the mere cloak of ambition or of avarice, of pride, or perversity, or party spirit. These are not the ends for which truth has been revealed, the truth which makes us free. See John 8. 32. This is not the liberty to which Christ has called us. See Gal. 5. 1. The master may not be oppressive; but neither must the servant be disrespectful. The creditor must be free to forgive the debtor; but the debtor is also exhorted, "owe no man any thing." Rom. 13. 8. He that is smitten on the one cheek is bidden to present the other. But woe be to him that smites. And though he whose goods are taken away is told not to exact them back again, see Luke 6. 30, yet the robber is also warned on the other hand, "let him that stole steal no more." Eph. 4. 28. Neither party may venture to take advantage of the piety of the other. Neither may dare to turn their own liberty into a cloak of maliciousness. See 1 Pet. 2. 16.

And yet "godliness with contentment is great gain." It is great gain in this world, as well as in the next; only not in respect of mere worldly advantages. It is in respect of peace, and joy, whether we have much or little, whether we be masters or servants, whether bond or free, it is in respect of peace such as this world cannot give, joy such as is a foretaste of the joy of heaven; it is in these things that the godly have the advantage over the wicked, it is in these that their gain is great. For they whose hearts are set on worldly wealth, "fall into temptation and a snare;" the temptation to dishonesty, the snare of taking anxious thought for the morrow. "And into many foolish and hurtful lusts;" foolish because all that wealth can bestow on earth, "all is vanity and vexation of spirit;" Eccles. 1. 14; hurtful, because it not only vexes them whilst here, but helps to drown them in endless destruction. "For the love of money is the root of all evil." Hence men become selfish instead of loving one another; hence lovers of gain more than lovers of God. Hence children are induced to dishonour their parents, that they may have more to enjoy for themselves. Hence wives are led astray to commit adultery. Hence thieves transgress and steal, nay stop not short of murder. Hence witnesses are ready to give false evidence. And sinners, who out of the fear of man, neither rob, nor murder, nor forswear, hence dare, in spite of God's command, to covet. Hence sabbath-breaking, hence perjury, abound. Hence even under Gospel light almost whole nations are idolaters, for covetousness is idolatry; yea, money is the covetous man's god. See Eph. 5. 5. Never may we suffer that root to be implanted in our hearts, which bears a tree so poisonous! Never may we covet gains which tend to error from the faith, and to pierce our hearts with endless woe! Never may we forget that as we brought nothing into this world, it is certain that we can carry nothing out! Never may we fail to be content with what we have, as long as we have food and raiment; nay also, if it be God's will, when we are destitute of both!

St. Paul exhorteth Timothy to be obedient.

11 But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12 Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

13 I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession;

14 That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ:

15 Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords;

16 Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man

|| Or, profession.

* Gr. uncertainty of riches.

† Or, sociable.

hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded, nor trust in * uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy;

18 That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, † willing to communicate;

19 Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called:

21 Which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

§ 603. How urgently we are charged to keep God's commandments.

With what earnestness does the apostle here counsel Timothy to be on his guard against the love of money! "Thou, O man of God, flee these things." Ill as it becomes any one who names the name of Christ to be greedy of gain, most of all is it a disgrace, most of all is it a snare of endless perdition, to those who are the ministers of his Gospel. With what anxiety, when he seemed to have finished his Epistle, did St. Paul revert to this same peril of covetousness, bidding Timothy charge all who possessed worldly wealth, that they trust not in their riches, but in the living God. So hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! So deeply did St. Paul feel for their danger and difficulty! So entirely did he, notwithstanding, rely on the promise that "the things which are impossible with men are possible with God." Luke 18. 27. "Charge them," this warning is always needful, and it will not be always without success, "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded." To have money and to trust in it, is as perilous as to have it not and to covet it. To love it, this is the sin. This is the sinfulness of the sinner. To trust in God, this is our safety. To be thankful to Him for what we have, to do good with what He has given us, to be rich not "in this world" but "in good works," to be more ready to give than to receive, to lay up by these means treasure in heaven; this is the way to lay hold on that eternal life, which God has given us for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord.

And for this it is not enough that we flee covetousness. We must also "follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness." We must "fight the good fight of faith." We must consider how we have been called unto eternal life, and have professed the good profession before many witnesses, even when we were dedicated to Christ, before the church in baptism. This is that godliness which is great gain; not merely to keep clean from pollution of evil, but to advance in all that is good. To be always in pursuit of all that is most excellent. To follow with the same eagerness as they that hunt for prey, with the speed and perseverance of them that pursue a flying enemy, to follow after all God's commandments to do them, after all his truth to believe it, after all his love, patience, and forbearance, to be as He is, to love as He has loved us, to be patient and meek to one another, as He has been long suffering to usward.

But what a contest is this for us to sustain, what a battle for us to fight, what a calling for us to answer unto, what a profession for us to put in practice! Let us help ourselves by laying to heart the solemn charge which St. Paul has here given to Timothy. Let us consider ourselves as entrusted with these commandments in the sight of God our Father, and in the presence of Christ Jesus our Saviour, who for our sakes "before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession." Let us consider that we are to keep this commandment "without spot," and set ourselves no half and half obedience, sure to lead to no obedience at all. Let us persevere in keeping it unrebukeable, "until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." That day is at hand. That appearing God will make manifest in due season. Let us therefore keep with care that which is committed to our trust, the true doctrines of the Gospel; and lay out with a view to heavenly gain, that which is of no other real use on earth, the mammon of unrighteousness. Far be it from us either to err "concerning the faith," or to transgress in this matter of practice! The one is nearly connected with the other. The most sound doctrine binds to the most holy living. Whilst they who hold for doctrines the commandments of men, are least likely to pay reverence to the will of God.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY. 1. 1—10.

St. Paul prayeth for Timothy, and exhorteth him.

1 Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus,

2 To Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

3 I thank God whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;

4 Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy;

5 When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice, and I am persuaded that in thee also.

6 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

7 For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.

8 Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God;

9 Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began;

10 But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel:

§ 604. How we ought to stir up in one another the gift of God.

This is known to be one of the last in order of all St. Paul's Epistles. It was written during his imprisonment at Rome, probably near the time when he suffered martyrdom. Whilst persecution was at its height, when many out of the fear of man were falling away from faith in Christ, and when the apostle was expecting daily his own turn to suffer, he writes to his beloved Timothy, for the purpose of confirming him in the Gospel. Happy was this aged servant of the Lord, who in the midst of tribulation still could glory in the name of the Lord's apostle, who could be glad to think that this his office was "by the will of God," and who was sure that whatever suffering it might expose him to on earth, it was his way to enjoy "the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus!" And happy was his son Timothy, dearly beloved in Christ, to receive the prayer of the apostle's dying lips, that he might have "grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord!" Let this be the kind of blessing we crave from our parents, when they offer their last prayer in our behalf. Let us remember to use words like these ourselves, when death summons us to part from our own children.

From St. Paul we may here further learn what things are fit matters of thanksgiving. He thanks God for his having remembered Timothy in his prayers. Let us pray that we may be thankful. Let us give thanks, if we have prayed, let us give thanks that we have had grace to pray. Let us give thanks that we have been enabled to remember in our prayers the friends whom most we love, whom most we desire to see, those of whom we have most ground to hope that they have in them faith unfeigned. The apostle says of himself that he served God from his forefathers, meaning that his parents and family had been devout servants of God. And of Timothy he makes mention of the faithfulness which dwelt first in his grandmother Lois, and in his mother Eunice. Well is it with those children whose mother is a devout servant of Christ. Well is it with those mothers who carefully bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord!

But if we have joy in remembering these things of our friends, let us so much the more earnestly call on them to stir up the gift of God which is in them. From the midst of tribulation, if it be our lot to suffer trouble for righteousness' sake, let us assure them that God has not given us the spirit of fear, let us exhort them to aim at getting, as his gift from heaven, the spirit "of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." Let us urge them not to be "ashamed of the testimony of our Lord," nor of those who suffer evil for his sake; but rather to be partakers "of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God," who is able to make them rejoice in tribulation. Think, let us say to such as seem likely to draw back, or at least not eager to come forward, think how great God's power is, how able He is to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. Consider, He "hath saved us." Consider, He hath "called us with an holy calling." See how it is "not according to our works," evil as they are usually, and unprofitable at the best, "but according to his own purpose and grace," a purpose beyond our skill to fathom, a free gift of grace beyond our understanding to conceive, "which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." And now behold it is made manifest. The mystery is in Christ made clear. Christ has by his death "abolished death." By his Gospel He has "brought life and immortality to light." Who then would not gladly suffer affliction with his people for a season, that they may rejoice with Him for ever? Who would not here even die if it were needful, much more endure scorn and cruelty, that they may live with Him and with his saints, in glory, and honour, and immortality?

St. Paul is not ashamed.

11 Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

12 For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless, I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have || believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

13 Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

14 That good thing, which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost, which dwelleth in us.

15 This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

16 The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain:

17 But when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me.

18 The Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day: and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

|| Or, trusted.

§ 605. Warning and encouragement.

There is scarcely anything more difficult in suffering adversity, than not to be ashamed of it. Whether it be imprisonment, or stripes, whether loss of fortune or of friends, that we are called upon to endure, in any case, pride prompts us to conceal our affliction, pride teaches us to suppress our tears. But see how different is the influence of the Gospel. See how different is the practice of St. Paul. "Nevertheless I am not ashamed." I glory in having been "appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles." I glory in having been privileged to suffer for this cause. I deny not that I feel these sufferings. I care not who knows that I am a prisoner, I am confined as a malefactor, and likely to be put to death as a traitor. Nay, rather I care that all should know it. I would have all men see how great is the power of faith. I would have all men be aware that "I know whom I have believed," and that this knowledge gives me confidence in suffering; for "I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." What matter a few reproaches for a season, the loss of worldly goods, or liberty, or life, if we have treasure secure in heaven? The body may suffer hardship, but the soul is safe; nay, body and soul shall both live together in joy for ever. Our earthly home may be given to another, or our earthly house of this tabernacle may be dissolved. But we have another and a better home, amongst the many mansions of our heavenly Father; we have prepared for us a building of God, a house eternal in the heavens. See 2 Cor. 5. 1.

But in order for us to feel this confidence, how absolutely is it needful that we continue steadfast in the truth, that we "hold fast the form of sound words," the same as those in which Timothy was instructed by St. Paul, "in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus!" How steadfastly, if we would enjoy this boldness before men, and this hope towards God, how steadfastly must we keep that good thing which has been committed unto us, keep it "by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us." Yes, we are entrusted with a sacred deposit. We have had committed unto us the truth as it is in Jesus. We are bound to preserve it pure, for our own use. We are bound to hand it down unto our children after us, without aught added thereto or taken therefrom. Yes; the Holy Ghost "dwelleth in us." God has given us also of his Spirit. He is in us, strengthening us. He will make us able to hold fast the profession of our faith, "steadfast unto the end." Heb. 3. 14.

But let us take warning. There were some that fell away from the faith, turning away from the apostle, when he was in bondage, falling away from the faith when it was under persecution. Let us take warning. Though the Holy Ghost dwell in us, we are liable to be seduced into grieving and resisting Him. We need to be exhorted to activity, watchfulness, and perseverance, lest we be likened unto "all them which are in Asia," lest we be numbered with "Phygellus and Hermogenes." And whilst on the one hand we derive a salutary fear from the backsliding of the faithless, let us on the other derive a cheerful hope from the many instances on record of the courage and fidelity in them that have persevered. Onesiphorus oft refreshed the apostle, in his bonds. He was not ashamed of the apostle's bondage. In Rome, that great capital, full of pomps and vanities, he sought out the prisoner very diligently, and found him. At Ephesus too, where the apostle had been in utmost jeopardy, he ministered to him in many things. May we be hence encouraged to persevere in well doing. May we prefer to seek the prisoner, and to minister to his wants, though it be to our loss or risk, rather than to enjoy safety and advantage with them that are at large. And may the Lord, who alone can give us the heart thus to visit, as He describes it, Himself in prison, may the Lord grant unto us, that we may find mercy in that day, when He shall say: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25. 40.

How much is required of a minister.

1 Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.

2 And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also.

3 Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

4 No man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

5 And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

6 * The husbandman that laboureth, must be first partaker of the fruits.

7 Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.

8 Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead, according to my gospel:

|| Or, by.

9 Wherein I suffer trouble as an evildoer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound.

10 Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory.

11 It is a faithful saying: For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

12 If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us:

13 If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.

14 Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord, that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

15 Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

* Or, The husbandman, labouring first, must be partaker of the fruits.

§ 606. God's faithfulness in rewards and punishments.

In the ordinance of ministers we see provision for the perpetual remembrance of the Gospel. "The things which thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." And were it not for this ordinance we could easily conceive that even these best of tidings would be forgotten among mankind. So averse is the human heart to spiritual things! So prone are the children of men to overlook the chief mercies they have received! So few are found capable of feeling that it is a pleasant thing to be thankful! So incomplete for this purpose was the written word, especially at a time when few could read! So often, even in the hands of able readers, do the Scriptures lie neglected and dishonoured, until the living minister, faithful to his trust, forces on the attention his precious but unwelcome message, and persuades those who will receive it to hear and live!

But "who is sufficient for these things?" 2 Cor. 2. 16. How many excellencies are required of him who should be well qualified to minister to his brethren! To "be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus;" not to work in his own strength, but to "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," Eph. 6. 10, this is of the first importance. To "endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ;" this also is most needful in a minister, that he should shrink from no difficulty, flinch from no pain, in the discharge of his appointed duty. He must not entangle himself with the affairs of this life; being herein also likened unto a soldier, whose sole business on earth is to obey the will of his commander. He must work, not according to his own will, but in compliance with the settled order of the ministry; being herein like a wrestler in the games, who is "not crowned, except he strive lawfully." He must be diligent and persevering in his work, without expecting to see at once any adequate return; like the husbandman, who labouring first, is not till afterwards partaker of the fruits. (See marginal reading.) And as a skilful workman, whether in husbandry, or in any other business, is known by his work being straight and even; so he who has to minister "the word of truth," must shew himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, by the skill, readiness, and correctness, with which he handles and expounds the oracles of God.

Here we have some of the chief things insisted on, of which the faithful minister is to put the rest in remembrance. "Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead." "If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him: if we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Such is the salvation which is offered to the elect, even that "which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory." And let us hear also what is their condemnation: "if we deny him, he also will deny us: if we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself." No. It is no impeachment of God's faithfulness, if out of those whom He has called, some will not hear, if out of those whom He has chosen to partake of endless glory, some love the darkness rather. "He abideth faithful." He fulfils all that He has promised. Nay, his faithfulness is also shewn in this, that He inflicts the woe which He has threatened. "He cannot deny himself." He cannot unsay what He has once plainly declared: "whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 10. 33. There is after death "the judgment." Heb. 9. 27. He who died for us, and was raised from the dead, He is to be our Judge. This is the barrier which He has firmly set up, against all abuse of his boundless love. He died that we might be reconciled to the Father, admitted to the inheritance of the saints in light. He lives, not only that He may be glorified in them that believe, but also that He may judge the world in righteousness.

Timothy is instructed what to shun and what to follow.

16 But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness.

17 And their word will eat as doth a || canker: of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus;

18 Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some.

19 Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth † sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

20 But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

21 If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work.

22 Flee also youthful lusts: but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart.

23 But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

24 And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, ‡ patient,

25 In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth;

26 And that they may ¶ recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are § taken captive by him at his will.

|| Or, gangrene.

† Or, steady.

‡ Or, forbearing.

§ Gr. taken alive.

Most important are these instructions to ministers of the Gospel, most valuable to all Christians who desire to let their light shine before men, and to practise for God's glory, an edifying conversation. We must shun profane and vain babblings; "for they will increase unto more ungodliness." We must watch that we never join carelessly in worldly conference, so as to sanction by our assent, or even by our silence, the false and fatal principles of the world. These things propagate evil from one to another. Words such as these "eat as doth a canker." And especially when worldly notions are suffered to contaminate religious topics, when the truths of the Gospel are discussed, for the amusement of the mind, and not for the edification of the soul, then the faith of some is overturned, then the faith of many is endangered. For then the parties talking are apt to be seeking out not what is most true, most affecting, most improving; but what is most ingenious, most astonishing, most new. And "man, whose breath is in his nostrils," Isa. 2. 22, whose life hangs upon a thread, spends the present, the only moment which he can call his own, in trifling with the concerns of eternity.

But though some should by means like these be moved from this spiritual building the church of Christ, "the foundation of God standeth sure." And as it was declared by Moses, in the case of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram: "The Lord will shew who are his, and who is holy;" and again, "Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men;" Numb. 16. 5, 26; so in this house of God, the Christian church, it is no less strictly true that "the Lord knoweth them that are his," it is no less absolutely required that "every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." God cannot be deceived by pretence of righteousness, whilst the heart is far from Him. God knows in his own house which vessels are "of gold and of silver," which "of wood and of earth," which "to honour," and which "to dishonour." It is required of us that we keep ourselves clean from the contamination of false doctrine and faulty practice, if we would be "vessels unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work." Let us then "flee youthful lusts," both those sins of the flesh, and those extravagant imaginations of the heart, which in the time of youth most struggle for the mastery. Let us follow, for behold Christ leads the way, let us follow "righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart." St. Paul would by no means have either Timothy or us stand still in our Christian progress. We must flee, and also we must follow. Sin is in pursuit. Need we yet another spur? Holiness and happiness are before us. Oh how can we stay to talk of trifles, or talk in a trifling manner of heavenly realities, when we have hell behind us, and heaven before, when earth is ready to vanish away, and God is waiting to be gracious to us for ever?

Of these things let us converse, seriously and affectionately, under the conviction that they deeply concern our own souls, and the everlasting welfare of our brethren. This is true learning, this real wisdom, to learn the way of peace, to be wise unto salvation. These are questions which gender not strife, but harmony, "What must I do to be saved?" Acts 16. 30. How may we best escape the wrath to come? How may we most love each other and our Lord? On these things, and such as these, let us dwell long and often in mutual conference. And if there be any that oppose themselves to the truth, let us not strive with them in contention of words, but instruct them in meekness; speaking not as if the truth were doubtful, as if its victory were merely gainful to ourselves, but as if we were wishing it to prevail for the sake of those whom we instruct, who are "taken captive by Satan at his will," even as he delights to have it, and who can recover themselves only if God "give them repentance," a new heart and mind, "to the acknowledging of the truth."

That there must be perilous times in the last days.

1 This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come.

2 For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

3 Without natural affection, trucebreakers, || false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

4 Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;

5 Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.

6 For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts,

7 Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

8 Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, † reprobate concerning the faith.

9 But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as their's also was.

|| Or, makebates.

† Or, of no judgment.

10 But ‡ thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience,

11 Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me.

12 Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

13 But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

14 But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;

15 And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

16 All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;

17 That the man of God may be perfect, ¶ thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

‡ Or, thou hast been a diligent follower of.

¶ Or, perfected.

§ 608. Scripture the guide of life.

The holy Scriptures take frequent occasion of warning us, that notwithstanding all God's goodness in the Gospel, "iniquity shall abound." Matt. 24. 12. We need not wonder therefore that it has hitherto abounded. We must expect as years go on, and we are further advanced in the last days, the times will be more perilous, the abundance of iniquity will be greater. We have been warned. Let us beware. Let us watch lest we be selfish, greedy of gain, boastful, haughty, apt to take God's name in vain, apt to disobey our parents, averse to give thanks, averse to be holy. Let us watch that we cherish natural affection, are faithful to our agreements, bear no false witness against our neighbour, set all due restraint upon ourselves, are meek instead of fierce, and love those that are good, instead of despising them. Let us watch that we never betray them that repose trust in us, that we be not headstrong, arrogant, more fond of pleasure than of God, and practically gainsayers of the power of godliness, at the very time when we maintain its outward form. Against these things let us be on our guard in ourselves. From such as do these things let us "turn away;" even from such as use the cloak of religion to gain an influence in the domestic circle, especially addressing themselves to the weaker sex, and amongst them to the most unstable; being themselves "reprobate concerning the faith."

Now let it not be supposed, that herein one single country only, or one single age, or one single religious community is intended. This is the fallacy which men commonly adopt, because it shifts the peril, or seems to do so, from themselves to their brethren. But how without precaution shall we ourselves escape? And what precaution are we likely to take, unless we be convinced of danger? Have we not in our own time, and amongst ourselves, instances very numerous of the enormities here insisted on? Have we not among the members of our own community the selfish, the proud, the covetous, the dissipated, the hypocrite? Is the time yet come that they proceed no further? Is their folly yet manifest to all men? Are not many amongst ourselves in grievous ignorance of the doctrine, and life, and temper of the apostle; more inclined to join in persecuting than to sympathize with them that are persecuted? Is it not amongst ourselves now true, that all who resolve to live godly in Christ Jesus suffer more or less of persecution?

These things prove that heresies in practice are current among professors of the orthodox faith. These things incline us to turn for our instruction from the fallible creeds of men, to the unerring word of God. Happy are they, who from childhood have known the holy Scriptures! Happy are they, who in this heavenly treasury of learning, have gained that wisdom which is "unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." This is the key which unlocks all difficulties, all that for our well being need to be unlocked. This is the sun that lightens all darkness, that warms all coldness of affection. This is the faithful monitor which at once teaches truth and exposes error, which brings sin to reproof, and instructs sinners in righteousness. This is the compass to which the minister resorts to keep him steady in his course and perfect in his reckoning; and to which each single voyager has access, for help toward his safe arrival.

Thanks be to God for this his precious gift, for this his holy inspiration! God grant that by this help we may be kept safe amidst the perils of the times, in unity of Spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of life!

St. Paul sheweth how to restrain false teachers.

1 I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;

2 Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine.

3 For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

4 And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.

5 But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, || make full proof of thy ministry.

6 For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.

7 I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:

8 Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

|| Or, fulfil.

§ 609. The Christian triumphant in death.

How fully is the time now come, when many among professing Christians will not endure sound doctrine! How manifestly is often now fulfilled this lively description, that "having itching ears" they "heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts!" How plainly in some instances have we seen these awful consequences, that they "turn away their ears from the truth," and are "turned unto fables!" No imposture seems too gross for their credulity. No false doctrine too monstrous for their endurance. They who will not put up with the truth of God, and object to the difficulty of a saving faith, choose eagerly the tenfold difficulties of error and unbelief, swallow greedily the baits of Satan, by which he takes them captive at his will. So closely are connected, in these deluded men, a taste for false doctrine, and a disposition to heap to themselves teachers! So often do the same minds spurn the wholesome authority of the true church, and implicitly submit to the dictation of a minister who has no appointment but their own!

And what now is the remedy which St. Paul proposes, or rather the measures which he enjoins on Timothy, for the prevention of these grievous enormities? Are we to profess, under the name of liberality, a careless indifference to the truth? Or are we to practise, under the colour of promoting conformity, the persecution of them that are in error? No. He charges his son Timothy, and through him all ministers to the end of time, he charges them in the most solemn manner, "before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and doctrine." The two must be united. Sound doctrine and patient behaviour must go hand in hand. The excellency of what is taught must be enforced by the charity, by the temper, by the faithfulness, watchfulness, diligence and perseverance of the teacher. If he would banish error, he must preach the truth. If he would obviate irregularities, he must himself be ready, as each priest in our church has promised, "to use both public and private admonitions and exhortations, as well to the sick as to the whole," within his cure, "as need shall require, and occasion shall be given." (See the Ordering of Priests.) He must reprove, though it be tenderly. He must rebuke, though it be affectionately. He must watch in all things, at all hours, in all places, that he lose no opportunity of setting forward the salvation of the people committed to his charge. He must make full proof of his ministry; justifying, by his zeal, and faithfulness, and ability, by his steadiness, activity, and love, the divine commission with which he has been entrusted. This is the way, in which the duly appointed ministers of the church must meet the prevalent propensity of the people, to heap to themselves teachers, and to reject sound doctrine. They must not admit these things to be matters of indifference, nor treat those who do these things as guiltless; but at once convince them of sin by the faithful exposition of the truth, and win them by plain proofs of unaffected love to consider their ways, and amend their doings.

And see how cheering is the prospect which awaits these faithful labourers in the vineyard of their Lord! See how glorious a testimony St. Paul has left on record for the encouragement not of ministers alone, but of all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity!" Eph. 6. 24. God grant that when the time of our departure is at hand, we may feel that we are "ready to be offered!" God grant, that when we have finished our course, we may be enabled to feel that we have fought the "good fight," and "have kept the faith!" God support us in that hour with the triumphant thought that henceforth there is laid up for us "a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give" us "at that day!" God enable us to rejoice in the persuasion that this glory will be given not to us only, "but unto all them also that love his appearing!" Oh let us look for, and long for, and pray for the advent of our Lord! "Thy kingdom come," Matt. 6. 10, let us in earnest say, "Even so, come Lord Jesus." Rev. 22. 20. Thou hast been the chief of our delight on earth; oh be Thou soon our portion in heaven! Here it has been our purest joy to glorify thy name! Oh may we there soon join with saints and angels to sing the song of the Lamb for ever!

St. Paul sendeth messages and greetings.

9 Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me:

10 For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia.

11 Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

12 And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.

13 The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.

14 Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works:

15 Of whom he thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood || our words.

16 At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17 Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known; and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.

18 And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever Amen.

19 Salute Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus.

20 Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

21 Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

22 The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

|| Or, our preachings.

§ 610. How we must use this world out of regard to the next.

Though St. Paul was "now ready to be offered," though the severity of the persecution now raging was enough to give him the impression that the time of his departure was "at hand," ver. 6, he still took sufficient interest in "this present world," to send these various directions and greetings to Timothy. "Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me." He was anxious for the presence of his friend. "Demas hath forsaken me." He was concerned for the falling away of a disciple. That Crescens was in Galatia, Titus in Dalmatia, and only Luke with him, that he wished for Mark to come, that he had sent away Tychicus, that he was in need of a certain cloak, and books, and parchments, how Alexander had withstood his words, how he had fared at his "first answer" when put upon his trial, whom he would have saluted, and who desired to greet Timothy, these things and others like them, he counted not unworthy of mention, at a time when he was writing his last words to Timothy, and daily expecting his summons to another world.

Hence it appears that as long as we are on the earth we ought to give due attention to earthly things. Whatsoever our hand findeth to do, we ought to do it with all our might. See Eccles. 2. 10. Only we must not love this present world. In this lies all the difference. This it was that led Demas to forsake the apostle in his troubles, and probably also to forsake his Lord. His affection was set on things below. Whereas St. Paul could write and think of earthly things with a heart still true to heaven. Thus when he bids Timothy bring Mark, he proves how thoroughly he had forgotten their former difference. When he adds, "for he is profitable to me for the ministry," he shews how uppermost in his mind was the success of the Gospel. The cloak and books he may have mentioned thus particularly, that he might be the less burdensome to his friends at Rome; seeing that in the most trifling matters there is no meanness in being careful to use what is our own, rather than to bring expense upon our brethren. Or it may be that he meant to use them as proofs that he was a citizen of Rome; teaching us not to court persecution, but to protect ourselves by all lawful means. If he mentioned the harm done to him by Alexander the coppersmith, this was in order to warn Timothy of his evil disposition, and at the same time to express the conformity of his own will to the will of God, in that matter so repugnant to flesh and blood, the punishment of the wicked in the day of the Lord. And if he noticed how at the judgment seat of men all forsook him, this was in order to pray for their forgiveness; this was in order to testify how God had strengthened him, how by him the Gospel had been then further made known; this was in order to declare his joyful conviction, that the same Lord who had delivered him from the lions of the earth, would save him from the cruel enemy of souls, and preserve him "unto his heavenly kingdom."

Let us then thus enter into our worldly business, and it will help instead of hindering us in our heavenly pilgrimage. To do good continually, to rejoice in the Lord always, to be always working the leaven of the Gospel into the lifeless mass of the world, these are the very ends for which we live in the world at all; these are things which may well engage our thoughts, up to the hour when we depart this life. We must glorify Christ on earth, if we would hope to share his glory in heaven. We must love those of whom we trust that they love Him, we must love all, for we are assured that He loves all; we must feel sympathy in their sorrows, and rejoice in their joys; if we hope to spend eternity in the love of one another. Nay, how can we expect that we shall then have perfect bliss, if we cannot bear to think, aye, and also attain to wish, what we know is God's will, and what we believe will then be fulfilled, in entire consistency with his love, that He will reward the wicked according to their works?

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TITUS. 1. 1—9.

St. Paul saluteth Titus ; sendeth instructions.

1 Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth, which is after godliness ;

2 || In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began ;

3 But hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is committed unto me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour ;

4 To Titus mine own son after the common faith : Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are † wanting,

7 For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God ; not selfwilled, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre ;

8 But a lover of hospitality, a lover of ‡ good men, sober, just, holy, temperate ;

9 Holding fast the faithful word, ¶ as he hath been taught, that he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

§ 611. Of bishops and elders.

In ancient times, the writer of a letter usually put his name at the beginning of it, as we now do commonly at the end. And St. Paul takes this opportunity of setting forth these titles of his, in which he chiefly gloried, "a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ." At the same time he declares in what way he served God, and what was the end of his being sent by Christ as his apostle. It was to establish "the faith of God's elect," of those whom God had chosen to be believers in his Son. It was for "the acknowledging of the truth, which is after godliness;" for the testifying to those true doctrines, which alone produce holiness of life. It was in the hope of that crown of glory which God of old engaged Himself to give unto his people, but which has not been known of, at all times, or by all men ; God the Father having reserved the times and the seasons in his own power, see Acts 1. 7, and God the Son our Saviour having given his commandment at this time to the apostles, and having committed to them the office of manifesting his word through preaching. Let us thank God that to our ears this sound has reached, that to us this truth has been manifested. Let us pray, that as we have heard the things which God has revealed, we may attain to the eternal life which He has promised.

St. Paul's description of himself, in his letter, is not after the usual manner of such as write themselves the servants of those whom they address, but "the servant of God." And instead of a mere message of civility to Titus, he salutes his "own son after the common faith," with "grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour." Let us endeavour to think of these things when we write to one another, when we wish for one another, when we pray for one another. Let us endeavour not only to think of them, but to write of them, to speak of them. What hinders, if we really believe them to be as excellent as they are, what hinders our desiring them as earnestly as we ought ? What hinders, if we earnestly desire them, what hinders our often thinking of them, wishing for them, and holding converse with each other about them ? What but our own sinfulness, our consciousness that our own lives are inconsistent with holiness of speech ? What but our apprehension that those with whom we converse have no taste for any such conversation ?

St. Paul had left Titus in Crete, for this cause, that he should set in order the things that were wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as the apostle had appointed him. He appears to have had an authority delegated from the apostle to establish on a proper footing the whole Christian community throughout the island. The elders to be ordained seem to be the same who are in this same passage called bishops ; the names being applied indifferently to the same office. In which case they correspond with those whom we now call priests. Or it may be, that the qualifications of the two offices of elder and bishop, are here enumerated together, as being in so many respects the same. But whatever were the exact offices expressed by these two names, and in whatever degree they correspond to the ranks of ministers amongst ourselves, thus much we may do well to learn from the apostle's words, that ministers must be commissioned by such as have power so to do, and that they must be exemplary in their own lives and families, obedient to authority, as well as able to rule, irreproachable as being God's stewards, conquerors over the world, the flesh, and the devil, stedfast in the faith, and able both to defend and to enforce it.

God give unto his church ministers such as these in abundance ! God give unto his people grace to wait upon their ministry ! God help all, both ministers and people, to hold fast, as they have been taught, the faithful word, and to attain eternal life !

Testimony against the Cretians.

10 For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision:

11 Whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake.

12 One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are alway liars, evil beasts, slow bellies.

13 This witness is true. Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith;

14 Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth.

15 Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

16 They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work || reprobate.

|| Or, void of judgment.

§ 612. Unto the pure all things are pure.

What an awful account is this given of the Cretians, by "one of themselves, even a prophet of their own:" "The Cretians are alway liars, evil beasts, slow bellies!" Men whose god was their belly, see Phil. 3, 19, living in sloth and sensuality, like beasts of prey to each other in cruelty, and worse than wild beasts in being also false! And this testimony is confirmed by the apostle. "This witness is true." And no less true is it at this moment of great numbers of mankind, who are living like the Cretians of old, ignorant of the truth, and given up to all manner of iniquity. Oh how can we regard with so little of anxiety this degraded condition of our fellow creatures! How is it that we do so little, give so little, pray so little, for their improvement in all things needful unto happiness? What could be more delightful than to minister to their improvement? What sight can be more glorious than a Christian church growing up in the midst of a savage community? Such was the case in Crete at the time when St. Paul wrote to Titus. Such was the work in which Titus was engaged; implanting in these rude Cretians a love of truth instead of a taste for falsehood, gentleness instead of cruelty towards each other, and in themselves diligence, sobriety, temperance, and chastity. Such is the work which is now ready to our hands in almost every quarter of the globe; millions and millions of mankind, perishing for lack of that saving truth, which we in very many instances are neither ourselves thankful for, nor anxious to communicate to our brethren.

But when the good seed is well sown, will the field bear nothing but good fruit? or will there not be tares * among the wheat? some weeds such as were in the field before, and some also which would probably not have been there, unless the wheat had been sown? Even in a Christian community there are many who are unruly, many vain talkers, and deceivers, as were especially they of the circumcision in Crete; many who need faithful and able ministers to silence them, and who would else "subvert whole houses," bring whole families into spiritual ruin, teaching, for their own gain's sake, the very things which they ought to denounce. Such are the abuses which are cloaked under the cover of the Gospel. Such are the pernicious practices which creep in amongst professors of the truth, to their own injury, and to the scandal of the rest. "Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith." Such is the authority which St. Paul gave to Titus. Such is the treatment which he prescribed for the correction of the offenders. Such is the end for which alone he would allow any such correction. Let us note that in a church formed after the plan of the apostle, there must be a power to rebuke sharply. Let us learn to respect any such power which now exists in the church to which we belong. Let us help, by our submission and concurrence, by our good wishes, and above all by our prayers, to render it effectual for this important end, the making such as are in error "sound in the faith."

And here let us see how large and wide is the difference between being sound and unsound, holy and unholy, between being pure and being defiled. "To the pure all things are pure." They who are pure in heart, they whose hearts are fixed with singleness of affection upon God, and upon the doing of his will, may set at nought all such scruples as were suggested by "Jewish fables, and commandments of men." They are welcome to the enjoyment of all God's creatures upon earth, as far as they can enjoy them consistently with their supreme enjoyment of Himself. "But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure." To them therefore these traditional distinctions of the Jews, and the genuine commandments of God, were alike unprofitable. All things pollute them "whose mind and conscience is defiled." All things, even their pretended service unto God, defile them, who whilst they profess to know Him, are "unto every good work reprobate."

Certain things which become sound doctrine.

1 But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine :

2 That the aged men be || sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience.

3 The aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh † holiness, not ‡ false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things ;

4 That they may teach the young women to be ¶ sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed.

6 Young men likewise exhort to be § sober minded.

7 In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works : in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity,

8 Sound speech, that cannot be condemned ; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

|| Or, vigilant.

† Or, holy women.

‡ Or, makebates.

¶ Or, wise.

§ Or, discreet.

* Or, gainsaying.

||| Or, that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared.

9 Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things ; not * answering again ;

10 Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity ; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

11 For the grace of God ||| that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world ;

13 Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ ;

14 Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

15 These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

§ 613. The connexion of doctrine and practice.

In what various and affecting points of view do the Scriptures continually press upon our attention the connexion between sound faith and holy practice ! “ The grace of God that bringeth salvation,” making provision for all men to be saved, “ hath appeared,” has been manifested, by the preaching of the Gospel. Hence we have been taught to deny ourselves in sin, to advance ourselves in holiness, and to watch for the coming of our Lord. He “ gave himself,” a sacrifice for our sins. But this was on purpose that “ he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.” And the things which become sound doctrine are these, that the aged men adorn their years with piety, the aged women with activity in the instruction of the young ; that the young men be sober minded ; that ministers be examples of the good works they have to preach ; that servants also avoid the faults to which they are most liable, and adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things. Who can doubt then that it is God’s intent in revealing the forgiveness of sins, to make us watchful that we sin no more ? Who dare interpret his covenant of mercy, as if it did not bind us, by the most forcible of all ties, to be zealous of good works ?

No, let us study always how we may best fulfil God’s will, how we may most adorn Christ’s doctrine. Are we advanced in age ? Let us be sober, and temperate ; proving that we are now weaned from the enjoyments of a world which we so soon must leave. Let us be in our faith steadfast to the truth, in our charity and patience conformable to our faith. “ The aged women likewise,” let these avoid excess, control the tongue which longs to bear false witness, and employ themselves in teaching the young that holiness which they themselves have learnt to practise. Let young women be distinguished for their love of home, of their husbands, and of their children, for their sobriety, discretion, modesty, purity, and obedient disposition. Let servants who have learnt to love their Lord which is in heaven, be so much the more obedient unto their masters, which are on the earth, so much the more anxious to please them in all things lawful, so much the more watchful not to wrangle when found fault with, not to appropriate to themselves their masters’ goods, so much the more intent to manifest where their conduct can be seen, and also to exercise in secret before God, “ all good fidelity.” And let such as minister in things holy shew themselves to the rest “ a pattern of good works ;” especially in respect of doctrine that they maintain it pure, in point of manner that they be grave and serious, in point of speech that they be sincere, unaffected, unproveable ; and in point of authority that they so exhort and so rebuke as that no one shall despise them.

And let all, whether old or young, whether masters or servants, whether ministers or people, let all deny “ ungodliness and worldly lusts ;” let all “ live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world ;” let all look for “ that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing” of that great One, who is “ God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.” Let us think of his great love in giving “ himself for us.” Let us lay to heart his object, “ that he might redeem us from all iniquity.” Let us promote his gracious design in our behalf, “ that he might purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.” Are we thus zealous ? Are we thus unlike the world ? Are we distinguished not merely by our tenets, but by our practice ; not merely by some few outward observances, but by the whole tenour of our lives ? If so, we are adorning the doctrine of our Saviour. If not, we have reason to fear, that the more correctly we know his doctrine, and the more resolutely we profess it, we are but aggravating our sinfulness, and increasing our condemnation.

St. Paul further sheweth Titus what to teach.

1 Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work,

2 To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all men.

3 For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

4 But after that the kindness and ||love of God our Saviour toward man appeared,

5 Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

6 Which he shed on us † abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

7 That being justified by his grace, we should be heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

8 This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

9 But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

10 A man that is an heretick after the first and second admonition reject;

11 Knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

12 When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter.

13 Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them.

14 And let our's also learn to ‡ maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful.

15 All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

‡ Or, profess honest trades.

§ 614. That we must be careful to maintain good works.

The connexion between sound doctrine and holy practice is here further enforced. The sound doctrines insisted on are these, our own lost condition by nature, our salvation through Christ, "by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;" the abundant gift of the Spirit, the being justified freely, the being made heirs of heaven. Let us endeavour to be sensible of what we were by nature. Let us examine what we are now, and we shall probably find traces in abundance still remaining of folly, that worst of folly, the forgetting God, of disobedience against his will, of our being deceived by Satan, of our "serving divers lusts and pleasures," of our "living in malice and envy," of our being "hateful, and hating one another." And in this condition, in these evil tempers, we should have altogether lived, grown old, and died, had not God in his mercy called us to a Christian life: Oh how great is our gain, in any the least progress that we have made in turning from sin to holiness! Oh how infinitely great will be our joy, if ever through the tender mercy of our God we should be delivered from our remaining iniquities!

But let us examine further how far we are now delivered, how much has been done for us, how much in us. As far as God is concerned, all things needful have been done. His kindness and love have been made manifest. He has saved us, not indeed by works of ours, but of his own free mercy. He has put us into a state of salvation at our baptism, by a new birth, even by the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Of this Holy Spirit God has shed on us the abundant gift, whereby we become holy as He is holy, and pure as He is pure. And by this means, we, having been justified by God's grace, are fitted to be partakers of the inheritance of heaven. These are true sayings. This is sound doctrine; genuine in itself, and also, wholesome for mankind. These things St. Paul would have constantly affirmed, about these things he would have us be frequent, and full, and firm in our profession of faith, in order "that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works."

Lastly, therefore, whilst we insist on this only safe foundation, whilst we endeavour to lay it deep, and broad, and strong; let us be diligent to build upon it the building God delights in, a holy and religious life. To be submissive to lawful authority, to be active in doing good, to refrain from censure and from wrangling, to be meek, and to make manifest our meekness unto all men; these are but few of the many fruits of righteousness which must be nurtured by the root of faith. How great then would be our loss, how sensibly ought we to feel our danger, if we should be tempted to substitute for the truth of Christ the unprofitable devices of men! How carefully ought we to avoid the perilous communion of "a man that is an heretick," one who rejects the truth as revealed by God, and chooses his own religion for himself! Such an one is "condemned of himself," convicted by his own conscience, of self conceit and disobedience. Such an one, after due admonition and rebuke, ought to be rejected from the communion of the church. Most miserable case, to be cut off from friendly intercourse and spiritual fellowship with holy men on earth, and with saints in heaven! How much is it to be desired that some such punishment were now regarded with salutary fear, that some such wholesome discipline were now practised with merciful severity! Oh that whilst we refrain from punishing ourselves, God may send us, when needful for our good, such affliction as He sees fit! Oh that He may now chasten us in mercy for a season, and not give us up to destruction for ever!

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO PHILEMON.

St. Paul intercedeth with Philemon for Onesimus.

1 Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon, our dearly beloved, and fellowlabourer,

2 And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellowsoldier, and to the church in thy house:

3 Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers,

5 Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;

6 That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus.

7 For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother.

8 Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient,

9 Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such an one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

10 I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds:

11 Which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

12 Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels:

13 Whom I would have retained with me; that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel:

14 But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

15 For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever; .

16 Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh and in the Lord?

17 If thou count me therefore a partner, receive him as myself.

18 If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account;

19 I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

20 Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh my bowels in the Lord.

21 Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

22 But withal prepare me also a lodging: for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you.

23 There salute thee Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner, in Christ Jesus;

24 Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers.

25 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

§ 615. How we ought to plead with one another for good.

In this Epistle we see St. Paul entreating as a favour, that which he had authority to command as a duty: namely, that Philemon should receive back with kindness his runaway slave Onesimus, now converted to the faith of Christ. And thus also God Himself often condescends to persuade, and reason, and intercede with man for the obedience of the heart; when He has power to enforce it, if He so think fit. Ought we not hence to learn, that in our intercourse with each other, persuasion is to be preferred to force, gentleness to severity, entreaty to compulsion? Might we not hence do well to consider, how sensibly we ought to feel the condescension of our Lord, to whom we owe even our own selves, how heartily we ought to comply with his expressed wishes, without waiting for the injunction of his commands!

And now let us note how we might hence learn to intercede with each other, when we have a favour to obtain, especially if the thing be such as we desire out of regard to God's glory, and such as our brother out of regard to God's glory ought to give. First we may open our business with a Christian salutation, wishing at least in our hearts, and if occasion serve, saying earnestly with our lips, "Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." Next observe we must make mention in our private prayers of the brother Christian with whom we are about to intercede, giving thanks for such faith in Christ and love toward the saints as we hear of in him, and also praying that the more his faith is enlarged, he may the more freely ascribe all the good he does to the praise of the glory of Christ Jesus our Lord. Let these be our first approaches towards the hearts of our brethren, when we desire to engage them in any good work we have in hand. Let us thus lay the matter before the Lord. Let us thus entrust our cause to Him, in whose rule and governance are the hearts of all men. And then we are not only more likely to succeed, but whether we succeed or not, we shall delight in thinking that God's will is done.

And when we prefer our request to our brother, let us awaken if it be possible in his heart, the same affection which we feel glowing in our own. Onesimus had departed from his master. St. Paul had in the meantime converted him. St. Paul regarded him as a son in the Gospel, considered him to be now profitable both to himself and to Philemon, as a witness to the force of truth, felt for his apprehensions, and rejoiced in the prospect of his being received with kindness. See then how he endeavours to communicate to Philemon the same Christian view of his servant's case. "Without thy mind I would do nothing." He would not retain Onesimus against Philemon's will. Nor would he send him back, except in the hope that Philemon wished him to return. "Perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever." He would have Philemon glad to have lost the services of Onesimus for a time, since in the interval he had been converted to be a Christian. "Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved." He would not suppose that the difference between a master and a slave, in point of worldly advantages, could weigh in the mind of Philemon against the equality of their privileges as children of God. Both were partners with St. Paul. He would have one receive the other as a joint partaker of grace, a joint heir of heaven. Thus then let us also plead with each other for our brethren. Thus let us plead with those who profess faith in Christ, whether it be for the reconciliation of the estranged, for the instruction of the ignorant, for the alleviation of the sufferings of the poor, or for the propagating the Gospel among the heathen.

And whilst we plead with earnestness of affection, let us also plead with confidence of hope. It is the part of charity to hope all things. See 1 Cor. 13. 7. And knowing how far we are from that perfect love for our fellow creatures which ought to animate the hearts of all, we must not suffer ourselves to think that any good work we have in hand will be less interesting to our brethren than to ourselves. Let us have confidence in the compliance of our brethren. Let us have confidence in the success of their prayers. Let us pray for them as if we trusted that our own prayers would prevail. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen." God grant that you may comply with our request, that you may forgive, or give, or help, or save, as freely, as largely, as graciously, as our Lord Jesus Christ has given Himself for you !

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE HEBREWS, 1. 1—14.

That God has spoken unto us by his Son.

1 God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets,

2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds;

3 ¹ Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high;

4 Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

5 For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son?

6 And again, when he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.

7 And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire.

8 But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of [†]righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.

9 Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

10 And, ²Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands:

11 They shall perish; but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment;

12 And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

13 But to which of the angels said he at any time, ³Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?

14 Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

[†] Gr. rightness, or, straightness.

³ Ps. 110. 1. Matt. 22. 44.

§ 616. That the Son is above angels, and therefore God.

The chief objects of the apostle Paul in writing to the Hebrew Christians, appear to have been these, to confirm them in the faith of Christ, and to furnish them with arguments suited for their use in convincing their unbelieving brethren. And accordingly we find in this Epistle, frequent reference to the Scriptures of the Old Testament, which the Jews received as the word of God; and frequent use of that kind of argument to which the Jews were most likely to give heed, that which is founded on words, and names, and expressions, occurring in Holy Writ. Hence we may learn what would now be our best method of attempting the conversion of the Jews; namely, to argue from what they allow for truth, and in the manner which they feel to be convincing. And hence we may also take occasion to observe, that it is now our duty to be diligent to help in the work of converting them. For in our Lord's command that we should baptize all nations, who can imagine that the Jews are excepted? Did not St. Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles, address himself in every city first to the Jews? Even after he had been compelled, by their opposition at Antioch in Pisidia, to say, "Lo, we turn to the Gentiles," did he not at the very next city which he visited, Iconium, enter straightway into the synagogue of the Jews? See Acts 13. 46, 51; 14. 1. Can we wonder that we share so little of his success, when we fall so far short of his example? Can we doubt that this is one chief use for which this very Epistle has been preserved in Scripture, that it may serve Christians as a storehouse of affecting arguments for the conversion of unbelieving Jews? Oh that they in whose place we Gentiles were grafted in, may soon again bear fruit on their own proper stock! Oh that they whose casting away has been our reconciliation, may soon again be received, and be as life from the dead! See Rom. 11. 12—18.

See then how profitably, for them, and for us also, St. Paul establishes the certainty of the things we have believed! If "faith cometh by hearing;" Rom. 10. 17; if men have been used to believe when God spake unto them aforetime by the prophets, how much more must they give ear when He speaks unto them by his Son! This is the first argument here insisted on for the truth of God's message in the Gospel, the dignity of the Messenger. This is an argument which shews not only that the Gospel is true, but that it supersedes all other revelations; and therefore might be admitted by the Jew, consistently with his reverence for the Law and the Prophets. For God has in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, the very Son "whom he hath appointed heir of all things," and who designs to share this glory with his saints, the very Son "by whom also he made the worlds," and who will remain when the worlds shall perish. And this Son is no less than the "brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person;" partaking of the Father's Godhead, even as a Son on earth is of the same nature and order as his earthly father. He upholds, or preserves what He created and made. He "by himself purged our sins," made atonement by virtue of his own spotless worth for all the sins of all mankind. And having done this, He is now seated on the right hand of the Majesty on high;" being not only far above all God's former prophets who were men, but also above all his messengers that were angels.

This last point is here insisted on at considerable length. For the Jews were sure to call to mind, that in their dispensation they had enjoyed not only the word of prophecy, but the ministry of angels. And as it is well understood that angels stand next in greatness and in glory unto God, there was no more fitting way to lead up our thoughts to the surprising mystery that Christ is God, than to prove that He is as "much better than the angels," as the name of Son imports.

This then is proved first by his name of Son, a name given Him more than once in prophecies here quoted from the Old Testament, a name not merely given Him in the way of adoption, but his "by inheritance," because He is the Son. Again, the angels are bidden to "worship him." Again, the angels are God's ministers or servants, employed like winds or lightnings to do his pleasure, at the word of his command. And it is in the capacity of servants, "sent forth" under orders, that they "minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." "But unto the Son" it is said in the word of prophecy, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever;" and "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth;" and "Sit on my right hand;" expressions these, not as of confidence in a servant, but as of glorying in a Son.

Thanks then be to God the Father, that He has spoken unto us by his Son! Thanks be to God the Son, that He has not only lived to reveal to us the Father's will, but also reconciled us to the Father by his death! Thanks be to God the Holy Ghost, that He has moved both prophets and apostles, both in the Old Testament and in the New, to testify to the glory, majesty, and dominion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ!

That we must give heed to what has been spoken by the Son.

1 Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should † let them slip.

2 For if the word spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward;

3 How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

4 God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and || gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak.

† Gr. run out as leaking vessels.

|| Or, distributions.

6 But one in a certain place testified saying, 'What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

7 Thou madest him * a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

8 Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him.

9 But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels ‡ for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

§ 617. The peril of neglecting so great salvation.

The dignity of the Messenger has been set forth as a proof that the message is true. It is more; for it is a motive which ought to have great weight with all who hear the message, lest they let slip what they once have heard. For even the Law which was "ordained by angels," Gal. 3. 19, revealed through their ministry, is sanctioned by the enactment of sure retribution for "every transgression and disobedience." How much more, when God has spoken by his Son, how much more shall we suffer, if we dare to disobey! Nay, how shall we escape, if we so much as neglect to hear, if we are careless and inattentive to this great salvation, which Christ the Son first revealed, which was next confirmed "by them that heard him," and to which God also Himself all along bare witness, by the miracles, of which so many striking instances are set down in the New Testament? How shall we escape? What earnest heed must we continually give, unless we would for ever perish!

For that Christ the Messenger of our covenant, is indeed greater than the angels, is here further proved by this striking consideration, that He is the Lord or Ruler in the kingdom of heaven, that "world to come, whereof we speak," that state of things to which all prophecy refers as its end and object, that heaven begun on earth which the Jews were wont to look for, that church and all its members, and all their glory and their joy, for the sake of which God thought it not too much to yield up his own Son a sacrifice for sin, for the sake of which Christ "humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Philip. 2. 8. Now there is no hint in the Old Testament of God's having put this "world to come" in subjection unto the angels. Whereas there is a passage in the Psalms plainly pointing to the Messiah, which speaks first of his being made "a little lower than the angels," and then of his being "crowned with glory and honour," and being set over all the works of God's hand. So that all things are to be put in subjection under Christ. And though "we see not yet all things put under him," though we have seen Him chiefly in his state of humiliation, this was in order that "he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." And therefore in this we already see proof that He is "crowned with glory and honour." For the part of this prophecy which we see fulfilled is an earnest of the fulfilment of the whole, to assure us that He is the Lord of those whom He has redeemed, and so much higher than the angels as He is the destroyer of death, the conqueror of Satan, the Saviour of sinners, the King of saints.

Let us take heed then and consider how fearful is our risk, or rather how sure is our destruction, if we neglect so great salvation. Let us note that not they only will be lost who presumptuously disobey, but also they who carelessly let slip what they have heard. Yes, if we have but once heard the Gospel, if but once the truth have sounded in our ears, if but once the glad tidings of mercy, as revealed by the Son of God Himself, have been told us by any one of all whom He has redeemed, we are straightway bound to hold fast the truth, we are straightway bound to believe and to obey. But what if we have been told over and over again? What if we have heard from our youth upwards? What if we hear each Lord's day in the church? What if we read each day of our lives in the Gospel? Then if we be negligent, then if we be not fervent in spirit serving the Lord, then if we be not devout towards God, affectionate to each other, hungry and thirsty after righteousness, covetous of treasure in heaven, and careful for no one thing on earth except the one thing needful; surely for us in vain Christ died, his death will only lead to our greater condemnation; for against such it is recorded of the householder, who thought that the husbandmen would reverence his son, "He will miserably destroy those wicked men." Matt. 21. 41.

Why the Son took on him the nature of man.

10 For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings.

11 For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, 12 Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.

13 And again, ¹ I will put my trust in him. And again, ² Behold I and the children which God hath given me.

14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15 And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

16 For verily † he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

18 For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

² Is. 8. 18.

† Gr. he taketh not hold of angels, but of the seed of Abraham he taketh hold.

§ 618. Christ a merciful and faithful High Priest.

Whilst our Lord was yet alive, the Jews were used to object, "Howbeit we know this man whence he is." John 7. 27. And in like manner when they stoned Him, they "answered him saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy;" and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God." John 10. 33. This is the sort of objection to which the apostle in this passage would supply an answer. For this is the kind of difficulty with which the Hebrews were likely to be perplexed: we have seen no glory such as became a prophet or an angel, much less such as is suitable to the Son of God. But let us here first observe, that the humiliation of the Messiah is spoken of in the same word of prophecy which describes his glory. See ver. 7. And next let us consider the necessity of the case: "both he that sanctifieth" by expiating sin, "and they who are sanctified," whose sins are expiated, "are all of one," must needs be of one nature. Christ must needs become man, in order to atone for man's sin. And therefore He is not ashamed to call us by the names of "brethren" or of "children;" each of which implies a common nature. And this is the reason which made it fitting, or perhaps necessary, that Christ should be made "perfect through sufferings;" because it is only by suffering that our defiled nature could be purified and made meet for glory. So that if Christ must needs take on Him our nature in order to atone for our sins, He must also needs undergo sufferings in the flesh, in order for us to be brought as sons of God unto glory. We being "partakers of flesh and blood," He partook of them also. We being sentenced to death for sin, He also submitted to die, on purpose that by dying He might overcome and "destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;" and on purpose that He might "deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." For this is that which makes all things on earth "vanity of vanities." Eccles. 1. 2. It was when the fear of death was fallen upon him, that the Psalmist thus expressed his terror, "Fearfulness and trembling are come upon me, and an horrible dread hath overwhelmed me." Ps. 55. 4, 5. But to know that our Redeemer liveth, this breaks the bonds of our captivity. To be assured that One who was of the seed of the woman, One who truly died, did no less truly rise again from the dead, this delivers us from the fear of death, if we believe that for us He died, for us He rose again, if we have grace to rise again with Him unto newness of life.

These then are sufficient reasons for Christ's taking upon Him not the nature of angels, but "the seed of Abraham." But besides these there is one other here insisted on, that his experience of our sufferings, especially in temptation, made Him more fit for an office, which the Jews knew that Messiah must hold, that of a "high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." For in this his office He was more sure to be "merciful and faithful," or at least we have more assurance that He is likely so to be, from his having Himself "suffered being tempted;" it being generally admitted that those who have had experience in trouble are both more able and more willing to succour the afflicted. Thus not only are we actually saved by Christ, through his taking on Him the nature of man, but we have also the more comfortable assurance of salvation. We are led to look upon Him as One who has a feeling for our infirmities. We are led to feel in each suffering we endure, All this and more than this didst Thou, O Lord, undergo for me! All this and more than this, Thou wilt enable me to undergo for Thee! Not only hast Thou once died for my sins; Thou ever livest to make intercession for me. Not only has God for thy sake forgiven me once for all the past; Thou art still pleading for mercy whilst I still transgress. When I fall, Thou liftest me up. When I stand, Thou holdest me upright. Thou teachest me to pray that I be not led into temptation. Thou canst teach me also to count it all joy when God has permitted me to be tempted! Thou makest me in all things more than conqueror! Thou gettest me in all things grace to glorify thy name! Glory be to Thee, O Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

That Christ is worthy of more glory than Moses.

1 Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus;

2 Who was faithful to him that † appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house.

3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house.

4 For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God.

5 And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after;

6 But Christ as a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end:

7 Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, 'To day if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness:

9 When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years.

10 Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart, and they have not known my ways.

11 So I swear in my wrath, † They shall not enter into my rest.)

12 Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

13 But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

14 For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end;

15 While it is said, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

16 For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses.

17 But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness?

18 And to whom swore he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?

19 So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

† Gr. made, 1 Sam. 12. 6.

† Ps. 95. 7.

† Gr. if they shall enter.

§. 619. That we by unbelief and sin lose heaven.

St. Paul here presses the Jews to consider that Jesus was not only faithful in his office of revealing the will of God, even as Moses was; but also that "He was counted worthy of more glory than Moses." For Moses was but one member of that household the church, of which Christ was the builder and maker. For even as God, "that built all things," is therefore greater than all, so Christ by whom all things were made, see ch. 1. 2, and who is the head over all things to the church, see Eph. 1. 22, is to be esteemed far above every one of his own saints. And further, Moses, however "faithful in all his house," in all this dispensation intrusted to him, was faithful as a servant; and, as a witness, in all that he revealed and did, to a prophet who should rise up after him, to whom his people ought to hearken. See Deut. 18. 15. Whereas Christ was faithful "as a son over his own house," having the interest and authority of an only begotten Son in all that belongs to his Father, who has appointed Him to be "heir of all things." Ch. 1. 2. Oh how thankful must we be to think that we are his house, his servants, his brethren, his children! Oh how earnestly must we endeavour, in order to secure the continuance of our privileges, to hold fast our confidence and joy of hope "firm unto the end!"

For see how fearfully the Holy Spirit warned those who were disciples of Moses, not to harden their hearts, as their fathers did, not to tempt God, as their fathers did in the wilderness, when they had seen his marvels for forty years together! Note how solemnly God is said to have sworn in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest! Now "with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness? And to whom swore he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?" So that although they came out of Egypt by Moses, they were notwithstanding guilty afterwards of sin. And they sinned because they believed not. And because of their unbelief they were not allowed to enter into the land of Canaan.

We too have been brought out of spiritual Egypt, out of the bondage of sin and death. We are on our way, under the guidance of our Saviour, unto the rest of holiness and heaven. We are passing through this world as through a wilderness. We are directed by a light from heaven, the word of truth. We are clothed with garments that wax not old, the graces of the Gospel. We have the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left. We are fed with more than angels' food, even eating of bread from heaven, our Saviour's flesh, and drinking of the rock which follows us, which is Christ. Before us is the land of promise, the crown of glory, rest so entire, joy so excellent, that all that we can have on earth compared with heaven is but as a wandering in the wilderness. Heaven awaits us at the end. And yet it may be that we shall never enter in. "To day if ye will hear his voice," for now is our time of trial, "harden not your hearts," else we shall perish in our sins. Let us then "exhort one another daily, while it is called To day." Let us suffer no day to pass without saying to one or more of our brethren words to some such effect as these: How great has been our gain in being called to heaven, how sad will be our loss, "if we come short of it," how deceitful is sin in hardening the heart, how closely need we watch against an evil heart of unbelief, how great is our risk lest we depart from the living God, how sure is our enjoyment of the glory of our Lord, if we hold fast the faith and hope we have begun with, stedfast unto the end!

That there remaineth a rest for the people of God.

1 Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it.

2 For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but * the word preached did not profit them, || not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.

3 For we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, "they shall enter into my rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world."

4 For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

5 And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest.

* Gr. the word of hearing.

|| Or, because they were not united by faith to.

¶ Or, keeping of a sabbath.

6 Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom † it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief:

7 (Again he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To day, after so long a time; as it is said, To day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

8 For if ‡ Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day.

9 There remaineth therefore a ¶ rest to the people of God.

10 For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from his.)

11 Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of  unbelief.

† Or, the gospel was first preached.

¶ Or, disobedience.

‡ That is, Joshua.

§ 620. That we must labour not to come short of our promised rest.

Christians are to reckon that they have a promise of entering into the rest of God. Now this "gospel," or word of promise, is implied in the word of threatening, sanctioned by an oath, that unbelievers should not enter into rest. For hence it is to be inferred that believers shall. And therefore though the promise "did not profit them" which first heard it, by reason of their not believing it in their hearts, yet "we which have believed do enter into rest," those of us who have faith in God's promise, are sure to enter into the enjoyment of a rest like his. Of this rest we have not only a promise in God's word, but also a type or significant figure in his resting on the Sabbath day from his work of creation. For this is the way in which Scripture speaks of the Sabbath, "God did rest on the seventh day from all his works;" and again, "If they shall enter into my rest." And this is one reason amongst many, why God commanded man, from the beginning of the world, to keep holy one day in seven, that we might as often as that day comes round, be forcibly reminded, how soon our work on earth must end, and be actually moved to set our hearts on the rest which is to come.

Now we cannot think that God's promises will have no fulfilment, or that the types which He has set forth in his word will not be realized in what befalls his creatures. Some must enter into his rest. "They to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief." They to whom the land of Canaan, another type of heaven, was first promised, were cut off for their sins in the wilderness. And yet, long afterwards, the promise was repeated by the mouth of David, and the promise again set forth against hardness of heart. So that something more must have been meant than the rest given by Joshua, who bare the name and was the type of Jesus, when he settled the Israelites in Canaan. And there must be a rest still remaining, to the people of God, to be enjoyed by believers in Christ, when they shall have ceased from their labours of love upon earth, and shall have entered into that heavenly country where "their works do follow them." Rev. 14. 13. Christians then have a promise of rest as well as Jews. We have our Sabbath upon earth, as a pledge to assure us of rest in heaven, as a help to prepare us for enjoying it. And though our day of rest be not the same in order of the seven, as that which the Jews observed after their deliverance out of Egypt, it is very probably the same which God at the first ordained; it is certainly that same day of the week on which Jesus Christ, the Captain of our salvation, who has now "entered into his rest," "ceased from his own works," of our redemption and salvation, by rising from the dead.

Let us then fear lest we "come short" of this promise. "Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest." We know how grievous a thing it is to miss by our own fault any great gain or pleasure or honour which we might else have had. We feel often how much more we are put to pain by losing what has once been ours, than by not having what we never have possessed. Now this is the light in which the apostle here represents the rest of God, the happiness of heaven. It is ours. It is secured to us by promise. We have it as sure as God's word, we have it for our own. If we lose it, we lose what has been once ours. If we come short of it, we miss what we might have certainly possessed. But then it is also possible that we may come short of it. The same God who promises, also warns. He warns us by the "example of unbelief," He points out to us what once has happened to unbelievers. The same God who promises, also commands. He bids us labour, if we would enter into his rest. His word is indeed sure. But on us depends which way it will be fulfilled. His glory cannot fail of being made manifest. But this will be, according to our faith and love, either by our entering into his rest, or by our being consumed by the breath of his displeasure.

O God, who hast set before us a choice so weighty, help us to choose according to thy will! O God, who willest not the death of a sinner, help us to be converted and live! O God, who on the seventh day didst rest from all thy works, help us to enjoy thy Sabbaths upon earth, as an earnest of our felicity in heaven!

God's word. His knowing all things. The sympathy of Christ.

12 For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

13 Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

14 Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

15 For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.

16 Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

§ 621. Motives to our perseverance in labour and in prayer.

Here are three several motives, urged upon our attention, to prevail with us that we labour to attain the rest of God, and ask with confidence of faith for his help in our undertaking. First we are to consider the power of the word of God, that word which was delivered to the fathers by the prophets, and spoken to us in these last days by God's own Son. Besides the dignity of the Messenger, we must weigh well the importance of the message. We must examine all the books of Holy Scripture, study them one by one, and all together, watch their effect upon us as we read, or hear, pray for help to understand them aright, and to apply them in the practice of our lives. Then we shall find how the word of God is quick, that is to say, alive, lively, and capable of giving life; how it is powerful, even as St. Paul has elsewhere described the Gospel, "the power of God unto salvation," Rom. 1. 16; how it is "sharper than any two edged sword," being indeed "the sword of the Spirit," Eph. 6. 17, being that by which the Jews who heard Peter and the other apostles, "were pricked in their heart," Acts 2. 37, and were "cut to the heart," Acts 5. 33. To little purpose have we ourselves read or heard that holy book, the Bible, if we have not felt the sharpness of this twofold edge, if we have not found that even as a sword divides "joints and marrow," and both from "soul and spirit," so the Scriptures pierce the inmost recesses of our thoughts, divide asunder the false pleas and vain excuses, by which we seek to excuse ourselves in sin, and make manifest to ourselves, what is else a secret unto us, the sinfulness of our own nature. Oh let us then acknowledge in these effects the power of the Almighty. Let us receive this word as his. Let us feel that it is God speaking to our souls. Let us give heed. Let us believe. Let us obey.

For in the second place, as is his word, so is He Himself, "a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." We know it to be his word because it is able to do this. Much more then is He able. Much more may we be sure that no one of all the beings whom He has made can fail to be manifest in his sight; yea that "all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do;" to whom we have to give account. This is a thought of great weight to keep us on the watch that we fall not into secret unbelief. For many alas, who are esteemed to be believers, are conscious to themselves that they have no faith at all. And many without being themselves aware of it, are in reality little better than unbelievers. They attend all Christian ordinances. They comply with all Christian usages. But they are living all the while without God in the world, without hope in Christ, without desire or endeavour to enter into the rest of heaven. They never lift up their hearts to God in secret prayer. They never look upon Him as the Father reconciled, as the Redeemer who died to deliver them, as the Holy Spirit who strives within their hearts to make them holy. They never speak or think or act, as if heaven were more desirable than earth, and holiness than sin; as if Christ were their pattern in living, or as if it were their gain to die. But behold, for a warning unto all such it is written, that "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." John 4. 24. The heart is what He looks to. The soul is what He sees. The prayers to which He listens are what we feel whilst we are praying. The faith which He counts unto us for righteousness is that which works in us a desire to be righteous.

In the third place let us observe how greatly we are encouraged thus to believe, thus to feel, thus to pray, by the view here given us of our Lord as our "great high priest." He "is passed into the heavens," it is true; and yet He looks down with interest on his servants that are upon the earth. He is "the Son of God," we own with reverence; and yet He condescended to be also the Son of man. And having by this means been "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." * He is such an one as can be "touched with the feeling of our infirmities." Let us therefore ask for help to holiness as if we felt sure that we should have it given us, through his prevailing intercession. Let us seek for rest in heaven, as if we were confident of obtaining it, through Him, who is gone before to prepare a place for us. See John 14. 2. And may God grant that we neither so presume upon his help ourselves as to cease from labouring, nor so trust in our own exertions, as to fall short of his promises through unbelief.

Christ appointed to be our High Priest for ever.

1 For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins:

2 Who || can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity.

3 And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins.

4 And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.

5 So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee.

6 As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

7 Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard † in that he feared;

8 Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered;

9 And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him;

10 Called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec.

11 Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing.

12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat.

13 For every one that useth milk ‡ is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe.

14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are  of* full age, even those who by reason § of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

|| Or, can reasonably bear with. † Or, for his piety. ‡ Gr. hath no experience.  Or, perfect. § Or, of an habit, or, perfection.

§ 622. That Christians have both a Priest and a Sacrifice.

A priest is one who offers sacrifices to God on behalf of the people. And judging both from what we know of ancient times, and from what we meet with in many parts of the world at present, it is probable that the institution of a priesthood was as early as that of sacrifices; and that both came from the same appointment, that of God. For in these things even the corrupted religion of idolaters serves to indicate what the truth was before it was corrupted. Now the Jews, we know, had their priests expressly appointed to them by the law of Moses. And they were therefore sure to feel it as an objection to the Gospel, and to the religion which the apostles were establishing, that therein there were no sacrifices to be offered, no priests appointed to offer them. And this is an objection not unlikely to occur now amongst the heathen, who from long established usage are often warmly attached to their own superstitious rites, and who in this instance, are partly right in the notion which they have preserved throughout all their generations, that in all true religion there must be a sacrifice and a priest.

But to such objectors we may reply, we have a priest, we have a sacrifice. We have a High Priest, "taken from among men," One who partakes of our own nature, One who is appointed in man's behalf to offer "gifts and sacrifices for sins;" One who has sympathy for our sufferings, and has experienced the force of our temptations; One who, unlike all other priests, being Himself without sin, is above all others in this, that He needs not to offer for Himself; One who took not this honour on Himself, but was set apart by the voice of God, in prophecy. One who is once for all an High Priest for ever, so that his people need no other Priest, nor other Sacrifice. For He who was the Priest, was also the Sacrifice. Yea, he offered up Himself as an atonement for our sins. He took upon Him our flesh, that He might shed his blood in our behalf. And "in the days of his flesh," He was made perfect through sufferings, being a Lamb without spot; yea, "though he were a Son," yet He learned this new kind of obedience "by the things which he suffered," obedience unto death. And though He prayed earnestly in his agony, and "was heard in that he feared," God sending unto Him an angel to strengthen Him, see Luke 22. 43, yet the cup did not pass from Him. He declared of his own sacrifice, "It is finished;" and when He had cried with a loud voice He "gave up the ghost." John 19. 30. Thus did He become "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Thus was He, as described in God's word, "a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec."

"Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing." Yes, it is man's dullness, which makes God's word difficult to be understood. We are slow in understanding it. We are averse to understand it. The things of God are to our natural minds foolishness. Our natural hearts are at enmity with what God has revealed. And even when we are by grace regenerate, when we have been born again, of water and of the Spirit, see John 3. 5, we are at first but in the condition of a babe. Nay as long as we can digest only the first elements of Christian knowledge, we remain in spiritual infancy, "unskilful in the word of righteousness." Oh that we may so diligently use the gifts we have, as to attain unto the use of more and more! Oh that we may so exercise our spiritual senses, in discerning good from evil, as to be fit to feed on "strong meat," that the eyes of our understanding being enlightened, we may know all that God has revealed, that our "love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment!" Phil. 1. 9.

That we must not fall away, but go on to perfection.

1 Therefore leaving || the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God,

2 Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

3 And this will we do, if God permit.

4 For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost,

5 And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come,

6 If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

7 For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them † by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God:

8 But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

9 But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak.

10 For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.

|| Or, the word of the beginning of Christ.

† Or, for.

§ 623. Progressive improvement in knowledge and in love.

The Gospel has its mysteries; but they are mysteries revealed. It has its degrees of knowledge; but the very highest are all open to the lowliest of mankind. All are invited to "go on unto perfection;" both in knowledge and in practice; to press on to those things which are before, both in the understanding of what God's will is, and in attaining unto the grace to do it. And therefore, though the Hebrews might need to be again taught "the first principles of the oracles of God," ch. 5. 12, yet St. Paul, considering that "for the time" they ought to have been teachers, would not lay anew in this Epistle the foundation of Christian teaching, would not write to them elementary instructions on repentance and faith, on baptism and laying on of hands, on the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. But he resolved, with God's permission, to lead them on to the consideration of those matters "hard to be uttered," ch. 5. 11, which were so by reason of their dulness and inattention. Let us then arouse all our faculties to the study of things heavenly. Let us stimulate our thirst after heavenly knowledge. Let us drink at the fountain of divine truth. And we shall then be able to say heartily with the Psalmist, "Through thy commandments I get understanding: therefore I hate all evil ways." Ps. 119. 104.

But what, if instead of going on unto perfection, we fall away into perdition? What, if after we have had the right foundation laid, we tear it up from the ground, and root it out? What if they who have been "once enlightened" by the truth, once "tasted of the heavenly gift" of grace, once been made "partakers of the Holy Ghost," in baptism and the laying on of hands, "and have tasted the good word of God," so as to know how good it is, "and the powers of the world to come," so as to experience how animating is the hope of it; What if these fall away? What if these renounce the profession of religion, or deny the excellency of godliness? What if these become declared apostates from the faith, or secret enemies to the Gospel? Is it not easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than "to renew them again unto repentance?" Yes, this is one of the things which with man is "impossible." It is one of the things which, though possible, are not probable with God. For what is this but for the ground to drink in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and yet to yield no better fruit than thorns and briers, and so to deserve no better sentence than a curse, no better end than to be burnt? Oh stubborn and unkindly hearts, that can receive the precious showers of God's mercy in the Gospel, and bear, instead of holiness and joy, only the thorns of unbelief, the briers of iniquity! Oh cruel and unthankful souls, which can know of Christ's love in dying for sinners, the scorn which He encountered, the pain which He endured, and yet "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame!"

"But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." The terrors of the Lord are not concealed by the apostle. But he greatly prefers to use the consolations of Christ. And whilst he tells us of the end of the ungodly, "to be burned," he sets forth for our encouragement the blessing promised to that kindly soil, which in return for heaven's oft repeated rain, brings forth herbs meet for the husbandman's use; he assures those, who on the foundation of a right faith, have built the work and labour of love, that God is not unrighteous to forget what they have done. Let us then at once go on in knowledge, and also grow in charity. Whilst we are studious to understand the love of God, let us be active in loving one another. Whilst we meditate deeply, let us also labour diligently. Thus our knowledge seasoned with charity will not puff up. Thus our charity enlightened and enlarged by knowledge will edify the more. See 1 Cor. 8. 1.

God's promises confirmed by oath.

11 And we desire that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end:

12 That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

13 For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself,

14 Saying, surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.

15 And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise.

16 For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

17 Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, || confirmed it by an oath:

18 That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us:

* 19 Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, and which entereth into that within the veil;

20 Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

|| Gr. interposed himself by an oath.

§ 624. The security of hoping in God's promises.

When we consider whom we mean by the name of God, One who made all things, One who preserves all things, we are lost in the endeavour to comprehend the greatness of his power. When we remember how He has condescended to reveal Himself to mankind, how He has accommodated his language to our thoughts and feelings, to our habits and practices, we are no less at a loss to express the graciousness of his love. Between man and man a promise is that which gives us hope of receiving. Accordingly, God also has made most precious promises, that we may have confident assurance of possessing his inestimable gifts. An oath, in the way of confirming an assertion, is amongst men the "end of all strife." Accordingly God also has made oath, in order "more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel," in order to satisfy them more thoroughly that his purpose to give them holiness and heaven can never change. And as men, when they take oath, swear by some one greater than themselves, by way of sanction to the truth of what they swear to; so God, "because he could swear by no greater," "swore by himself." This He did in his promise to Abraham, that promise which is to us and to our children after us, if we be children of Abraham's faith. And thus we have "two immutable things," things which cannot change, God's promise and God's oath, to afford us in all present trouble "strong consolation," by assuring us of everlasting joy hereafter.

Now this promise, this oath, and the assurance of hope which is built upon these two immutable things, are most exactly suited for our support in our state of discipline and trial; wherein we have scarce one moment present at a time, and wherein the chief part of our peace and joy depends on what we are expecting for the future. For see how in the present life we rely upon the promises of each other. Observe how the satisfactions of each passing hour depend upon our conviction that the many parties who are members of our society will faithfully keep their several engagements. What would be our confusion and dismay, if all at once the labourer were to cease from working as agreed upon, the artificer to stop short in his undertaking, and the tradesman to refuse to deal; were domestic servants to withhold their stipulated help, were friends to violate their friendship, were brethren and sisters to prove false, parents to forget their duty to their children, and children what they owe to their parents, were husbands and wives to break their plighted faith, and to suppress their accustomed love? These things and such as these, were they to happen altogether, would destroy all present comfort, by overthrowing all prospect of future peace. These things in proportion as they now happen one by one, these disappointments of our hope, these failures of the help we had relied upon, are amongst the most bitter of those numerous afflictions, which render our days on earth evil as well as few.

But in the midst of the fickleness and the falsehood of man, our thoughts may rest without risk of disappointment on the truth of the promises of God. Whilst we flee for refuge from the treachery of false brethren, we may lay hold with certainty upon the covenant set before us in the Gospel. Whilst we are tossed to and fro, and nigh to shipwreck of our happiness, in the eddies and cross currents of man's variable temper, we may make fast our souls to the love of God, and to the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, as to an anchor which will never fail. For the present we shall be safe, though in the midst of danger; in the midst of waves and winds, and yet secure. For the future we shall be brought into the haven of eternity, those realms of joy where Christ already is. He as our forerunner "is for us entered." Let us follow in his steps, and we shall attain unto his presence. Let us be "not slothful" but diligent, not doubtful but confident in hope; and we shall then be numbered among them "who through faith and patience inherit the promises" of God.

Melchisedec the type of Christ.

1 For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him;

2 To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace;

3 Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually.

4 Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils.

5 And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham:

6 But he whose descent is not counted from them received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises.

7 And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better.

8 And here men that die receive tithes: but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.

9 And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchisedec met him.

11 If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12 For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law.

13 For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

14 For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

|| Gr, without pedigree.

† Or, pedigree.

§ 625. Jesus our Priest and King.

On the mention of Jesus, at the end of the last chapter, St. Paul referred to what he had said of Him before, by adding to his name these words, "made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Ch. 6. 20. This was the very thing wherof he had many words to say that were "hard to be uttered," ch. 5. 11, and which words he now proceeds to write, having in the meantime endeavoured to awaken the attention of his readers. And this was one of the matters, which, as he afterwards observes, God had asserted with the solemnity of an oath. See Ver. 21.

Let us then attentively observe what is here told us of Melchisedec; how it is shewn that he was a type of our Saviour Christ; how Christ is a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec; and how this his priesthood has been ordained of God for our great and lasting benefit.

Melchisedec was king of Salem. Jesus was "King of the Jews;" and was proclaimed as such in the same city, Jerusalem. John 19. 19. Melchisedec was "priest of the most High God," for there were priests of the true God and prophets of the true God, before the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, even from the beginning of the world. Jesus is our great High Priest. The name Melchisedec means "King of righteousness." "King of Salem" means "King of peace." Jesus is "the Lord our righteousness," Jer. 23. 6, Jesus is the "Prince of peace." Is. 9. 6. The genealogy of Melchisedec is not recorded. And his priesthood coming by inheritance with his sceptre, was not limited like the priesthood of the family of Aaron between the ages of thirty years and fifty. Jesus was from eternity to eternity. And of the Messiah it had been prophesied: "Who shall declare his generation?" Is. 53. 8.

But it follows, if He were a priest after the order of Melchisedec, that He must be of more honour than the priests which were of Abraham's family. For these receive tithes of their brethren. But Melchisedec received tithes of Abraham. And in him, to use an argument of weight in such a question of precedency, in Abraham he received tithes of Levi and his descendants. And again, Melchisedec blessed Abraham, which is another instance of superiority. And of Melchisedec "it is witnessed that he liveth," shewing that the Priest which is of his order never dies. And if the Levitical priesthood were, as the Jews imagined, the end and not the type, how came it to be prophesied that another Priest should arise of another order not named from Aaron? Yet there must needs be in this a change of the law of the priesthood; since the Messiah, to whom it is agreed that this prophecy refers, was to be of another tribe, the tribe of Judah, "of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood," and of which tribe no man in point of fact had been used to give "attendance at the altar."

Here then was ample evidence to the Hebrew Christians, that by owning Jesus for the Christ they would not be without the benefit of a great High Priest. Here is comfortable assurance for us all, that we have a Priest, who is also a King; a "King of righteousness," a "King of peace," a King and Priest eternal in the heavens, even no other than "the Son of God." Do we need atonement? He has made it. Intercession? He is making it continually. Do we need guidance and government? He rules over all. He makes all things work together for our good. He provides for our wants. He cares for our afflictions. In our failings He watches to strengthen us. In our victory He delights to honour us. Who would not be the subjects of a King so gracious? Who would not be the people of so heavenly a Priest?

The superiority of Christ's priesthood further proved.

15 And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest,

16 Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

17 For he testifieth, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

18 For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

19 For the law made nothing perfect, || but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.

20 And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made priest:

21 (For those priests were made † without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, 'The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec:)

|| Or, but it was the bringing in. † Or, without swearing of an oath.

¶ Or, evermore.

22 By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament.

23 And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death:

24 But this man, because he continueth ever, hath † an unchangeable priesthood.

25 Wherefore he is able also to save them ¶ to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

* 26 For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens;

27 Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once, when he offered up himself.

28 For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is § consecrated for evermore.

§ 626. Our advantage in having such an High Priest as Christ.

That the priesthood of Christ is superior to that of Aaron is here made "yet far more evident;" by this reason, that He is made a Priest "not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." And this is hinted at in the words of prophecy: "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Ps. 110. 4. Which words, and the whole Psalm taken together, refer to a new order of things, to the disannulling of the law of Moses, and to "the bringing in of a better hope." "For the law made nothing perfect." It was unprofitable and "weak through the flesh." Rom. 8. 3. And it is therefore called "a carnal commandment," because it depended on the flesh for its efficiency. Whereas the Gospel is "the power of an endless life." For by it "we draw nigh unto God;" we, Gentiles as well as Jews, have access unto the Father by the Spirit. See Eph. 2. 18. And this the Hebrews must allow to have been foretold of the Messiah and of his priesthood; if at least they referred to the Messiah this promise of a priest that should arise after another order, and the many striking descriptions which the prophets had set down of a new and spiritual dispensation.

Add to this, that the priesthood of Christ is ordained of God with the solemnity of an oath: "The Lord sware and will not repent." And this shews us what regard God had to it, how largely He honours it, how deeply He would have us reverence it, how highly He exalts it above the priesthood of those who were made priests without an oath. For "by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament." The will devised more precious treasure, the covenant conferred a more valuable estate, having the sanction of this greater solemnity. And lastly the priests of the Jewish covenant were a succession of men, many in number, and "not suffered to continue by reason of death." But Jesus, "because he continueth for ever," as is testified in the words, "Thou art a priest for ever," "hath an unchangeable priesthood." No other order can supersede his. No other dispensation can annul this which He has brought in. He is always ministering to our salvation. He is always interceding for our deliverance. He is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." Ch. 13. 8.

Let us then "come unto God by him." This is the use we have to make of so great a privilege. This is the benefit we are to derive from having so preeminent an High Priest. Sinful we feel ourselves, and afraid of communing with our Maker. Let us remember Christ is "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens." Let us consider that under the cover of his protection we may draw nigh unto God, with the assurance that our sins are forgiven. Each day, each hour of our lives, we feel that we fall short of duty, we feel that we need atonement for our manifold transgressions. Let us be supported by the thought that Jesus, "when he offered up himself," made a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice once for all, for all the sins of all men. They who had no other priests than the sons of Aaron, must have been liable to feel distrust in the ministrations of men, who were subject to infirmities like unto their own. But our High Priest is the Son of God. We have the assurance of the oath of God that He is "consecrated for evermore." He never dies. He never fails. He is always sure to hear. He is always mighty to help. When we are weak, then He makes strong. Where we are unclean, there He purifies. Whereinsoever we are afraid, therein He gives us boldness. In whatsoever we are deficient, He makes full amends. And this He does "for evermore;" both for time and for eternity; both for whilst we live on earth, and for when we shall reign with Him in heaven; for whilst here we are walking in the way of his commandments, and for when we shall there be enjoying our part in his inheritance.

That our High Priest officiates in heaven.

1 Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens;

2 A minister || of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

3 For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer.

|| Or, of holy things.

4 For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that † there are priests that offer gifts according to the law:

5 Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount.

† Or, they are priests.

§ 627. The Jewish tabernacle a type of heaven.

The apostle would here further make it manifest to the Hebrews, that Jesus is above all comparison superior to the high priest of the Mosaic covenant. So earnestly does he desire to satisfy their minds! So heartily does he commiserate that blindness, which “in part is happened to Israel!” Rom. 11. 25. So anxiously does he endeavour to hasten the day, when “all Israel shall be saved!” Rom. 11. 26. As he renews his reasoning, let us redouble our attention. As he puts in every light most likely to strike them, the truth which he would have them receive, let us try every means most likely to move them to the faith which we have received ourselves. Let us look upon them as our elder brethren in the covenant of God. Let us consider how many of their family were among the first converts to the Gospel, among our own spiritual fathers in the Lord. Let us take pains to acquire the knowledge they excel in, that we may more readily convey to them that in which they are most deficient. Nor let us be deterred from making efforts for the conversion of the Jews, by the notion that their case is hopeless, by apprehension lest the knowledge of the Gospel should only add to their condemnation. Else why did St. Paul thus labour to convert them, as well as to confirm such as were converted? It is true that if they know these things, and do them not, their sin is greater. But it is also true that they cannot do these things unless they know them. It is true, that if they do them not, sin is lying at their door. But it is also true, that if they know them not, through our slackness or unwillingness to teach, then the sin lies at ours.

The reasoning which we are now to consider, is pronounced by the apostle to be “the sum,” or head, or crown of all that he had said before. “We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens.” This is the chief superiority of all, in the priesthood of Jesus, He officiates not on earth but in heaven; not standing by the altar at Jerusalem, but seated at the right hand of God most High. He is a minister of the real sanctuary, in the light which cannot be approached, “and of the true tabernacle,” not the tent which men pitched in Shiloh, but the mansions of our heavenly Father’s house. For being an High Priest, He must of necessity have some offering to make, and some place in which to make it. But this place cannot be on earth, cannot be as the Jews would have it, at Jerusalem, nor his offering such as they wished, according to their law. For on earth there was another priesthood established, and other offerings by the Law appointed; which order was still observed at Jerusalem at the time when this Epistle was written. That service however was but the shadow of the heavenly ministry, and that temple the type of the heavenly sanctuary. And they that ministered therein did but minister unto shadows of things heavenly. As a proof whereof it is remarkable, that all these things were framed after directions revealed from heaven: “See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount.”

Hence let us learn to look for a spiritual application, in the whole economy which was established by means of Moses among the Jews. These things were but shadows and examples. And yet they were suited to instruct mankind in realities. And if the tabernacle were a type of heaven, then we may learn from what was enacted of the reverence to be paid to it, how necessary it is for them, that would approach the courts of the Most High, to be sanctified both in body and in soul. The gifts offered by the Israelites for the making of the tabernacle were not received unless freely and cheerfully given. See Exod. 25. 2. The gold with which the ark was overlaid, and all the several vessels made, was to be pure. See Exod. ch. 25. The tabernacle, however many its curtains, was to be only one tent. See Exod. 26. 5. And the lamp which burned in it was “to burn always.” Exod. 27. 20. Can we doubt that in like manner it is with willing mind that the saints in heaven sing the praises of the Lamb; or that purity of heart, and a single eye to God’s glory, are there unmingled with any base alloy; or that the church which is there collected is essentially one; or that the light in which it dwells, the light of glory and of joy, there glows for ever and ever?

God grant that we may be fitted to enjoy its brightness! God teach us to help others to be fit! God prosper our endeavours to bring our brethren the Jews into that true tabernacle, where Christ “is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens!”

Jesus the Mediator of a better covenant.

6 But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better || covenant, which was established upon better promises.

7 For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.

8 For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah :

9 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord.

10 For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will ¹ put my laws into their minds, and write them † in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people :

11 And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest.

12 For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

13 In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.

§ 628. The better promises of the new covenant.

Here is introduced a new and distinct argument, to prove the superiority of Christ's ministry; "by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." And this is proved from a passage in the prophet Jeremiah, in which the new covenant is foretold, and its excellencies described at length. Now the very mention of a new covenant to supersede the old one, shews that the old one was now "faultless," not the best that could be devised; and that however well it might be adapted for its proper use, it was not intended to last for ever. Nay the very name of "new," makes the first covenant liable to be called "old." And the name of "old" implies decay, and a readiness to perish. So that the Hebrews must not be surprised, St. Paul means, if soon after the time of their reading this Epistle, the temple service should altogether cease, nay the temple itself be destroyed. And in thus proving the superiority of the Minister of the new covenant, he takes occasion to impress upon his hearers the superiority of the new covenant itself. Happy were those Israelites who had closed with this new covenant, and who were trusting in these better promises! Happy are we Christians, if we cling to these new assurances of God's pardoning love, and plead in prayer, with faith, these new promises of God's assisting grace!

What then is the agreement by which we are bound to God, and by which God has been pleased graciously to represent Himself as actually engaged in covenant to us? It is "not according to the covenant" which God made with the children of Israel, when He delivered them out of the land of Egypt; a covenant of works, which they failed to keep, and thus exposed themselves to the displeasure of the Lord. But it is a covenant, which notwithstanding their disobedience, He has made, both for them and us, in all respects more favourable. He agrees to put his laws into our minds, and to write them in our hearts; not binding us, in every minute particular of our lives, to the observance of stated acts of duty, but enabling us to understand what is his will in every thing, and moving us to desire in every thing to do it. He will be to us "a God," and we to Him "a people;" He being our Father, our Redeemer, our Sanctifier, and we being his children, the servants whom He has bought with a price, the saints whom He sanctifies continually. We shall have no need of repeated instruction from each other, as to who God is, how great, how good, how greatly above all others that be named gods. For these are matters which shall be universally acknowledged amongst Christians; yea all Christians in every degree shall be familiar with this truth, which before the Gospel was almost every where forgotten, that "God is a spirit;" John 4. 24; and with this other, which before the Gospel was never known, that "God is love." 1 John 4. 8. And He will be merciful to our unrighteousness, and our sins and our iniquities He will "remember no more." He will consider them as though they were not. He will make them to be as though they had never been. He will blot them out of his own record. He will silence the accusations of our enemy, and the voice of our own reproachful consciences. He will give us repentance not to be repented of, pardon not to be doubted of, grace from which we need never fall away, heaven, in which we cannot even be tempted to transgress.

Such is God's new covenant. Such is the covenant to which all Christians have agreed. Such is the strength in which we are encouraged to work. Such is the mercy on which we are emboldened to rely. Such are the better promises on which our covenant is established. Such is the better covenant of which our High Priest is the Mediator. Never let us forget how good a covenant it is. Never let us forget that it is a covenant. Never let us cease to thank God for his goodness, in giving us pledges of security for his love to us. Never let us cease to yield, as agreed upon on our part, the free will offering of our love to Him.

The particulars of the tabernacle.

1 Then verily the first covenant had also || ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary.

2 For there was a tabernacle made; the first where-in was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called * the sanctuary.

3 And after the second veil, the tabernacle, which is called the Holiest of all;

4 Which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant;

5 And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercyseat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

6 Now, when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God.

7 But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people:

8 The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing:

9 Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience;

10 Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them, until the time of reformation.

† Or, rites, or, ceremonies.

§ 629. Our free access unto heaven.

The difference between the two covenants may be observed to great advantage, in the directions which they severally contain for the performance of public worship. In the Old Testament, Moses was instructed to make all things according to a pattern shewed to him. He was told what must be the length, and breadth, and height, of the tabernacle, what its several parts, of what materials each part was to consist, and what things were in each to be deposited. In "the first," or outer tabernacle, called "the sanctuary," he was to put "the candlestick, the table, and the shew bread;" and "after the second veil," or curtain, in that part "which is called the Holiest of all," there was to be "the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercyseat." And in like manner there were exact and minute directions, as to the priests who were to officiate, the offerings to be made, and as to the times, and seasons, and days. So that scarcely any single matter was left in trust to the discretion and affection of the worshippers.

Now in the New Testament on the other hand our directions for divine service are only some such short rules as these: "they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth;" John 4. 24; and "Let all things be done decently and in order." 1 Cor. 14. 40. All is left to the judgment of the church. All is to be decided by the reverence, and love, and obedient disposition of the worshippers. It is not doubted that we shall thus agree together touching what we shall ask. See Matt. 18. 19. It is not doubted that when the soul is influenced by faith and love, by zeal and humility, there will be in all public ordinances devout attention to the wishes of our Lord, unity amongst each other, and subjection to the authority of them that bear rule. Let us look to it then, that we unite to worship God, in tabernacles expressive of our respect unto his name, that we furnish them with all things needful for the due performance of a service suited to his majesty, and that we continually shew forth in them with thankfulness the Lord's death, till his coming.

But St. Paul would not stay to "speak particularly" of these several matters ordered about the tabernacle. It was not his design, in this place, to set forth the spiritual signification of its parts and furniture, of "the gifts and sacrifices" therein offered, of the "meats, and drinks, and divers washings," which were but "carnal ordinances," addressed chiefly to the senses of the body, not affording peace to the conscience, and being only "a figure for the time then present." Without explaining their figurative meaning, he insists upon this single point, as establishing the superiority of the second covenant, that only on one day each year did the high priest, and he alone, enter into the inmost sanctuary; and that "not without blood, which he offered for himself," as well as for "the errors of the people." And by this he tells us, that "the Holy Ghost signified, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest." Whereas in the Gospel all are plainly told by our great High Priest Himself, "I am the door; by me if any man enter in he shall be saved." John 10. 9. All may now enter, every day, into "the Holiest of all." All may approach unto the mercyseat of God, crying "Abba, Father," Gal. 4. 6, with the confidence of sons. All are invited to draw near and partake of the bread and wine, which signify and represent unto us the body and blood of Christ crucified. All are urged to press forward towards the presence of God, to go in with the Bridegroom to the marriage of the Lamb, to be with Christ, where He is, for ever.

O God, who hast thrown open to us the gates of heaven, give us the heart to long to enter in! O Saviour, who hast once for all made offering of thy blood, not for thyself, but for our transgressions, make us sensible that through Thee we now are cleansed make us zealous that through thy grace we may now be holy!

Christ the mediator of the New Testament.

11 But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building,

12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

13 For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh :

14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God ?

15 And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

|| Or, fault.

* Or, be brought in.

† Or, purified.

‡ Or, purple.

16 For where a testament is, there must also of necessity * be the death of the testator.

17 For a testament is of force after men are dead : otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

18 Whereupon neither the first testament was † dedicated without blood.

19 For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people, according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water and ‡ scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people,

20 Saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you.

21 Moreover he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry.

22 And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

§ 630. The blood of Christ cleanseth from sin

In the Law we read, "The life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." Lev. 17. 11. But this was only in reference to transgressions against the Law, and to penalties which were to be inflicted, during this world, in the flesh. So that "the blood of bulls and of goats," killed in sacrifice, and "the ashes of an heifer," that had been burnt as a sacrifice, "sprinkling the unclean," could do no more than sanctify to the purifying the flesh, to the exempting it from legal penalties. And in order to make atonement for the sins of the soul, to redeem us from everlasting death, and to obtain for us "good things to come," it was needful for our High Priest, to enter in once for all through the heavenly tabernacle, into the very heaven of heavens itself, there for us to offer the spotless sacrifice of his own most precious blood. And surely they who had been used to reckon themselves in any degree purified by the sacrifices of the Law, must acknowledge how much more likely it was that the blood of Christ, who through the operation of the Holy Spirit presented Himself blameless unto God, should purify not only the flesh but the conscience, so as for us henceforth with a clear conscience to serve the living God. Oh that we who have never seen with our eyes the convulsions of slaughtered animals on the altar, may be able to feel with no less force, how much we owe to Christ dying for us on the cross!

Thus it was that He became the Mediator of the Gospel, here spoken of as a new instrument of agreement, vouchsafed graciously from God to man. Thus it was, even by death; and for this end, that by his dying He might make atonement for those manifold transgressions, for which the former covenant made no provision; and that thus the chosen people of God, they who are called under either dispensation, might receive not merely blessings in this world, but that which is promised for the future, an eternal inheritance. For as a testament or will is not of force till after a man is dead, as the death of the testator must take place before any benefit is received by the other party; so the death of Christ was needful for our gain in the new covenant between God and man by Christ Jesus, which is therefore referred to by Himself as the New Testament in his blood. See Luke 22. 20. What a will was this for God to make! What an inheritance for man to gain! What a death for Christ to die! What a life for us, to live for ever!

And it is for this reason that "the first testament was dedicated" not without blood, to signify the necessity of the death of Christ. It was for this that Moses, after rehearsing to the people all the words of the Lord, took the blood of the sacrifices, and sprinkled with it "both the book and all the people," saying, "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." Exod. 24. 8. It was for this that "moreover he sprinkled with blood" the tabernacle, and all its furniture, and whatsoever was not to be otherwise purified either with water or with fire. It was for this that throughout the Law it was ordained that "without shedding of blood is no remission." Never therefore let us count for an unholy thing the blood of that better testament, which God has graciously made in our favour! Never let us act as if we were not aware, that its use is to purify our conscience "from dead works to serve the living God." Rather let us thankfully bear in mind that our Lord has, by the offering of Himself once made, obtained our eternal redemption. Rather let us say joyfully unto God, every one of us, in our Saviour's name, and referring to the atonement of his blood: "Thou shalt purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: Thou shalt wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." Ps. 51. 7.

How Christ offered Himself once for the sin of man.

23 It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heaven should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these.

24 For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us:

25 Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others;

26 For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

27 And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment:

28 So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

§ 631. How Christ will appear unto them that look for Him.

The things on earth, the things made by the hands of man, for the services of the Jewish tabernacle and temple, these patterns of things in the heavens, were of necessity purged or purified with the shedding and sprinkling of blood; in order that they might correctly represent the heavenly things, the real atonement once made for sin by the blood of Christ, and the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, to which we are admitted through the mediation of our Lord. For Christ entered not into the sanctuary on earth. He went not into the holy of holies, in the tabernacle or the temple at Jerusalem, "but into heaven itself," before the real mercysseat, the throne of God, surrounded as it is, not by carved cherubims, but by ten thousand times ten thousand saints and angels, there appearing as our Advocate in his Father's presence. What a consoling thought is this to the contrite sinner! What an encouragement to the stranger and pilgrim upon the earth, who is contending against the world, the flesh, and the devil, which wage ever fierce war against the soul! But, behold, these can say with confidence, behold Christ is on our side. He stands ready in God's presence to plead our cause. When we were born in sin, He prevailed that we should by baptism be born anew to righteousness. When we have fallen away from grace, He interceded, and we have been tried once more. When through our many remaining infirmities, we are still far, very far, short of what we ought to be, even his appearing in our behalf is enough to silence the tongue of our accusers; and we repeat in triumph over them that would condemn us: "It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is ever at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." Rom. 8. 34.

Not that we may suppose that He there offers Himself often, as it was the law for the high priest to enter every year into the holy place with blood, though not his own. For then must the same sacrifice have been often offered; since our High Priest is One who abides continually; and since the sacrifice which He offers is Himself. "But now once," at the end of one dispensation and at the beginning of another, "hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Whence it follows, that the atonement which He made reaches backwards throughout all ages past, as well as forwards throughout all that are to come; that it is sin which He put away by his sacrifice, that He did put it away, and that it was by sacrificing Himself. And as surely as all men have death appointed for their portion, as largely as the sentence of death extends, as universally as the judgment may be expected, so surely, so largely, so universally, for so many of mankind, even for all, was Christ once offered, to bear their sins.

But though He once took on Him the burden of the sins of all, can all reflect with joy that they shall one day see Him come again, and that with glory and great power, from his seat at the right hand of God, to pronounce judgment on the children of men? Far from it. Only they who now watch for his coming, only they who now live as if they think that He will come, only these, regard his second coming with hope and gladness, for unto them that thus "look for him," and unto them only, "shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." But to them how full of peace and holy ecstasy is the prospect of his glorious appearing; when He shall come as Judge, and no sins of theirs to rise up in judgment against them; when He shall be manifest as Saviour, and no evil heart of unbelief in them to hinder their enjoying his salvation; when sin blotted out shall be sin no more; when the sinner saved shall be the saint glorified!

Lord, let us now look for Thee as Thou wouldst have us, that hereafter we may find in Thee all that we desire! Lord manifest Thyself now unto us as a Saviour from sin, that we may then find in Thee a Saviour from death and hell, a Saviour unto life everlasting!

The Law could not by its sacrifices make the worshippers perfect.

1 For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect.

2 For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins.

3 But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

4 For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.

5 Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body || hast thou prepared me :

6 In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure.

7 Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God.

8 Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein ; which are offered by the law ;

9 Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God.

|| Or, thou hast fitted me.

He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.

10 By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

11 And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins :

12 But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God ;

13 From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool.

14 For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

15 Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us : for after that he had said before,

16 This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will ' put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them ;

17 And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18 Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

§ 632. Christ perfects for ever them that are sanctified.

In this passage the chief argument of the Epistle is concluded ; and the important conclusion is brought home to the conviction of the Hebrews, that whereas the Law could never " make the comers thereunto perfect," the Gospel could ; the High Priest of our profession, having by once offering Himself " perfected for ever them that are sanctified." Now that this was not done by the sacrifices of the Law is evident from the fact that they were over and over again repeated in behalf of the very same offenders. A renewed remembrance of sins was made year by year, so that it would occur frequently to each worshipper, in the course of his natural life. Whereas, had the worshippers been once thoroughly purified, they would " have had no more conscience of sins." So entire is the peace of mind which ensues on a right sense of God's forgiveness !

And further " it is not possible" in the nature of the things, " that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins." And accordingly in a prophecy, which the Jews allowed to pertain to the Messiah, the efficacy of burnt offerings, and of all such sacrifices for sin, is taken away, denied, disclaimed ; and the other way of atonement is established, the Son coming into the world, taking on Him our flesh, to do the will of God, to die for our sins. It is by this will then, this will of God, fulfilled and satisfied, it is by this that we are sanctified, " through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." So infinite in value is this heavenly sacrifice ! So possible is it, nay so certain, that the blood of Jesus Christ can take away sin, has taken it away !

Once more, let it be observed that according to the Law the very same sacrifices were repeatedly offered ; the priests standing in the temple one day after another, engaged in the same services, and slaughtering and burning animals of the same kind ; " which can never take away sins." Else the same needed not to have been repeated. But Christ Jesus makes no such repeated offerings, " after he had offered one sacrifice for sins," He " for ever sat down at the right hand of God." His work was complete. His victory was won. He sat down, for He had said, " It is finished." John 19. 30. He sat down, for He had yet to wait until the day of judgment for the full manifestation of his victory. He sat down, " for by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified."

Yes, his one offering has done all. His one offering of Himself is able to perfect us for ever. We ought to know that we need no other atonement. We ought to feel that we are now actually reconciled unto God. We ought to live as sons that sometime were disobedient, but are now loving God with so much the more fervent affection, in proportion as we have been abundantly forgiven. Yes, the Holy Ghost bears witness to us, that God will now thus give unto us the enlightened mind, the willing heart, the knowledge of the truth, and zeal in well doing. And after bearing this testimony the same Spirit has assured us of God, that He will remember no more our sins and iniquities. It is because these are remitted that no more sacrifice is offered. Oh that we may never foolishly attempt, by any work or worship of ours, to make fresh atonement for our sins ! And since there is now no more offering for sin made, we may be sure that our sins are remitted. Oh that we might feel so purified by the blood of Christ, as to have " no more conscience of sins ;" none of the fleshly mind afresh to sin, none of the spirit of bondage again to fear !

Motives to faith and holiness.

19 Having therefore, brethren, || boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus,

20 By a new and living way, which he hath * consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh;

21 And having an high priest over the house of God;

22 Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

23 Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;)

24 And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works:

25 Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching.

26 For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,

27 But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries.

28 He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses:

29 Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?

30 For we know him that hath said, 'Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people.

31 It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

|| Or, liberty.

* Or, new made.

1 Deut. 32. 35. Rom. 12. 19.

§ 633. Privileges, and duties, and warnings.

The apostle here sums up the chief points which he has established in former parts of the Epistle, that he may apply them to the Hebrews, and to us also, as motives of great force to produce stedfastness in the faith, and kind interest and active exertion in each other's spiritual welfare, and especially perseverance and mutual encouragement in our attendance on public worship. Let us therefore remember that the holy of holies, even the heaven of heavens, has been opened unto us by the blood of Jesus. We have reason to have good courage in the attempt to enter in. Jesus is our "new and living way." We enter "through the veil, that is to say, his flesh," which was separated from his soul by death, that we, both in soul and body, might live for ever. We have "an high priest over the house of God," one who has once made atonement for us, and who intercedes for us when we pray. "Let us draw near" with an honest and good heart, "in full assurance of faith," since we have had the benefit of having been sprinkled with Christ's blood, to cleanse our evil consciences, and have had our bodies washed with the purifying waters of baptism, which is indeed "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God." 1 Pet. 3. 21.

With these manifold privileges to encourage us, and with the certainty that "he is faithful that promised," "let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering." This was an exhortation most seasonable, at a time when the Hebrew Christians were greatly tempted, by the persecution they met with from the Jews, to make shipwreck of their faith. This is an exhortation not unseasonable now, when Christians are divided into so many different professions, and when the minds of the unstable and unwary are often driven and tossed about by every wind of doctrine, instead of resting in the haven of truth. "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works;" reckoning that it is no small part of our duty to watch for and seize occasions of edifying our brethren, and to encourage them both by our words and by our example, in every thing that our Lord would have us feel and do. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is;" as the Hebrews were much tempted to do, when attendance on public worship the more exposed them to persecution, and as many Christians are still much inclined to do, though to attend is now counted rather creditable than not. "But exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." The more thoroughly we are persuaded that the Lord is at hand, that there is a judgment to come, and that it will soon be here, let us the more faithfully admonish one another, let us the more fearlessly discharge our own duty to our Lord, in the face of an unbelieving world.

And here we have one more motive insisted on, from comparison with the Mosaic law, which law was sanctioned in many instances by unalterable sentence of death. How much sorer punishment must be in store for Christians, who have "received the knowledge of the truth," if they "sin wilfully!" They have no renewed sacrifice for sin to expect, but only a fiery and devouring indignation. They have treated with indignity "the Son of God." They have polluted the blood which cleansed them from sin, they have set the Holy Spirit at defiance by resisting his godly motions. And in them will be fulfilled under the New Testament, no less than under the Old, those terrible sentences, "Vengeance belongeth to me, and I will recompense, saith the Lord:" and again, "The Lord shall judge his people;" and again, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

The recompence awaiting perseverance.

32 But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;

33 Partly whilst ye were made a gazing stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.

34 For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

35 Cast not away therefore your confidence, which bath great recompence of reward.

36 For ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.

37 For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

38 Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

39 But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

§ 634. Believing to the saving of the soul.

This must have been a powerful argument to the Hebrews for perseverance in the faith, that they had already a great stake or interest in the Gospel, by reason of what they had suffered in its behalf. "Call to remembrance the former days," the preceding part of their own Christian course, "in which, after ye were illuminated," for the Gospel after the Law is light after darkness, "ye endured a great fight of afflictions," ye had a great conflict or struggle with afflictions. They fought against you, and you fought against them. Your sufferings endeavoured to have the mastery over your faith, and you watched and defended yourselves against their influence. "Partly whilst ye were made a gazing stock, both by reproaches and afflictions;" one of the most trying kinds of all persecution, public scorn and infamy, public exposure of our sufferings, or of our sorrows. "And partly whilst ye became companions of them that were so used;" one of the sufferings most appropriate to a Christian, to weep with them that weep, to share their burdens by helping to relieve them. This was the way in which the Hebrew Christians had proved their compassion for the apostle in his bonds, probably at the time when he was made a prisoner in the uproar at Jerusalem, see Acts 21. 13. 27, they had taken "joyfully the spoiling of their goods," they had professed boldly and thankfully their attachment to the Gospel, when it exposed them to the fury of a mob, and when he was himself to all appearance most unlikely to defend them. But they knew in themselves that they had laid up for them "in heaven" a better and an enduring substance, "everlasting habitations," Luke 16. 9, "bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that fideth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth." Luke 12. 33.

Have we ever once felt the confidence of hope that we have a stake and interest in that heavenly country? Let this be a reason with us not to cast away our "confidence, which hath great recompence of reward." If a man is brought up under the persuasion that he has a title to some fair estate, we all know with what fond attachment he clings to the hope of possessing it; we all know how much privation he endures for the present, rather than lose his title for the future, how he reckons on it as his own, long before he obtains possession, plans what he will do with it, and frames his own temper and habits, as well as those of his children after him, with a view to their fitness for the expected inheritance. Have we any such confident hope of heaven as this? Are we aware that we have need of like patience, if we would receive the things promised us by God? After we have done the will of God in one thing, we must do it in another and another. After we have done it yesterday, we must do it today. After we have done it today we must still do it tomorrow and tomorrow; as long as any tomorrow happens unto us. "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." We have not long to wait. This is another reason for us to wait with patience. "Behold I come quickly." Rev. 22. 7. This is the promise of our Lord. This is another reason for us in the meantime to suffer joyfully. Short is the utmost length of our sojourning on earth; endless the eternity for which we are here prepared. Light are the utmost afflictions of this present time in the comparison, yea, "not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom. 8. 18.

Now the same Scriptures testify both that "the just shall live by faith," and that if he "draw back" God will have "no pleasure in him." Which then, let us examine, which of the two is our condition? Are we living by faith? Do we believe, so as to live accordingly? Are we spending the whole time of our sojourn upon earth in one consistent course of holiness, out of the conviction that we are heirs of heaven, and as if we were preparing to enjoy it? or are we drawing back, shrinking from the pains and penalties which in an evil world ever accompany the profession of godliness? If the latter, our end is "perdition." To draw back is the way to perish everlastingly. If the former, salvation is before us. We "believe to the saving of the soul." When therefore our faith is tried by persecution, or our patience by long protracted pains, let us bethink ourselves of the assurances of our Lord, referring to everlasting joys and sorrows, "Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh!" "Woe unto you that laugh now, for ye shall mourn and weep!" Luke 6. 21. 25.

What faith is.

1 Now faith is the || substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

2 For by it the elders obtained a good report.

3 Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

4 By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead * yet speaketh.

5 By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

6 But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

7 By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, † moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

|| Or, ground, or, confidence.

* Or, is yet spoken of.

† Or, being wary.

§ 635. The faith of the elders.

The word here translated “substance” means confident assurance, the feeling as sure as if we were already in possession. And faith is to be assured of things hoped for, to be convinced on evidence, concerning things unseen, as firmly as if we could behold them. And religious faith in particular is to be thus convinced of things revealed to us by God, thus confidently to hope for what God has promised. Accordingly, by faith our minds receive this testimony, that “in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth;” made all things out of nothing, made them by his word, by the expression of his will; said, “Let there be light: and there was light.” Gen. 1. 3. This is a thing which no eye of man has seen. This is a thing of which we have certain information in God’s word. And when we feel as fully persuaded that so it was, as if we had been at hand to see, then we have faith in it, then we believe it, then our hearts and minds are in that state of reliance on God’s testimony, by which “the elders obtained a good report.”

Thus Abel “obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts.” For “the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering.” Gen. 4. 4. And this was because he offered it in faith. It was faith that made his sacrifice more excellent than that of Cain. It is by virtue of his faith that “he being dead yet speaketh.” His history still admonishes us in the Old Testament. His example is here pressed upon our attention in the New. And the lesson which he teaches us is this: Offer unto God the best of what thou hast. Offer not that which seems wise in thine own eyes, but that which God has required at thine hands. Offer, what thou offerest, not grudgingly or, of necessity, “for God loveth a cheerful giver.” 2 Cor. 9. 7. And to thy brother, if he be wroth, offer words of kindness; if he smite thee on thy right cheek, offer to him the other also; see Matt. 5. 39; if he rise up to slay thee, strive not thou to slay thy brother, but rather than hurt him, offer to die thyself.

“By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death.” He went not the way of all flesh. He died not, and yet he “was not found.” He was not to be seen on earth either alive or dead; “because God had translated him,” had taken him away direct from life on earth to life in heaven, had made him to be a signal proof to the patriarchs, as Elijah was to the Jews, and Christ to Christians, that this mortal body, can if God sees fit at once put on immortality. And this was owing to his faith. For before this happened “he had this testimony, that he pleased God.” And this he could not have done without believing. For no one would come to God at all, no one would take the pains to please God, except under the conviction “that he is,” that there really does exist this one living and true God, perfect in might, wisdom, and goodness, and also that “he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him,” that He will honour them that honour Him, as well as put to shame them that despise Him. See 1 Sam. 2. 30. And that Enoch thus believed we know further from the fact, that he laboured to impress this faith upon his brethren. For these were Enoch’s words which we read in the Epistle of St. Jude, ver. 14, “Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints.”

Noah also was both a believer and a “preacher of righteousness.” 2 Pet. 2. 5. He believed God’s warning voice. He was moved with such salutary fear of God’s judgments that he took the way of God’s appointing to escape them. By faith he “prepared an ark” so as to save himself and his family. By faith he “condemned” all those who would not believe, his obedience being sure to rise up in judgment against those who would neither listen to his words, nor follow his example. Thus he became “heir of the righteousness which is by faith.” He was not of them which draw back to perdition, but he was one of those who believe to the saving of the soul. See ch. 10. 39. Would we inherit the same righteousness, and attain the like salvation? Let us with Noah listen to God’s warnings. Let us with Enoch please God. Let us with Abel offer the sacrifice which God best likes, the willing mind, the thankful heart, resignation to his chastisements, obedience to his commands.

The faith of Abraham.

8 By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

9 By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise:

10 For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

11 Through faith also Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised.

12 Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable.

13 These all died in \dagger faith, not having received the \dagger Gr. according to faith.

promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14 For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country.

15 And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned.

16 But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city.

17 By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son,

18 \parallel Of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called:

19 Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure.

\parallel Or, To.

§ 636. That we must desire a heavenly country.

Several instances of the faith of Abraham are here insisted on, all most profitable for our instruction in righteousness. He went out from his own country into a place which was promised him for an inheritance; "not knowing whither he went," never having seen the country, never having journeyed on the road. And this he did, "when he was called." And this shews that it was "by faith." Oh let us also go readily whithersoever God calls us, whether it be to a new country, or to a new life, whether it be to live more according to his will, or to die and enter into his joy. "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country." Though it was his by promise, he did not take possession without leave, but dwelt in it as a stranger, moving from place to place in tents, "with Isaac and Jacob," who had the same ground of promise to count it for their own. Oh let not us then be so cager to enjoy all that God has promised, that we cannot meekly bear what first He bids us to endure! Oh let us even in the midst of Christian privileges, and with the foretaste of Christian joys, still feel whilst we are on earth that this is not our home, but wait anxiously for the heavenly Jerusalem, that city which abides for ever, "whose builder and maker is God."

Another instance of Abraham's faith was common to him with Sarah his wife. Because they "judged him faithful who had promised," they had the joy of a son born in their old age. And hence there sprung up the whole family of the children of Israel; who have ever since to the present hour been known with far greater certainty, preserved as one family with far greater purity, and increased to far greater amount of countless numbers, than any other family in the world. And these also have "all died in faith," as many as were really children of the faith of Abraham, as many as really inherited the promises made to Abraham, for it was only by faith that they could inherit them. And thus one of the most eminent of his seed expressed this feeling common to them all: "I am a stranger with thee: and a sojourner, as all my fathers were." Ps. 39. 14. Wherein it is evident that they were in expectation of some other country besides that which they enjoyed; as it is also certain that oftentimes they might if they would have returned to their first settlement in Ur of the Chaldees. Let us in like manner be glad to think that we have not here all that we could desire, glad to die that we may then receive all which God has promised. Let us desire "a better country, that is, an heavenly;" and behold, God is not ashamed to be called our God; even as He called Himself "the God of Abraham" Matt. 22. 32 our father; see Rom. 4. 16; behold God has prepared for us a city, behold Christ is gone to prepare a place for us. John 14. 2.

One more instance of the faith of Abraham, the most remarkable of all, is this, that when his obedience was put to proof by the command of God, "he offered up Isaac," yea "he laid him on the altar upon the wood," yea "he stretched forth his hand and took the knife to slay his son." Gen. 22. 9, 10. And this was his only son by the free woman, the very son of whom it had been promised him, "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." So that he must have believed in the ability and willingness of God "to raise him up even from the dead;" of which resurrection his deliverance was a lively figure. Oh that we may attain to the same lively persuasion that nothing is too hard for the Lord! Oh that we may attain to the same perfect obedience, to refuse nothing which the Lord has commanded! Whether it be a child that we are required to resign by death, or even a Christian privilege which God has given us for a time, and now seems to forbid us to enjoy, oh that we may have grace to say meekly unto Him, Be it unto me according to thy will!

The faith of Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and others.

20 By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come.

21 By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff.

22 By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones.

23 By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment.

24 By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;

25 Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season:

26 Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward.

27 By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible.

28 Through faith he kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the firstborn should touch them.

29 By faith they passed through the Red sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned.

30 By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days.

31 By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.

|| Or, remembered.

† Or, for Christ.

‡ Or, that were disobedient.

§ 637. How to examine our faith.

It is worthy of remark for our comfort, in the unprofitable strife of words, which has been often raised, as to the precedency of faith or works, that St. Paul, in all his instances of faith, dwells chiefly on the works by which faith wrought in believers. And this is the way in which he shews how faith is, as he had described it, the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of what is unseen. He points out how men acted upon the commands of God, with such readiness and zeal, and devotedness, as proved that they reposed trust in the fulfilment of his promises. Thus "Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come;" referring to God's promises to his family, and not doubting that they would be fulfilled in these his sons. Thus Jacob, at his own death, when he had himself no hope of settling in the promised land, did not hesitate to bless his sons and grandsons, and to divide it as an inheritance to their children after them. Thus Joseph also, "when he died, made mention of the departure of the Israelites" out of Egypt, and gave directions for the removal of his bones, that they might be buried in the land of promise.

And the like was the case with Moses, and in like manner was the faith of his parents proved by what they did, by their acting as if sure that God's word were true. They were persuaded that He would deliver them out of Egypt. And therefore, notwithstanding the king's commandment, they did all they could to save their child, whose comeliness very likely led them to expect, that he might be designed for some great part in their deliverance. And Moses himself, when grown up, refused, on the like ground of trust in God's promise, and respect unto the recompence of God's reward, refused to be treated as "the son of Pharaoh's daughter;" refused to enjoy all the gain and pleasures of the king of Egypt's court, preferring to suffer with God's people the persecution which they encountered for clinging to the hope of a Redeemer. With as much confidence as if he were seeing God "who is invisible," he stood in Pharaoh's presence and demanded the deliverance of God's people; he went out from before his face, and led them forth from the land of their oppressors. With as much care as if he had seen the destroying angel, about to execute the sentence of the Lord, he had the passover duly kept, and all the houses of the Israelites sprinkled with blood. With as much sense of safety, as if their road were through dry land, he led the people, and they passed through the very same "Red sea," which swallowed up the whole host of their pursuers. They, by the like faith, passed through safe. By the like faith, they marched, for seven successive days, round the walls of Jericho; not doubting that in the end God would give it into their hands. And Rahab also, who would else have fallen, in the fall of that devoted city, by the like faith escaped destruction; having proved her faith by saving the life of the spies, and having professed it by declaring, when she let them go, "I know that the Lord hath given you the land." Joshua 2. 9.

Let us examine then, do we in like manner really act, as if the things which we profess to believe, were conceived by us to be true? Do we bless our children, and labour for their advancement, not so much in the goods of this world, as "concerning things to come?" Do we so provide for our bodies whilst on earth as if we considered that they will be raised up from the grave to live again in heaven for ever? Do we refuse to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, and choose in preference the reproach of Christ, out of respect to the crown of glory which He will give us? Dare we encounter for conscience sake the wrath of them who can only kill the body, out of our fear of Him who can destroy both body and soul in hell? See Matt. 10. 28. This is the proof of faith, to do our duty fearlessly, to love our brethren affectionately. This is the faith by which we are saved, to feel as sure as if we could see Christ hanging on the cross, that He was crucified for our sins, and that by his stripes we are healed.

Instances of faith manifest in the fathers.

32 And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets:

33 Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions,

34 Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

35 Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection.

36 And others had trial of ~~cruel~~ mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment:

37 They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented;

38 (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.

39 And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise:

40 God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

|| Or, foreseen.

§ 638. How much more we ought to believe than they.

The main argument of this chapter is to be collected from the end of it. If all these without enjoying the thing promised, acted so devotedly on the faith of it, how much more ought we, who have had Christ crucified set before us in reality, how much more ought we for whom God has provided this better thing, the certainty of the fact, instead of the expectation of the promise, how much more ought we to obey heartily and thoroughly, how much more than they, who "without us," without that happening which has happened to us, could not have been made perfect, could not have had their hope fulfilled, their salvation accomplished! Let us therefore read the Old Testament under these impressions. Let us under these impressions hear the names and sufferings of the holy men of old here mentioned. Is our faith more lively, is our obedience more devout, than that of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae? In proportion as the testimony of facts past is more conclusive to the mind, than the promises of things future, are we better able than they, nay are we able, through faith to subdue kingdoms, the reign of sin and of Satan in our hearts, to work righteousness, the righteousness of the Gospel in our lives, to obtain promises, the gifts of grace by the power of prayer, to stop the mouths of lions, by our watchfulness and sobriety cutting off all occasion from that adversary the devil, who "as a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour?" 1 Pet. 5. 8. Can we as they did, quench the violence of fire, the fire of our own passions burning in our hearts? Can we like them escape the edge of the sword, that two edged sword, the word of God, escaping what it threatens by obtaining what it promises? Do we feel God's strength made perfect in our weakness, so as to be able to say with the apostle, "When I am weak then am I strong?" 2 Cor. 12. 10. And do we go forth in this strength of God, both defending our own souls from harm, and making the heathen to perish out of the Lord's inheritance; not destroying them by the weapons of worldly warfare, but converting them, to be no more heathens, by our prayers, and by our practice, and by our bearing witness to the truth?

By faith "women received their dead raised to life again." Do we sorrow over our dead, not as they that have no hope? See 1 Thess. 4. 13. Do we commit their bodies to the ground "in sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life?" (Burial Service.) "And others," when they might have escaped by renouncing the truth, preferred torture for the present, "that they might obtain a better resurrection." Are we willing to bear the worst that can happen to us now, yea the worst that men can do unto us by scorn or violence, and the more fierce encounters of our own lusts that war in our members; rather than by yielding to present pleasure to lose the crown of glory which passeth not away? "They were stoned, they were sawn asunder," they were pierced through, they were smitten to death, by the sword. In all these ways they were tempted by the extreme sufferings of the body, to yield up the constancy of the mind. And when they were such as that this world was at the best unworthy of them, they fared in it the worst of all men. Do we, like them, count all things but loss for Christ? Could we bear cheerfully the most painful death? Do we receive thankfully the most unexpected reverses in life? Are our minds so familiar with the sufferings of our Lord, are our hearts so anxious for likeness to his image, that we could be content, if it should so seem good to God, to be driven from the many comforts of our home, with no clothing but the skins of animals, no house but the dens and caves of the earth, to be at once destitute, afflicted, and tormented? This is the disposition which must come of our believing what Christ has really suffered for our sakes. This is the devout obedience to the will of God, which comes of loving Him who first loved us.

O God, who hast written for our instruction the mighty works which have been done of old through faith, before the coming of Christ in the flesh, grant that we, believing both what He has done, and what Thou hast promised for his sake yet to do in our behalf, may come behind in no one good thing, for the glory of thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

Motives to patient endurance.

1 Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us,

2 Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3 For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

4 Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.

5 And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him:

6 For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

7 If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?

8 But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons.

|| Or, beginner.

§ 639. God chastens us as sons.

The holy men of old, who by faith both suffered and did so great things, are not only examples for us to follow, but witnesses, whose presence ought to stir us up in following. Behold, they encompass us, thick in numbers, as a cloud. They look on, whilst we run the race of holiness on earth, with a view to the prize of heaven. There is joy in their presence when we prosper in our course. There is sorrow when we fall or fail. Let us then cast aside every encumbrance, whatsoever hinders us from getting on apace, and especially the sin that most besets us, whichsoever be the temptation of the world, of the flesh, or of the devil, that most hinders our prospect of success. "Looking unto Jesus," looking off from all other things, that we may have the eye singly fixed on Him. Looking unto Him, "as the author and finisher of our faith," in whom it is begun, continued, and ended; in whom we believe, and through whom we believe; and who is Himself in this very thing our most eminent example; having "for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame," having thus "run with patience," with perseverance and endurance his appointed race, and having attained to sit "down at the right hand of the throne of God."

Oh let us, when we are tempted to repine under affliction, let us consider what our Lord endured. When friends desert us, when strangers oppress us, when the sin we would fain loathe still haunts our imagination, till the soul grows weary of the conflict, let us, as a remedy against being faint in our minds, against falling into despondency or despair, let us consider how patiently, meekly, and firmly, Christ put up with the scorn and cruel usage of the very men whom He died to save. We have not been called upon, in our strife against sin, to resist unto blood, to suffer as He did the agonies of a lingering death; though it be indeed our duty, in the mortifying of the flesh, and in deadness to the allurements of the world, to be able to say, "I die daily." 1 Cor. 15. 31. And yet how apt are we to set our hearts on the joys of this life, how apt to think that it is best for us to prosper here, how apt to forget the exhortation which speaketh unto us as children: "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord;" for is it not next to scorn to think that prosperity would be better, is not this to think that we best know what is good for us? "Nor faint when thou art rebuked of him:" is not this fainting, to be more dead to duty, less alive to joy? "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," so that chastisement might serve us for a token of his love. "And scourgeth every son whom he receiveth," so that the blows He gives us ought to help in convincing us, that He is making us more fit to be taken unto Himself.

What, know we not that this is the way of earthly parents, that they thus deal with the son whom they acknowledge for their own; that they chasten him in order to his amendment; and that the chastisement they inflict is a sign to the beholders, not that the parents are lacking in affection, still less that they are not the parents, but on the contrary that they are, and that the child whom they chastise is acknowledged for their son? Thus then let us receive the chastisements of God; yea, whatever sufferings we are called upon for his sake to endure. It is my Father which is in heaven, who inflicts this for my good. I receive it as a proof that He is my Father. I take it for a kind token that He owns me for his son. I am thankful to think that He takes the pains to correct me. I am glad to find that He is carefully preparing me to dwell in the light of his countenance for ever. O heavenly Parent, let me not have my own way and will, but bend me to comply with thine! O Abba Father, give me grace to profit by all needful discipline in this my childhood upon earth, that under the salutary fear of thy correction, and in the encouraging expectation of thy praise, I may grow up unto the likeness of thine image, and unto a fitness for thy presence, even to be meet the inheritance of the saints in light!

How we ought to support ourselves under chastisement.

9 Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?

10 For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness.

11 Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

12 Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees;

13 And make *†*straight paths for your feet, lest

† Or, even.

† Or, fall from.

that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed.

14 Follow peace with all men, and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord:

15 Looking diligently, lest any man *†*fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled;

16 Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright.

17 For ye know, how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no *‡*place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

‡ Or, way to change his mind.

§ 640. That without holiness no man can see the Lord.

What father has not felt it go to his heart to be forced to inflict punishment on his children? It is true that in punishing them he may oftentimes be indulging his own angry or revengeful temper. But the most irritable of parents fail not sometimes to reflect, what is always present to the kind and tenderhearted, when they are applying the rod to their offspring, that it is their own flesh and blood which feels the blow. And it is the consciousness of this sympathy, as well as a conviction of the father's authority, which makes the children at once reverence and love the hand that chastises them. How much more then ought we meekly to submit to the chastisements of our spiritual Father, of whom we cannot doubt, that "for our profit" He chastises, since we know of Him that "God is love!" 1 John 4. 8. The child cannot indeed feel that the chastening is joyous, at the time when it is inflicted. It is grievous to the child; or it would not be chastening. The child usually at the moment begs to be let off; being unable, under the agony of the flesh, to value properly the improvement which is to be effected in the spirit. But the father answers, I do it for your greater good. And thus we may conceive God telling us, in our sufferings, It is good for you to be afflicted. It is in order for you to be partakers of holiness and of heaven. It gives you grief for the present, but joy for ever. And accordingly if we are now exercised by it as we ought to be, if the stubborn field that is in our hearts be well furrowed by the plough of adversity, if the harrow of persecution, or of any manner of affliction, tear up the weeds of hurtful lusts, or break the stony ground of pride and unbelief, it will afterwards yield "the peaceable fruit of righteousness," "the peace of God which passeth all understanding."

"Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees." We are addressed as if our strength were failing, or at least our spirits giving way in the midst of our race. We are exhorted, as if it lay with us, by our watchfulness, and diligence, and resolution, to renew our exertions, and to win the prize. And this is because we have the gift of the Spirit. This is because God worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Therefore we must work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. See Phil. 2. 12. Therefore, when we feel inclined to flag, we must stir up our strength, not by trusting in ourselves, but by having recourse in all humility unto Him, who delights to "revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." Isa. 57. 15. He will help us to "make straight the path" for our feet, for He can make "crooked things straight;" Isa. 42. 16; "lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." Nay, more, He can make the lame man to "leap as a hart." Isa. 35. 6.

But how different is our race of holiness from that which men call a race on earth; where all run, but only one receives the prize, and wherein each is as much concerned to hinder his brother as to get on himself! Here we must "follow peace with all men." We must not strive against each other. Nay we must help each other forward. We must follow peace and also "holiness." And this will come of our "looking unto Jesus," ver. 2, as the end and object of our course; for without holiness "no man shall see the Lord." Let us watch therefore in the spiritual husbandry of our hearts, that no root of bitterness against each other be suffered to spring up; that no one of us be tempted by anger or lust to barter for present pleasure our spiritual inheritance. Let us think of Esau who for a single meal "sold his birthright." Let us call to mind how bitterly he wept when all too late. Let us remember that however boundless is God's mercy in forgiving, this is revealed for our encouragement in holiness, not for our security in sin. If now we resist warnings, if now we abuse privileges, if now we neglect opportunities, the time may come, and God only knows how soon, when we shall cry, but He will not hear, when we shall be sentenced to that outer darkness, where shall be "weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. 22. 13.

The glories of the two covenants compared.

18 For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest,

19 And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard, intreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more:

20 (For they could not endure that which was commanded, And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart:

21 And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:)

22 But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels,

23 To the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect,

24 And to Jesus the mediator of the new [†]covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.

25 See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven:

26 Whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven.

27 And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.

28 Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, * let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear:

29 For our God is a consuming fire.

|| Or, enrolled.

† Or, testament.

‡ Or, may be shaken.

* Or, let us hold fast.

§ 641. How much we have to answer for as Christians.

"Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required." Luke 12. 48. These words of our Lord, like many other expressions to the same effect throughout the Gospel, form a salutary fence around the doctrines of grace; and prevent us from abusing what we know of God's love, by keeping us afraid of what is revealed of his judgments. Thus in the comparison before us, between the Law and the Gospel, we are warned that we "refuse not him that speaketh," even Jesus who had just before been described as speaking better things by his blood than Abel, the one interceding for mercy, the other crying aloud for vengeance. And yet we may not safely neglect to listen to the voice of Christ. Nay "if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth," if they who disobeyed under the former state of things were sure to suffer, much more we, if we neglect this "great salvation," ch. 2. 3, much more we, "if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven."

Awful indeed to all, it must be allowed, is the account of what happened in Mount Sinai, which no hand might touch, and which "burned with fire." Most affecting is the description in the book of Exodus, ch. 19, 20, and Deuteronomy, ch. 4, 5, of the "blackness, and darkness, and tempest," of "the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words." Most fearful to the senses, and through the senses to the apprehension of the mind, must have been these sights and sounds, when the people entreated that they might hear no more, when not even a beast might touch the mount and live, when Moses himself was so terrified at the sight, as to say, "I exceedingly fear and quake." And yet to us there is more of awe, in proportion as there is more of mercy, in the revelation of which we are partakers. We have more to fear if we refuse to hearken, in proportion as we have more to hope if we obey, nay more help at once given us towards obedience, more peace, and ease, and confidence, at once imparted for our enjoyment. Ours is the "mount Sion," our city "the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem," of this we are already citizens, our names enrolled as members of the same state with "an innumerable company of angels." With these we live in sweet communion, with these, and with "the general assembly and the church of the firstborn," whose names are written in the same holy place; with these we live in sweet communion, unto these we have access by faith under the Gospel, unto these, and unto God Himself. We live in company with "God the Judge of all," drawing near to Him in prayer continually; and with "the spirits of just men," with whom we are one by love, not only whilst yet in the body, but also when "made perfect," delivered from the burden of the flesh. And we are come unto "Jesus the mediator of the new covenant," our Advocate with the Father, our abiding High Priest, our never failing sacrifice, whose blood washes away our sins, and whose voice pleads for our forgiveness.

What a happy state is this for us to live in! What a profitable communion this to hold, with the excellent of the earth, with the great God of heaven! He will shake yet once more the things of his own appointment. As the former covenant is done away; so the earth also, and all the works that are therein will hereafter be removed. But their removal is as nothing, when compared with the world of grace, with the reign of righteousness, with the kingdom of Christ, which has now begun, in which we have received a place, and "which cannot be moved." All things else come to an end. But in us is begun a life which lasts for ever. We have an interest in a kingdom which is endless. Let us then serve God, as He would have us, with thankfulness and love, for our "God is love;" 1 John 4. 16; and with reverence and godly fear, for He is also a "consuming fire."

Exhortation to several Christian duties.

- 1 Let brotherly love continue.
- 2 Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.
- 3 Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.
- 4 Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.
- 5 Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, ¹ I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

6 So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

7 Remember them which || have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation:

8 Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and for ever.

9 Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein.

|| Or, are the guides.

§ 642. That we should be constant in our faith and love.

How forcibly are motives of the most opposite character brought to bear in Scripture upon the same Christian duties! Usually it is because God has loved us, that we are exhorted to love one another. Here it is immediately after reminding us that "our God is a consuming fire," ch. 12. 29, that the God revealed in the Gospel is the very same as the God revealed in the Law, One who in the end will destroy the wicked, it is immediately after this fearful warning, that St. Paul exhorts us, "Let brotherly love continue." And by the same motive he would urge us to exercise hospitality to them that are in want, to give refreshment according to our means unto those who apply for our assistance; adding for our encouragement a hint, that in so doing we may, when least we think it, fare like them who have entertained "angels unawares." So often are they wanting in this world's goods who most abound in heavenly treasures! So well is it worth our while to open our doors to all, if we might but once give food and lodging to a true servant of the Lord!

Under the same powerful sanctions we are exhorted to "remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them;" to feel unto prisoners as though we were fellow prisoners; and in like manner towards those who are in adversity, as though we were so also; remembering that as long as we are "in the body" we are liable to all the ills which we find befalling our brethren. Marriage, under the same sanctions, is to be respected by them that are single, and to be kept undefiled by them that are married. For God will judge all, who in either state, transgress the bounds which He has set to their desires. Contentment is another duty here enforced; whilst at the same time covetousness is forbidden. For why indeed should we be anxious for the morrow, when we have God's assurance, that He will never leave us nor forsake us? And how much greater would be our sin, how much heavier our punishment, if we distrust his fatherly provision and protection, when He has given us authority to say of Him, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me!" Oh that we may cast all our care on Him, knowing that He careth for us! Oh that we may never provoke Him by our disbelief of his love to cast us away in his displeasure!

Another duty of great weight here insisted on, is that we "remember them which have the rule" over us. And this means that we pay all due respect to those who rule in things spiritual, for the same are they who "have spoken unto" us "the word of God." It is their faith which we are to follow, it is the end of their conversation that we are to consider. The heaven to which they are advancing must be our end also. The Saviour whom they preach must be also our Lord. Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, and today, and for ever." He is the same to them that teach and to them that learn. He is the same from the foundation of the world, yea before the worlds were made; and will be the same when the worlds shall be no more. Therefore let not us be changeable. Had but Christians from the beginning of the Gospel obeyed this one plain direction, to follow the faith of their spiritual guides, had but their spiritual rulers borne in mind, that as Jesus Christ is unchangeable, so the Gospel could be but one, how safe should we have been from the "divers and strange doctrines" which have agitated the Christian community! Let us consider how great is the evil, how grievous the scandal, of our disunion; how utterly unprofitable in the primitive times were the disputes about the lawfulness of different kinds of meats, how alike vain and mischievous are the many idle questions, which have ever since, up to the present time, engrossed the thoughts of men eminent for their knowledge and profession of the truth. And let us therefore endeavour to vie with one another, not in subtilty of argument, but in our proficiency of grace, in our respectful remembrance of our spiritual guides, in our attachment to the old paths, in our earnest desire for our heavenly inheritance, and in the constancy, as well as the warmth of our affection, for our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Concluding exhortations.

10 We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle.

11 For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the high priest for sin, are burned without the camp.

12 Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate.*

13 Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach.

14 ¹ For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.

15 By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, † giving thanks to his name.

16 But to do good, and to communicate, forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

17 Obey them that || have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account: that they may do it with joy and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you.

18 Pray for us: for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly.

19 But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

20 Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting † covenant,

21 Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, * working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

22 And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation: for I have written a letter unto you in few words.

23 Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you.

24 Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you.

25 Grace be with you all. Amen.

§ 643. The ministers and the flock.

At the conclusion of this Epistle, St. Paul gives weight to his exhortations by once more referring to his main argument, the fulfilment of the Law in the Gospel; or rather the superiority of the Gospel to the Law, in every one of those points, in which the Jews were apt to think that they must lose by conforming to the Gospel, and amongst others, the altar and the sacrifices which on the altar were offered. Of these he might probably be reminded by having mentioned, ver. 9, the meats about which the Hebrews were tempted to dispute. And his argument is this, we Christians have an altar far better than the altar in the temple at Jerusalem; and a sacrifice of which they who minister at the Jewish tabernacle or temple have no right to eat. We have Christ crucified. We eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood. And by this means we have life in us, eternal life. For his flesh thus eaten spiritually is meat indeed. And his blood is drink indeed. See John 6. 55. And to prove that this Jesus is our sacrifice, let it be observed that as the Jewish sacrifices were burnt without the camp, so our Lord also, "that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate," was crucified beyond the walls of the city of Jerusalem.

When we consider these sufferings of our Lord, the shame and pain which for our sakes He endured, how gladly ought we to go forth "unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach;" how cheerfully ought we to submit to be the scorn of men, and to be counted for outcasts amongst our brethren. And when we remember that here we have "no continuing city," how little ought we to grieve in any call which may arise, to get us up out of our own country, or out of our own home, if we really are seeking "one to come," and if we have reason to hope that this will help to our attaining it! No, let us make bold to own our thankfulness to God, and let us be free both to give much and to give up all, for his sake. Whatever reproach we may incur, let us through Christ, our High Priest, offer to God continually the sacrifice of praise, which the prophet calls the "calves of our lips," Hosea 14. 2, and which the apostle by a like figure here speaks of as fruit presented on the altar. And whatever be the extent of our possessions in this our home of short continuance on earth, let us be mindful to do good with it, and to communicate our own blessings as largely as we can, "for with such sacrifices," when offered through the merits and mediation of our Lord, "God is well pleased."

And here once more we are reminded that we owe obedience and submission to them that have the rule over us. And that these are spiritual rulers we know, by its being added, "for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account." Now one reason why the rest ought to be subject unto them is this, that they may keep this watch "with joy, and not with grief." Another reason is that for them to do it with grief would be "unprofitable" to those for whom they watch. It is the interest then of the people to give heed unto their minister; to submit to his directions, to obey his rule. It should be their joy by these means to give him ground of rejoicing in the day of the Lord. It should be one object of their prayers to pray for him; as it ought to be also the heart's desire of the minister to have "a good conscience" in respect of his flock, "in all things willing to live honestly," wishing and endeavouring to be a faithful steward of the mysteries of God, to adorn in all things the doctrine of God our Saviour. Oh that He who is the Shepherd of the shepherds may maintain throughout his church this mutual affection between the pastor and the flock; that when separated they may pray to be together, when together may so live in love as to wish to part no more for ever!

But for this "the God of peace" must be with us. He "that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep," He must make us perfect, "through the blood of the everlasting covenant," "perfect in every good work to do his will;" He must work in us that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ. Then would ministers and people live together in uninterrupted harmony; the one watching for their precious charge of never dying souls, the other receiving thankfully the word of exhortation, the one ever studying how best to write or speak for the edifying of the other, the other counting what is said or written, though long, to be but short, seeing that they would gladly receive more. Such is the temper which the apostle would enforce. Such is the mutual love which he recommends by the warmth of his oft repeated salutation. Such is the good will amongst each other, and the interchange of good offices, which God designs to establish between the minister and the flock. Yes, the work is his. It must be of God's doing. It is most opposite to that pride and selfishness of ours, which else makes them that rule oppressive, and them that are subjected disobedient. It is the work of God. Of Him let us seek that it may prosper. To Him, whether it prosper, or through our folly fail, to Him be "glory for ever and ever. Amen."

THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES, I. 1—12.

That we must rejoice in our trials.

1 James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes, which are scattered abroad, greeting.

2 My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations;

3 Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience.

4 But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

5 If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

6 But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.

7 For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

8 A double minded man is unstable in all his ways.

9 Let the brother of low degree || rejoice in that he is exalted:

10 But the rich, in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away.

11 For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12 Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

|| Or, glory.

§ 644. The spiritual uses of poverty and of riches.

There were two apostles of the name of James; and the writer of this Epistle is the one, who in St. Mark's account of the crucifixion, is spoken of as "James the less." Mark 15. 40. He is several times mentioned in the New Testament, and there is reason to suppose, that whilst the other apostles went forth in different directions, to "preach the Gospel to every creature," Mark 16. 15, St. James continued to reside at Jerusalem, as president of the church in that city and neighbourhood. There his ministrations were of course chiefly confined to Jews. And thence he might with great propriety address his Epistle "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting," or wishing them in all things well. But trusting as we do that we are children of the faith of Abraham, and hoping that we shall be counted among the thousands of the twelve tribes, which shall be hereafter sealed, see Rev. 7. 4, we may profitably apply to our own instruction every one of the exhortations here set down. These refer partly to the state of persecution in which all Christians then lived, especially converted Jews, and partly they are directed against the sins of the tongue, including disputations, speculations, and objections, which the Jews were apt to substitute for the practice of religion. Let us then be prepared here to learn that practice is the true test of profession, that good works are the right proof of faith, and that of good works there are none of more importance than holy and edifying words.

And first let us observe, that to fall into temptation, so we fall not by it, so it lead not to our sinning, but to our growth by faith and patience, ought to be unto us a matter of rejoicing. We must not indeed forget that our Lord has taught us to pray to God, "lead us not into temptation." Luke 11. 4. A humble sense of our own infirmity must make us utter this prayer in earnest, must make us heartily desire to be spared the trials, in which we find ourselves so apt to fall. And yet when it has come to pass that we are tempted, when it has pleased God that we should thus be tried, we must aim always to rejoice in the tribulation. And our best way to gain the victory would be this, to be persuaded that we shall gain it, to rejoice in the thought of gaining it, to feel satisfied that the trial, now it is really come, is surely come for good. Let us therefore watch that the trying of our faith prove the exercise of our patience. Let us endeavour to let patience have her perfect work. And let us be aware, that it is only by being subjected to trial that we can become "perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

Only let us never forget that for our success we must have help of God. Nay, to be enabled to take this just view of our conflict, we must ask wisdom of God; that wisdom which is "easy to be intreated." Ch. 3. 17. We must ask of Him, who will neither refuse to give, nor reproach us with his gifts when given. Apt we are to suppose that though we cannot act without help, we can at least think just as we please. But wise thoughts, no less than holy actions, are, as here we learn, the gift of God, the fruit of the Spirit; to be granted, like any other grace, only to our prayers, only to prayers offered in faith. Let us therefore pray "nothing wavering," nothing doubting that God will grant, nothing hesitating in our wishes between God and mammon, not loving sin in our hearts whilst with our lips we ask for holiness, not inwardly bent upon being wicked whilst professedly we wish to be devout. This is to be doubleminded; and they that are so are unstable in all their ways. They have no faithfulness in prayer; they have no firmness in purpose; they have no consistency in conduct. "Let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord."

See then, if we pray faithfully, and have grace to think thus wisely of our trials, see how we might prevail in some of the chief temptations which are likely to befall us! Are we poor? is poverty our trial? Do the inconveniences of want oppress our spirits, lay snares for our truth or honesty, tempt us to discontent or unthankfulness? Here we learn how to rejoice in this temptation. We may rejoice in being exalted by the Gospel. We may rejoice in finding grace through Christ, in want to exercise contentment, in cold and nakedness to be thankful unto God, and in the most abject poverty to be rich in the sure prospect of our heavenly inheritance. Or are riches the means of tempting us? Here we may rejoice to think that they are the means of humbling us, if they lead us to reflect, that we have so much the more to part with when we are laid in that last home, where the rich and the poor meet together. Today we flourish. Tomorrow we wither. Today we have all that wealth can purchase. Tomorrow we become cold and naked, loathsome to the sight, and fit only for the grave. Might not thoughts like these greatly help to turn our hearts to riches which never fail? And might we not thus find great reason to rejoice in the riches which else make us worldly minded? Oh that we may thus endure every temptation, thus turn every trial into an occasion of triumph, thus in every conflict gain a victory over sin and Satan, and thus receive at the end of all, "the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him!"

Warnings against false religion.

13 Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with || evil, neither tempteth he any man:

14 But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.

15 Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

16 Do not err, my beloved brethren.

17 Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

18 Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures.

19 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath:

20 For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.

21 Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the en-grafted word, which is able to save your souls.

22 But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

23 For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass:

24 For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was.

25 But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his * deed.

26 If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.

27 Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

|| Or, evils.

* Or, doing.

§ 645. What true religion is.

It is the folly or the pride of man, to raise objections to what is revealed in the word of God. It is the condescension of God that answers them. Because we ought to count it all joy when we "fall into divers temptations," ver. 2, because God makes good come out of the evil, therefore it might be objected that it is God who tempts us, and thence we might be led to excuse ourselves in sin. But no, St. James replies, "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man;" that is to say, He no more tempts than He is capable of being tempted. It is by our own lusts that we are drawn away, and not by God, whensoever we commit sin. Our own evil desire is the parent of sin, as sin also is the parent of death. Most foul progeny of most hateful parentage! Most daring blasphemy to father it upon God! Most tender mercy of our Lord, to provide by the words of his apostle that we should know certainly that the origin of sin is in ourselves!

And as though this were a most important point for us to understand aright, the apostle affectionately adds, "Do not err, my beloved brethren." Let us be careful that in this matter we err not. Let us never lay our sins on any one but ourselves. Let us feel and acknowledge that they are always our own fault. And as to God, let us be deeply persuaded that from Him cometh only that which is good, even "every good gift, and every perfect gift," without admixture of any evil whatsoever. He it is who in the Gospel has begotten us anew to be his sons, "a kind of firstfruits of his creatures." For this, though spoken of the Jews as having the Gospel preached unto them before the Gentiles, may be also applied by us most justly to ourselves, as knowing the Gospel so much better than many Christians, so long before the great body of the heathen world. Let this mercy for which we have so great reason to be thankful, convince us that God tempts us not to evil, but rather in our temptations moves us to good.

And further we are here taught to be careful how we give utterance to any such objections. We are to be "swift to hear, slow to speak," ready to listen to instruction, and backward in raising difficulties. Least of all are we to press such matters in the spirit of contention, or to discuss them amongst each other in angry controversy. "For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." On the contrary, it is with meekness that we must both receive and recommend the truth of the Gospel; that word which as a fertile graft upon a wild and barren stock, bears the most precious of all fruit, the salvation of the soul.

Instead of all such wranglings, we here learn that the right way to hold the truth in religion is to be doers of the word and not mere hearers, nor, as we might add, mere speakers. Else we profit no more by what we hear than if we heard not at all. It makes no more impression on us in reality than a man's beholding his face in a glass. We see the image both of what we are and of what we ought to be. But how useless is the sight, if we go the way of our own will, instead of the way of God's commandments; and straightway forget what we beheld in the mirror of his word! Such speculations are not religion. Such talking of religion is not religion. It is no more than deceiving our own selves. Religion is to do what we know. It is to believe what in God's word we read, what out of it we hear. It is both to look into the law of liberty, and to continue therein. It is to bridle the tongue, to relieve the afflicted, and to keep ourselves uncorrupted by the world in which we live. It is to do, and to be blessed in our deed. It is to be what God would have us to be. And it is to enjoy what He has prepared for us to enjoy.

That the rich may not despise the poor.

1 My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons.

2 For if there come unto your [†] assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment;

3 And ye have respect to him that wearcth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here ^{||} in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool:

4 Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?

5 Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of * the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?

6 But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats?

[†] Gr. synagogue.

^{||} Or, well, or, seemly.

* Or, that.

[‡] Or, that law which said.

[¶] Or, glorieth.

7 Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

8 If ye fulfil the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well:

9 But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors.

10 For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point he is guilty of all.

11 [‡] For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law.

12 So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty.

13 For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy [¶] rejoiceth against judgment.

§ 646. How we shall be judged by the law of liberty.

That true religion consists not in profession but in practice, is here further argued by St. James. For as our faith would be vain if it lead us not to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, so it is deficient if we hold it "with respect of persons," if we exercise that love which should come of faith, more towards one class of persons than another. Particularly is this urged in a matter not uncommon at present, but which we should hardly have expected to hear of as occurring in the primitive congregations: the haughty behaviour of the rich towards the poor, a haughtiness often manifested by the poor also towards those who are some little poorer than themselves. "Hearken, my beloved brethren." This address shews how earnestly the apostle desires to engage our attention to the remark he has to make. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" This was particularly observable at the time when St. James wrote. For at the first it was chiefly from among the poor that there were likely to be converts to the Gospel. And though God has since chosen many rich as well as poor, yet if He has chosen many poor, this is ample reason why the poor should be respected by the rich. Let not us then be partial, and form evil judgments. Let us respect those whom God respects. Let us choose those whom God has chosen. And these are they that honour Him, whether they be rich or poor. "Them that honour me I will honour." 1 Sam. 2. 30. To them that honour God let us give the first place in our esteem and love, and if they would receive it, the place of honour every where.

The rich and powerful, in the time of St. James, were forward in persecuting the professors of the truth. This was another reason why the rich among Christians should have had no undue preference in their congregations. The sins to which riches minister, the pride and daring to which they often lead, should be an argument with us to entertain no undue partiality towards those who have them. We must love our neighbour, whether rich or poor, as ourselves. We must love our neighbour without reference to whether he be poor or rich. For if we were to do right in all things else, and yet transgress wilfully in this, we should transgress against the known will of God, we should be guilty of transgressing against all God's law. And this is the case in any other instance. Wilfully to murder, or wilfully to hate, which in the heart is murder, convicts us of transgressing the law, though we be not at the same time guilty of adultery. And this shews us how religion consists in the practice of the heart. For it consists not in the doing any one or more things outwardly, but in such a devout disposition of the heart as makes us to do all things faithfully.

We must act then in every thing under a lively apprehension of the future judgment. We must speak, and do, yea and think also, as they who will be "judged by the law of liberty," by the Gospel, which whilst it makes us free, also makes us answerable for our use of freedom. For even under the Gospel, "he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy." He who has despised or oppressed his poorer fellow servant, shall be delivered to the tormentors till he has paid what he never can pay, the uttermost farthing. See Matt. 18. 34. And also "mercy rejoiceth against judgment." Mercy shewn to others, shall help us to "have boldness in the day of judgment." 1 John 4. 17. He that has been tenderhearted towards his brethren, shall experience in that day the truth of what is written: "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." Matt. 5. 7.

That faith without works is dead.

14 What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?

15 If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food,

16 And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

17 Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, † being alone.

18 Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith || without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.

19 Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe and tremble.

20 But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

21 Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?

22 * Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

23 And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, † Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God.

24 Ye see then how that by works a man[†] is justified, and not by faith only.

25 Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?

26 For as the body without the † spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

† Gr. by itself.

|| Some copies read, by thy works.

* Or, Thou seest.

† Gen. 15. 6. Rom. 4. 3. Gal. 3. 6.

† Or, breath.

§ 647. The fruit of a lively faith.

How closely does error follow after in the progress of truth! How early in the Christian community was introduced this false and fatal notion, that faith might profit though unfruitful of good works! St. James had been pointing out that judgment is to be expected under the Gospel, no less than under the Law. See ver. 12, 13. Here he shews the folly of thinking to stand safe in that day by dint of an unfruitful faith. Such faith is properly no faith at all. It is not what is commonly meant when faith is mentioned in the Scriptures. It is little else than the profession of faith without feeling it. For this it is, which is most like saying to one who is in want, "Be ye warmed and filled," without giving him those things which are needful to the body. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." It is dead. It has no life, no activity. It does nothing. It does not justify. A man might as well say that he has works without faith, as that he has faith without works. It would be as easy, if not easier, to shew works without faith, and hence to argue that faith is implied; as to shew faith without works, and hence to suppose that works may be dispensed with. But besides the mere profession of faith, there is also meant in this place the conviction of the mind, that the Gospel cannot be disproved, or at least the utter inability to disprove it. This is such faith as the devils have, which "believe and tremble." Men also there are who wish that they could see their way to unbelief, but cannot. They had rather not believe, if they could help it. But the evidence is so strong that they know not how to gainsay it. They do so as far as they can. They would do so further if they could, if they durst. They have no joy and peace, but only fear and trembling, in believing. They believe that they must die, but they long to live. They believe that there is after death the judgment, but they fear to meet the Judge. They believe that Christ died to save sinners; but inasmuch as they have not had faith in their own redemption, inasmuch as they have not applied the promises to themselves, they are aware that they have only so much the more to answer for, in neglecting so great salvation.

Now that faith, in any sense of the word, without works is dead, the apostle shews by setting forth what were generally acknowledged for cases of lively faith, the faith of Abraham and the faith of Rahab. Both these persons, as was also argued in the Epistle to the Hebrews, see ch. 11. 17, 31, proved their faith by their works. In them, and in others like to them, faith wrought with their works, and "by works was faith made perfect." Faith is not complete faith without works. If we believe in earnest, we shall in earnest work, because we believe. If we work in earnest, our works, through the grace of God, will tend to advance us in believing. And this is because our belief depends, more than we are aware, upon the inclination of our hearts. We are apt to reason for ourselves, and to view the testimony of others, according to what we wish to be true. What we are averse to do, we are not easily persuaded to believe. Whatsoever then our present measure of faith demands of us, let us at once make haste to put it in practice. Whatever sacrifice we believe we ought to offer, let us offer. Whatever service to God we believe we ought to do, let us do. Else is our faith no more alive than "the body without the spirit." And if our faith be dead, we, let us remember, we are dead also. Only by good works can our faith be proved to be alive. Only by a lively faith can we be justified before God, through the atoning blood of Christ.

Of bridling the tongue.

1 My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater || condemnation.

2 For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.

3 Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us, and we turn about their whole body.

4 Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.

|| Or, judgment.

* Or, wood.

5 Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how great * a matter a little fire kindleth !

7 For every † kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of ‡ mankind :

8 But the tongue can no man tame ; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.

† Gr. nature.

‡ Gr. nature of man.

§ 648. The tongue subject to God's grace.

We have seen how we ought to rejoice in being tempted, if thereby we may find occasion to grow in faith. See ch. 1. 2—4. We have seen that we must prove our faith by our good works, that we must overcome when we are tempted, if we would obtain the crown of life. Let us therefore mark what evil works are here forbidden, what good works are especially here commended. "My brethren, be not many masters." Let us not be apt to set up for ruling and teaching. Let us be content rather to be subject to each other, to learn of each other. Let us be aware, that if we are forward to reprove our brethren, we shall ourselves "receive the greater condemnation. For in many things we offend all." We have all more than enough to answer for of our own. We all offend ; and all "in many things." How dare we then be so eager to find fault with one another, when we are so liable to the judgments of God ? How dare we be so anxious to lord it over our brethren, when we are such unprofitable servants ourselves ?

Amongst our numerous offences, there are none to which we are more frequently tempted, than those of the tongue. And perhaps it is because we are apt to think too lightly of them, as well as because it is so important to avoid them, that the apostle thus strongly insists upon their enormity. For words, though in one sense, they are not actions, both inflict as great an injury on our neighbours, and argue, if they be wicked, no less wickedness in ourselves. So that they are here compared to bits, by which when put into horses' mouths, we guide and govern their whole bodies, and also to helms which direct the courses of the largest ships ; as being things which are small in themselves, but most important in their effects. And in like manner they are compared to a little fire, which is sufficient to kindle one ever so large ; a single spark being the beginning, though the burning of a forest may be the end. And here we learn how the tongue is itself first set on fire. "It is set on fire of hell." It is Satan who tempts us to those idle words which no passion would else constrain us to utter. And thus it is that the tongue is so ungovernable, more so than the most wild of animals : and at the same time also so full of poison, more so than the most venomous of serpents.

But God can heal what man cannot. God can tame what man cannot. For the poison He has provided also the antidote. All the beasts of the forest are under his orders. The fire, and the spark that kindles it ; the ship, the fierce winds by which it is driven, and the helm which directs its course ; the horse, and his rider, and the bit by means of which he rides ; are all subject to the controul of Him, who made and governs all. Let us then apply to Him for help that we may guide and rule the tongue. Let us apply to Him for help that we "offend not in word." Let us watch, by his grace, every word we utter, that we utter it neither in vanity nor pride, neither in anger, jealousy, nor revenge. Let us pray that we may have grace to tame this unruly member. Let us tame it by often using it in prayer. Let us employ it, when thus brought under controul, in godly uses. Let us exercise it in edifying conversation. Let it be strong to testify to the truth of God's Gospel. Let it be swift to speak his praise, or to sing songs unto his name. Let it rejoice in ever carrying the tidings of salvation, not only from one to another in this Christian land, but from this land to all others, yea even unto the ends of the earth. Happy is he whose tongue is thus properly controuled, thus profitably employed ! Able is such an one also to bridle the whole body. He that can do the more difficult, can do the more easy. Without God's help we can do neither. With God's help we can do both. Without the grace of the Holy Ghost we can do nothing. With the grace of the Holy Ghost we can do every thing.

May God give us grace to tame the tongue, and also to bridle the whole body ! May God grant that whatsoever we say or do may be to his glory through Jesus Christ.

The inconsistency of the tongue.

9 Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God.

10 Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.

11 Doth a fountain send forth at the same || place sweet water and bitter?

12 Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

13 Who is a wise man, and endued with knowledge among you? let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom.

14 But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth.

15 This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, * sensual, devilish.

16 For where envying and strife is, there is † confusion and every evil work.

17 But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, ‡ without partiality, and without hypocrisy.

18 And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

|| Or, hole.

* Or, natural.

† Gr. tumult, or, unquietness.

‡ Or, without wrangling.

§ 649. The tongue guided by the heart.

St. James wishing further to awaken our attention to the sins of the tongue, here points out its grievous inconsistency. "Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God." Such at least is the practice of many men, to curse one while with the same lips, with which at another time they worship God. And must not every one of us be sensible, that our own lips, though they never, it may be, are heard to curse, yet oftentimes use language most inconsistent with the utterance of prayer and praise? When next we are tempted thus to abuse the gift of speech, when next we are about to utter angry or malicious expressions, proud, or unkind, or deceitful, or merely idle words, let us think of the consideration here insisted on. Let us reflect thus within ourselves: These lips which would now fain speak evil, how lately have they said prayers to God; how soon will they again make supplication unto Him, how soon again set forth his praise! No one spring sends forth two sorts of water. No one plant bears two sorts of fruit. Only the inconsistent mouth of man gives vent both to blessing and to cursing. Only our inconsistent hearts send forth from the same place, what is good "to the use of edifying," and also corrupt communication. Far be it from us to make our prayers unwelcome, by the vanity of our speech between whiles! Far be it from us to make our praises offensive unto God, by the ill temper of our ordinary discourse among men!

Who then "is a wise man, and endued with knowledge among you? let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom." This is to be our rule. Our conduct, and not only our lips, must give proof of heavenly wisdom. For herein there must be no pretence, no acting of a part, no hypocrisy. And therefore holy speaking of necessity implies holy living. The life, yea the heart also, must be upright, honest, sincere, full of purity, and truth, and love; before the tongue can with propriety express these feelings. This it is which keeps back most of us from talking as we would wish on the things of heaven; we are conscious that our hearts still linger upon earth; we feel that we should not be talking honestly, we fear lest we should disgrace our words by our behaviour. And this it is which makes godly talking to be not only so scarce, but so eminent an attainment; it cannot be really godly, without a godly life, here called "a good conversation."

And especially there must shine forth in our behaviour, what can least of all be there unless it be in the heart; this quality of meekness, or as the apostle here calls it, "meekness of wisdom." And this is as if he would assure us, that gentleness and forbearance are not, as men are apt to fancy, the sign of weakness and folly, but the token of true wisdom, of that wisdom which "is from above." Whilst on the other hand, a contentious spirit, an unforgiving spirit, a spirit that is resolved always to have the advantage in dealing, the victory in contention, the last word in an argument, the first place in the esteem of the beholders, this is the spirit which "descendeth not from above," this if it be any wisdom at all, is such as is "earthly, sensual, devilish." Thus closely is this duty in our behaviour connected with that which is the chief duty of the heart, the love which "vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up," which "suffereth long, and is kind." 1 Cor. 13. 4. Charity in the heart, and charity alone, can insure meekness of wisdom in the life. Charity in the heart, and charity alone, can make us in our behaviour to be "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." And only from such conversation as this, and therefore only from charity in the heart, can we hope to reap that "fruit of righteousness," which "is sown in peace of them that make peace," and which is reaped in peace for evermore, through Him who has made our peace with God. He it is who is the Prince of Peace. Isa. 9. 6. He it is who has told us, and may we never forget his words: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." Matt. 5. 9.

9 Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.

10 Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

§ 650. Humility before God.

As angry and contentious words are among the chief sins of the tongue, so wars and fightings are among the most sinful of our actions. It is therefore needful for us to know whence these wrarrings and contentions come; that we may be the better on our guard to avoid them. It is even of our lusts that war in our members; these are the source of all the evil desires which we cherish; the coveting what is not fit for us to have, the coveting what belongs to one another. When thus we covet we are apt to speak arrogantly, apt to act contentiously. Nay we are also apt to ask selfishly, we are apt to pray wrongfully. The spirit of strife and covetousness intrudes into our very prayers. We ask for things which we could not have without detriment to each other, or injury to our own souls. We ask for what we wish to consume upon our lusts, to employ in gratifying our pride, or selfishness, or sensuality.

Those who pray in this spirit are here addressed by St. James as "adulterers and adulteresses," and are warned that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God." For this is spiritual adultery, when we are bound by every tie to God in Christ, when we are wedded to our Lord as members of his church, then to desert the love of Him for the love of the wicked world, then to set our affections not on heaven but on earth, this is to be unfaithful, this is to commit adultery in the soul. And not without the utmost peril is such sin committed. In many places has the Scripture testified against all such wilful thoughts, all such evil desires. Whereas to those who resist them, to those who set their hearts on God, "He giveth more grace," even unto them who in humility of mind are faithful to their heavenly Lord. "Submit yourselves therefore to God." Contend not for your own will either in your words or in your works. Remember "God resisteth the proud;" you fight against Him who is almighty. Contend not against God. Contend not against each other. Consider every temptation to pride, anger, selfishness, or revenge, as the suggestion of the devil. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." In this and in all things else he is the very opposite of God. Exercise against this worst of enemies the steadfast resolution which you are apt to shew in striving against God, the courage and perseverance and strength which you often spend in fighting with your brethren. God, when resisted, resists to your destruction. Satan, when thus encountered, ~~meets~~ and yields, and ceases to torment. Here success is certain. Here you may be sure of victory. Here you may war and yet be peaceable; fight, and yet not cherish the lusts warring in your members. You gain, and yet your brethren lose not. You conquer, and they share in your eternal triumph.

But it is not in your own strength that you must fight with Satan. You must conduct the combat in the spirit of prayer. "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." Apply to Him for help. Make Him your friend. Humble yourself in his sight. "Cleanse your hands," whatsoever you have done wrong, and there is "no man that sinneth not." 1 Kings 8. 46. Purify your heart, whatsoever you have thought amiss. And where is the heart which is perfect before God? Where is the mind which is singly fixed upon the doing of his will? "Let your laughter," in whatsoever you have laughed sinfully, "be turned into mourning; and your joy, where it has been worldly, carnal, selfish, be changed "to heaviness." Thus humble yourself "in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." If fallen, He will raise you anew; and when you stand, He will hinder you from falling. When you feel yourselves to be lowest, He will make you highest. He will lift you up above worldly cares, above proud thoughts, above selfish wishes, above sensual desires. He will lift you up above pride, envy, jealousy, above friendship with the world unto friendship with Himself. Yes, we may be friends with God. Christ has reconciled us. He has given us access through the Spirit unto the Father. See Eph. 2. 18. He has set us in heavenly places, see Eph. 2. 6, admitted us to be citizens of "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Heb. 11. 10. What would we wish for higher than to be lifted up to heaven? What would we aim at loftier than to "ever be with the Lord?" 1 Thess. 4. 17.

Against other sins of the tongue.

11 Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

12 There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who art thou that judgest another?

13 'Go to now, ye that say, To day or to morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain:

14 Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? || It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

15 For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

16 But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil.

17 Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

§ 651. The sinfulness of not doing what we know.

More sins of the tongue are here set forth, especially speaking evil of each other, and also speaking of the future without sufficiently reflecting that we "know not what shall be on the morrow." And these sins the apostle seems particularly to point out to the attention of those amongst his readers, who are the most advanced in faith and piety. For whereas in the exhortations which went before he said, "Ye sinners," and again, "Ye double-minded," ver. 8, he here says, "speak not evil one of another, brethren." Ye then who dwell together as brethren, ye who love one another for the sake of Christ your Lord, watch that ye speak no evil of each other, watch that ye speak no evil wilfully of any man. For see to what this speaking evil of each other amounts; it is no less than speaking evil of the law, and judging the law. It is judging that which it is our business to obey. It is taking to ourselves the part of judge. It is judging the law, inasmuch as it is interpreting it, applying it in passing sentence upon others, whilst we ought only to apply it in passing sentence against ourselves. And further it is judging the law, inasmuch as it is finding fault with the law. The law by which we Christians are bound has forbidden us to speak evil against each other. But they who delight in censure defend themselves by saying that they cannot help judging, cannot help condemning, that they must be allowed to find fault with each other, or they might as well not talk at all. And this is a sin against which the more advanced of Christians had need be especially on their guard, for this reason, that the better they do themselves, they will the more clearly see, and will be the more tempted by Satan to condemn, the faults of them who do most amiss.

Another sin against which we must all watch most diligently, is the speaking without sufficient reference to the overruling providence of God. "To day or to morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain." This is the way in which men commonly discourse, even many who know better than to imagine that these things depend only on their own determination. We ought, however, all of us to think within ourselves, every time we form any purpose for the morrow of this world, we ought to think that it is not impossible, that we may not continue thus long to be on earth at all. We ought to remember that our life here "is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." We ought to be looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, see 2 Pet. 3. 12, the only sure tomorrow, whose sun will never set. And the nearer we approach in our faith and conduct to the Christian rule and pattern, we ought the more readily to express these convictions in our speech, we ought the more often to remark, "If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that." For such a manner of speaking most becomes those who in other things are best, who live most according to such words as these. And besides, as they are acquainted with the will of the Lord, they have the most to answer for if they neglect to do it.

To know to do good, and yet not to do it, this beyond all dispute is sin. How manifest then is the sin of Christians who are familiar with these directions of St. James, and yet who never once in all their lives use any such expressions as "If the Lord will!" How doubly sinful is their sin, if they rejoice in their boastings, if they glory in speaking positively of their plans, if they pride themselves on being secure of success, by dint of their own wisdom, or strength, or union! "All such rejoicing is evil." All such rejoicing is little else than glorying in their shame. For is it not our disgrace to be blind to the overruling providence of God? Is it not our deep disgrace to see it, and know of it, but to refuse to own it? What can we expect to receive at the hands of Him whom we thus deny, except that He will also deny us? Oh let us then make haste to own his power, let us glory in acknowledging our dependence on his will. Let us feel that without his leave we can do nothing. Let us feel that we can do every thing if the Lord permit. And let us be in the habit of looking to Him for permission and assistance, in all that we do and say and think; knowing that He, and He alone, can make all things work together for our good.

The vanity and perils of wealth.

1 Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

2 Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3 Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.

4 Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth.

5 Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter.

6 Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

|| Or, Be long patient, or, suffer with long patience.

7 || Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain.

8 Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9 † Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the judge standeth before the door.

10 Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience.

11 Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

† Or, Groan, or, grieve not.

§ 652. The advantages of patient submission.

The last thing urged upon us in the preceding chapter, is the expression of our dependence upon the providence of God. And in order to express this properly, we must feel it deeply. Now there is nothing so apt as ample wealth to beget in us a vain trust in this present world, and a forgetfulness of what is continually going on around us in the world which is unseen. Here therefore St. James impresses on us the vanity of riches; and the perils to which they expose us. How soon these things, in which we glory, moulder and decay! Riches consisting oftentimes of perishable goods, how soon are they corrupted! Garments, of which great store used to form a chief part of wealth, how often when thus laid up are they the food of moths! Gold and silver, the most precious metals, the universal token, and means of wealth, these too are liable to be cankered! So impossible is it for any thing we can amass on earth to last for our continual enjoyment, even if we ourselves could last to enjoy it!

But next observe how fearful is the responsibility of those who, possessing wealth, use it wrongfully. The rust of their money, if they hoard it selfishly, shall eat their flesh "as it were fire." The mere possession of what they ought long ago to have spent or given, shall be a witness against them at the bar of judgment. In thus treasuring up unprofitable riches, they do but treasure up ~~themselves~~ "wrath against the day of wrath." Rom. 2. 5. Or if further they have taken advantage of their labourers, if they have gained by oppression as well as hoarded in avarice, or if instead of hoarding, they have spent in wanton luxury and pleasurable sin; then behold the cries of those whom they have wronged are heard by Almighty God, and the more abundantly they have here enjoyed themselves to the loss of their fellow-creatures, the more large is their punishment hereafter.

Now it is the character of the just that he does not resist oppression. He submits rather than contend. He submits, as did that only really Just One, who was led "as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth." Is. 53. 7. It is true that ~~he~~ more we submit, the oppressor takes the more advantage. But this advantage is his loss and our gain. And it may be that by our submission we may gain him also; we may convince him that it is more blessed to suffer than to wrong. For so has Christ set us the example. And so does the apostle here exhort us, "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." When oppressed, we are to wait for the day of judgment, as husbandmen for the harvest. We must spare no loss, no cost, for the present; which may help us towards fruit for the future. We must not grudge or envy those who fare better than ourselves. Least of all must we covet the prosperity of the wicked. "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh." This is enough to stablish our hearts in patience. "Behold, the Judge standeth before the door." This may further serve to make us loathe the advantages of iniquity.

And especially we are to take for our encouragement the example of those "who have spoken in the name of the Lord," and who have endured many and grievous things for the Lord's sake. Such were those of whom we read in the Epistle to the Hebrews, who "were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword." Heb. 11. 37. Such also was Job; in whose history we have this advantage, that it tells us how well he fared in the end, it shews us how all the time we suffer, God is reserving in his mercy the best till the last. How happy do we count Job, as we dwell on what befel him! How do our hearts burn within us as we ponder on the sufferings, the consolations, and the exceeding great reward, of those holy men of old who persevered unto the end! Why should we not now rejoice to share their sorrows, if we hope to attain unto their joys? How can we think of murmuring under the like burden of affliction, when we reckon on wearing the same crown of glory?

How to use the tongue profitably.

12 But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation.

13 Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms.

14 Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:

15 And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

16 Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

17 Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed || earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

18 And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19 Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

20 Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.

|| Or, in his prayer.

§ 653. The effect of mutual prayers.

St. James concludes his Epistle with pressing on us that which he has all along kept in view, the importance of a right government of the tongue. "Above all things, my brethren, swear not." "Above all things," for this sin is most wanton. "Above all things," for it is therefore most offensive. It has no natural temptation urging it. It is the most absolute and obvious device of the enemy of souls. It is the most daring and inexcusable transgression of the revealed will of God our Saviour. Make then no approach whatever to any such practice as swearing. Swear not by any oath whatever. Let your words be always true, and they will need no such confirmation. Let them never be thus confirmed; or you transgress, and are exposed to punishment.

Rather use the tongue continually in the holy exercises of prayer and praise. In your affliction, instead of taking God's name in vain, pray to Him in earnest. In your joy, instead of making light of his majesty, sing psalms to his glory. In sickness invite others to pray with you, such as are advanced at once in age and piety. To these there was often imparted in primitive times the power of working miracles. For a sign they used to anoint with oil in the name of the Lord. And having the faith to work the miracle, they by their prayers could prevail with the Lord to raise up the sick, and to forgive his sins. Though at present we experience no such marvellous healings of the body, let us still call in each other's aid in the diseases of the soul. Let us confess our faults "one to another," with a view to secure the help of each other's prayers. Let us "pray one for another," in the full assurance of faith that we can help each other by thus praying. It is as true at the present moment as it ever was, that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." What speed ought this one thought to give to us in following after righteousness, that our prayers may thus become more profitable for our brethren! With what freedom ought it to inspire us in confessing our faults to each other, that we might thus be more particularly prayed for by the righteous! Far be it from us always to justify ourselves! Far be it from us always to study how we may best conceal our faults from our brethren! How much nearer unto heavenly healing is an humble and sincere confession! How earnestly ought we to desire to be prayed for by our brethren! How heartily ought we to pray for them!

And what encouragement for these holy uses of the tongue is set forth in the two particulars following; the success of Elijah in his prayers, and the fruit which may attend our own in the conversion of sinners! The first shews us how much the fervent prayer of faith avails. The second tells us how much we may hope to do by our praying, as well as by the diligent use of edifying words, towards saving the souls of our brethren. And it is by the tongue that we may greatly influence them for good. Words are our chief means of conveying to each other our own several convictions. Words serve for the chief utterance of our requests to God. Would we then promote the manifestation of God's glory upon the earth, by abundance of grace, like rain after a drought, shed abroad after a long season of spiritual barrenness? Let us pray fervently that God's kingdom come. Let us intercede very frequently and very heartily with Him, that it would please Him to make known his ways upon earth, his saving health unto all nations. Would we save a soul from death, would we hide in our erring brethren the multitude of their sins? Let us endeavour always so to speak as to edify the hearers. Let us in our words shew continually our own most serious impression of divine things. Let us in our words make manifest as far as possible our faith and charity, our hope, and peace, and joy in believing. And let us in our prayers make frequent mention of such as err from the truth, especially if they have confessed their faults to us with this view, begging of God that He will hear their prayers, turn their hearts, and save their souls; and giving thanks to God that He counts us worthy of the honour of helping them forward in the way of salvation.

May God hear our prayers for our brethren! May God give us grace for ourselves, that no corrupt communication ever proceed out of our mouths; but only that which may serve to edify our neighbour, and glorify his holy name. To Him be all honour and glory, now, henceforth, and for ever. Amen.

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER. 1. 1, 2.

St. Peter's salutation.

1 Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.
2 Elect according to the foreknowledge of God

§ 654. Our election.

St. Peter addresses his Epistle "to the strangers scattered throughout" various places which he names, probably meaning the Jewish converts, who had been driven abroad into those parts by the persecutions at Jerusalem. And he calls them "strangers," both because they were by these means torn from their own homes, and also in order to signify to them and to us, that it is well to count ourselves for strangers upon the earth. For this Epistle is not addressed only to the scattered Israelites, nor only to the Gentile converts amongst whom they lived, but to all Christians in all lands, and in all times. All we as Christians are "scattered," dispersed amongst the rest of mankind, few amongst many. We have no abiding place on earth, but seek a better country, that is, an heavenly. See Heb. 11. 16. Oh that God may give us grace to set our faces thitherward in earnest!

For this end it will be most profitable for us to look upon ourselves as "elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father." That is to say, we have all been chosen to be Christians, chosen to be members of Christ; all Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles, however exclusively the Jews might suppose themselves to be elected, chosen to be children of God; chosen to be heirs of heaven, according to the purpose of Him, who knows all things, whose will is in all things supreme. We have all been chosen "through sanctification of the Spirit," appointed to be made meet for heaven by being made holy upon earth, through the power of the Holy Ghost. We have all been chosen "unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ," set apart to be a peculiar people zealous of good works, out of our sense of God's mercy in cleansing us by the atoning blood of our Saviour. Could we but thus think of our privileges, how could we bear for one moment to lose sight of them? Could we but thus esteem ourselves devoted by God's own purpose to holiness and heaven, how could we so abase ourselves as to sin, how so sin as to fall away unto perdition? We are heirs of glory. Heaven is ours. God has appointed it. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, we are to be admitted into the full enjoyment of never ending happiness. What can give us peace, if this will not suffice? What is grace, and favour, and inestimable bounty, if not this? Oh that God who has begun in us this good work may make it perfect! Oh that God who at the first has chosen us, may so multiply unto us his grace and peace, as to bring us to glory in the end, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

God to be blessed for his gracious gift.

3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his || abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

4 To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven † for you,

5 Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

6 Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season if need be ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

7 That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ:

8 Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory:

9 Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls.

10 Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you:

11 Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.

12 Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.

|| Gr. much.

† Or, for us.

§ 655. How prophets and also angels have longed to know the Gospel.

What a blessing it is to know God as He is, "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ!" What a privilege to have been begotten again, "according to his abundant mercy," "unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead!" We are no longer overpowered with dismay, at the thought of meeting God face to face. He is the Father of our Saviour. He loved us so greatly that He gave his Son to die for our salvation. We are no longer disheartened at the prospect of losing, when we die, all we have loved on earth. We have a hope of better things. Christ is the firstfruits of them that sleep. As He rose again from the dead, so shall we also arise "to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven" for us. And to this we are born anew, begotten anew. And it is God's doing. It is God who has anew begotten us. It is God who reserves for us this inheritance in heaven. It is by the power of God that we are kept, as in a place of security "through faith unto salvation," which salvation is "ready to be revealed in the last time." Let us therefore think of it as being in readiness to be manifested. Let us esteem ourselves as being in safety, secure of enjoying it; secure, if we believe; secure, if our faith work by love; secure as in a fortress from the assaults of all our enemies. For "the name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe." Prov. 18. 10.

Having then a hope so full of glory, how is it that we hesitate to rejoice? Surely we do not hope in earnest. Surely if we are not always rejoicing, we do not in earnest believe. Can it be that a few trials depress the spirits of a Christian for any continuance? Can it be that with all which God has promised as secure as his word is true, we can for any length of time be in heaviness, because we are not at once exempt from suffering? The trial of our faith, let us remember, like the trying of gold or of any other precious metal, is designed to prove its excellency. That which is tried in the fire, however pure, perishes at last. That which is tried in the furnace of affliction, our faith, instead of perishing, is "found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." If we love Him now, though we see Him not; if out of our belief in Him, whilst for the present He is not seen, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; we shall receive "the end of our faith, even the salvation" of our souls, we shall find that our faith, which has been thus tried, ends in eternal joy.

Of this salvation the prophets of old time used to enquire and search diligently; even they who by the direction of the Holy Ghost spake beforehand of this great grace of God, whereof we are partakers. They were not content merely to convey these intimations to mankind. They were most anxious to understand what they were directed to reveal. Though they knew that "not unto themselves but unto us they did minister," or announce as God's ministers, the things which were afterwards preached by the apostles, and confirmed with mighty signs and wonders, yet they were very anxious to know beforehand what was about to happen, at what time, and in what kind of season Christ should suffer, and his church be glorified. Nay not prophets only are anxious, but angels also stoop down from heaven, to look into the mysteries of the Gospel. And shall we neglect to search? Shall we be indifferent to know? Shall we dare to be ignorant, when we have so graciously been taught? Oh, shame to our ungrateful hearts, that we love so little, where we have been loved so much! Oh, blessing, and honour, and glory be to God; that He still bears with our perversity, still reserves for us, if at length we will believe, the salvation of our souls!

Motives to fear and to love.

13 Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope || to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ;

14 As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance:

15 But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

16 Because it is written, ¹ Be ye holy; for I am holy.

17 And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear:

18 Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers;

19 But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot:

20 Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you,

21 Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.

22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

23 Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

24 † For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away:

25 But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.

* § 656. How we are begotten anew by the word of God.

To gird up the loins was necessary for those who usually wore long and flowing garments, if they would prepare themselves for any exertion of strength or speed. Let us then gird up the loins of our minds. Let us exert all the strength and speed of our understandings, that we may apprehend clearly, quickly, forcibly, the whole counsel of God for our salvation. Let us be sober, soberminded, forming no ungrounded expectations; yet at the same time hoping to the uttermost all that God has given us ground to hope for, even the grace or great gift of glory that is to be brought unto us, when our Lord shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. See Heb. 9. 28. And having this hope thus cherished in us, let us live according to it, let us obey God as his children; not living in the lusts we used to live in before our minds were enlivened and enlightened; but as He who has called us is holy, so let us be "holy in all manner of conversation." For to no less than this has He exhorted us; to be holy as He is holy; to be perfect as He is perfect. See Matt. 5. 48. Let us therefore aim at no less than this. Let us never wilfully do any one thing, less according to God's will, than at the time we might or could do. Let us never wilfully think a single thought, nor speak a single word, more offensive than we can help, to his perfect purity, more unworthy of his perfect love.

We call on God as our Father. We have access unto Him as sons. We are encouraged by his loving kindness to draw near to Him, to become like unto Him. But at the same time, for our further security, we are reminded of how sore punishment awaits us if we resist his will, how surely He will judge "without respect of persons," "according to every man's work;" we are taught to perfect holiness in the fear of God. See 2 Cor. 7. 1. Thus with the love of God we must unite the fear of offending Him. We must fear Him and love Him at the same time. Let our fear therefore arise from our sense of his goodness, from the consideration of his grace in redeeming us, from the thought of what a sacrifice He consented to make in order to win us from our vain conversation and abominable sins. Yes, it was "the precious blood of Christ," that spotless Lamb, who was indeed "foreordained before the foundation of the world," but has in these last times been manifested for us, this it was that God gave for us, this it was that God received as a full, perfect, and sufficient atonement. Let us therefore "believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory." Let us believe so as to fear. Let us fear so as at the same time to hope and also to love.

And let us observe that one chief fruit and token of our love to God is this, that we love the brethren. It is unto this that we have purified our souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit. It is unto this that we are born again, by the word of God, that incorruptible seed, "which liveth and abideth for ever." The blood of our fathers according to the flesh, now flowing in our veins, must cease to flow, must turn to corruption. The new principle of life infused into our hearts by the word of the Gospel, this never dies. Never, as long as that word is within us, never shall we cease to love one another, never shall we cease to love our Lord. The grass must wither, and the flower fall away. The flesh must moulder in decay, and the glory of man be utterly forgotten. "But the word of the Lord endureth for ever." That in us which quickens, quickens everlastingly. That in us which is quickened, dies no more. We die not, but we sleep in Jesus. See 1 Thess. 4. 14. We die not, but we depart, to be with Christ where He is. See Phil. 1. 23. We never cease to live. We never cease to love.

God give us this new and endless life! God grant, that we may live in love, henceforth for ever!

Christ the chief corner stone.

1 Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings,

6 Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, 'Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.

7 Unto you therefore which believe he is † precious: but unto them which be disobedient, † the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head

§ 657. How we might reply to temptation.

How many striking figures are here forcibly set forth, in order to help us in understanding the value of our privileges, and to move us to undertake in earnest the discharge of our duties! We are to "desire the sincere milk of the word," "as newborn babes;" to love the Gospel and to delight in receiving it, as heartily, as much above all other things, as infants love their mother's milk. Having once tasted it, once found in it how gracious the Lord is, we must ever after cling to it, and feed upon it, in order that we "may grow thereby." We must come unto the Lord as unto a living stone, "a chief corner stone, elect, precious," the main stay, and connexion, and foundation of that living temple his church; wherein we also as lively stones must be "built up a spiritual house;" to be at once the temple and the priesthood, at once the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit of God, and the worshippers who therein "offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

Let us then remember that "the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner." And when we think how our blessed Lord was rejected by the Jews, how "He came unto his own, and his own received him not," John 1. 11, let us beware lest He be to us also "a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence." Let us beware lest we "stumble at the word, being disobedient," and so be numbered with those who have been appointed to destruction. Rather let us regard our Lord as He is set forth to us in Scripture, "the head of the corner;" that which ties together all the rest of the building, that which is over the rest supreme. Let us endeavour to feel united unto Him as parts of the same building, ministering to the same use, the glory of God.

Or to dwell on the other figure, let us regard ourselves as a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people. As Aaron and his family were set apart from the other children of Israel, to offer sacrifices to the Lord, as the children of Israel were separated from the rest of mankind, to be united in covenant with Jehovah, so let all Christians glory in the thought, that God has chosen them to be his people, and his priests; his people, now admitted to share his mercy, though heretofore shut out from his covenant; his priests, "to shew forth the praises of him who hath called" us "out of darkness into his marvellous light." To Satan and to sinners, when they entice and tempt us, let us stedfastly make answer, I have now obtained mercy; I am holy unto the Lord. To sloth, and fear, and foolish shame, when they would tie our tongues from making mention of our Saviour's love, let us constantly and firmly reply, I am dedicated as a priest to offer spiritual sacrifice; it is my proper business not only to make my light shine before men, in a pure and holy life, but to make them glorify my Father which is in heaven by a heavenly and edifying communication.

And further we may add, whatsoever here would stay us from advancing in our heavenward journey, I am a stranger in the land. I have not the heart to enjoy the fleshly lusts, which are the custom of the place. My affections are far away at my Father's house. I am a pilgrim, on my journey to the heavenly Jerusalem; and these pleasures of which you invite me to partake, war against the soul. My great object is to pass safe as through an enemy's country. And it is my heart's desire to make known as I go along, the great goodness and glory of the God I serve. O ye who speak against us as evil doers, in vain do you also tempt us to ill behaviour! Behold our conversation, behold the good works, which through God's help, we are enabled to do and learn you also to glorify God, who "hath visited and redeemed his people." Luke 1. 68.

Instruction in our duties to each other.

13 Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

14 Or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

15 For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

16 As free, and not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.

17 † Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the king.

18 Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

19 For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

20 For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is † acceptable with God.

21 For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered * for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

22 Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

23 Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but § committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

24 Who his own self bare our sins in his own body ¶ on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed.

§ 658. That we ought to be thankful if we with patience suffer wrongfully.

From the mention of our being "strangers and pilgrims," St. Peter had been led to beseech us so to behave amongst surrounding unbelievers, as that they also might "glorify God." Ver. 12. Here he points out some few duties in particular, which at the time when he wrote this Epistle would be very helpful towards that end. The early Christians, especially the Jewish converts, were likely to think, that as Christ was their King, they were the less bound to obey their earthly rulers; and that as Christ had made them free, they were less obliged to fulfil their earthly service. And even if they were preserved from falling into this delusion, it was not unlikely to be laid to their charge, and to prove a scandal in the path of the unbelieving Gentiles. But we are here taught that "for the Lord's sake" we are to submit ourselves "to every ordinance of man." Our heavenly King will have us obey our earthly king. He who "judgeth according to every man's work," ch. 1. 17, requires us to be subject unto those who have authority on earth "for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well." Thus therefore we "put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." We are better subjects in proportion as we are better Christians. In proportion as we are really free through Christ, we use not our liberty as a plea for doing evil, but are so much the more obedient as servants of God. We give "honour to whom honour" is due, Rom. 13. 7, paying all due respect to all men. We love the brotherhood, loving all men as brethren. We "fear God," our King which is in heaven. And because we fear to displease Him, we "honour the king," his minister upon the earth. If we are servants, or even if slaves, for such were servants for the most part when these words were written, we are so much the more subject to our masters, with all reasonable fear: and that, "not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward."

This is a most signal advantage which Christians have in the performance of all relative duties; they do right no less faithfully, though the rest do wrong. Nay, this is one more thing for which they give thanks to God, if for conscience sake towards Him they patiently "endure grief, suffering wrongfully." To be condemned when innocent, to be buffeted when not in fault, to suffer as evil doers when all the while we "do well," which is so great a grievance in the eyes of the worldly minded, of which they complain so loudly, against which they protest so vehemently, that is welcomed with thanks by the true disciple of Christ, for this, if it be not courted presumptuously, but "taken patiently," "this is acceptable unto God."

Yes, this is what Christ Himself endured; this is the example which He left us; in these steps of his we are all called to follow. He "did no sin" yet was treated as a malefactor. In his mouth no guile was found. And yet He was taken for an impostor. He, when He was thus reviled, "reviled not again." When He thus suffered wrongfully, He neither inflicted nor threatened retribution, but, with intercession in behalf of his oppressors, "committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." He left it not for us to bear our own burdens. He turned from us those evils, which we most justly have deserved. He "his own self," in our stead, "bare our sins," even ours, "in his own body," even in his, on the cross. And all this He underwent for our gain; "that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness." So that by his stripes we are healed. We, who were sick have been made well. We, who ought to have suffered, have been forgiven. We, who were as sheep that have wandered from the fold, without food, at the mercy of the wolf, have been gathered in by his unwearied pains, redeemed by his undeserved love, and secured under his guardianship for ever.

God grant that we may follow where our Shepherd leads, and go whithersoever He calls us; though it be to do well and suffer for it, still to take it patiently, nay then most of all to suffer thankfully!

Duties of wives and husbands.

1 Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection ~~to~~ your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives;

2 While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.

3 Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorn- ing of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel;

4 But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

5 For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands:

6 Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose † daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.

† Gr. children.

‡ Or, loving to the brethren.

7 Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered.

8 Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, ‡ love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous:

9 Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing.

10 For † he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile:

11 Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it.

12 For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is ‡ against them that do evil.

† Ps. 34. 12, &c.

§ 659. God's favour to the righteous.

At the first preaching of the Gospel, it was not unlikely to happen oftentimes, that husband or wife might be converted, the one without the other. Nay now also, when both parties profess to be Christians, how frequently is the one in earnest, and the other a hypocrite, the one a Christian indeed, and the other a mere professor! In case the wife be the sincere convert, what could be a more affecting motive, for her to put in practice the Christian duties of a wife, than the hope of helping to convert the husband? It is on this ground that St. Peter takes occasion to set forth what the Christian duties of a wife are. To be in subjection to her own husband, even though he "obey not the word," is one of the first and chief. "Chaste conversation coupled with fear," united with this respectful deference to the husband's wishes, is another. A third duty, here enforced, is not to have her adorning consist in outward ornaments, as in "plaiting the hair," and wearing of gold, and putting on of apparel, but in "a meek and quiet spirit," that ornament which never can wear out, and which, however little it may be esteemed on earth, "is in the sight of God of great price." This was the way in which the holy women of old adorned themselves. It was in this spirit that "Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord." And as men must glory in being sons of the father of the faithful; so might women rejoice to think, that they are counted for daughters of one who "trusted in God," as long as, like her, they "do well," taking warning also from her fall not to be "afraid with any amazement." See Gen. 18. 15.

"Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge," behave to wives with a temper suitable to your greater opportunities of instruction. Prove that you know, by doing accordingly. If you are stronger, so much the more pay respect to the weaker. Live together as joint heirs "of the grace of life," of the free gift of life eternal. So live together in spiritual love, that you may cordially unite in prayer to God, that your prayers be never hindered by your disagreement.

"Finally, be ye all of one mind," not only husbands and wives, but all Christians, let all live in harmony with each other, "having compassion one of another," being ready to forgive, to forbear, to give assistance. "Be pitiful," feeling deeply each other's sorrows. "Be courteous," behaving kindly, speaking gently, tenderly, considerately. Neither return ill treatment with ill treatment, nor evil words with evil words; "but contrariwise blessing," finding always something kind to do, something pleasant to say; "knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing," remembering how God has to you returned good for evil, has in the midst of your disobedience bestowed on you salvation. Would you then enjoy his proffered it with abhorrence. "Seek peace, and ensue it," follow after and cleave unto that which is good. If your prayers will be hindered. Else the face of the Lord is against you. If you do evil wilfully, if you speak harshly, act wrongfully, if when you have been made heirs of a blessing, you have the heart to prove a curse to your brethren, then behold God turns away from you the light of his countenance, nay He sets Himself in array against you. But "the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers." This is the encouragement which we have in abhorring evil, in following after good. God looks upon us with favourable regard. God listens to our prayers, and delights to grant them. We see by faith the countenance of our Saviour looking on us with unspeakable love. We hear by faith his voice thus cheering us: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Matt. 7. 7.

Of suffering for righteousness' sake.

13 And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?

14 But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and 'be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;

15 But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and || fear:

16 Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

17 For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing.

18 For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

19 By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison;

20 Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.

21 The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ:

22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

1 Is. 8. 12, 13.

.. || Or, reverence.

§ 660. Noah and the flood a type of Christ and Christian baptism.

Godliness does in a very eminent degree confer advantage in this present life. And few are they who will purposely do us harm if we be in earnest "followers of that which is good." But if there be some, nay if there be many, who are disposed to injure us, we still are gainers by the hurt which they inflict. If we suffer for righteousness' sake, we are only so much the more happy. The enmity between the seed of the serpent, and the seed of the woman, is maintained by the animosity still manifest in the world, against believers in Christ. The children of Belial do really take delight in tormenting the brethren of the Lord. And as it fell out at the first preaching of the Gospel, that the disciples were mocked, scourged, imprisoned, and put to death, for Christ's sake, so it will now sometimes happen, that we are called upon to suffer persecution for righteousness' sake.

In such a case the first thing we are concerned to do, is to "sanctify the Lord God" in our hearts; to reverence God so much the more devoutly, yea, to fear Him who alone can destroy both body and soul. See Matt. 10. 28. Next let us be ready, both prepared and willing, to declare to others the grounds of our religious convictions; "with meekness and fear," not proud of our own privileges, and yet deeply alarmed for their peril. Further let us see to it that we have a good conscience. Let us take care that we give no occasion by our misconduct for the adversaries of our faith to triumph. Let us endeavour rather to put them to shame by our good conversation in Christ; to convince others, and themselves, as far as possible, that they falsely accuse us of evil doing. And let us never forget, if God so order it that we suffer for well doing, how much better this is for us than that we should suffer for evil doing. For it is by this means that we approach unto the likeness of our Lord; seeing that He "once suffered for sins," though He did no sin Himself; and died on the cross, "the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God."

In the flesh our blessed Lord was "put to death," in the body which was prepared, and which He took upon Himself, on purpose that He might suffer instead of us who sinned. But by the Spirit He was quickened, by being the eternal Spirit He overcame death, He lives for evermore. It was He who by his Spirit preached of old unto the spirits of mankind, imprisoned in the flesh not willingly as his was, but of necessity; even to those who lived before the flood, and whom He called by means of Noah, that preacher of righteousness, the righteousness of Christ. See 2 Pct. 2. 5. Noah was a type of Christ, and the flood was a type of Christian baptism. Men were disobedient to God in the time of Noah. They are disobedient now. The longsuffering of God waited in his days, "while the ark was a preparing." It waits now, while the church is being made meet for heaven. In the ark few, that is, eight souls were then saved by means of water. The same water which destroyed the rest was the means of preserving Noah and his family. How few are in the ark of the church compared with the multitude who are in the deluge of the world! How many are washed in the flesh with the waters of baptism, who for want of "the answer of a good conscience toward God," will find it to increase their condemnation! How few, out of the many buried with Christ in baptism unto death, now rise again with Him to newness of life, or will hereafter be partakers of his kingdom in heaven!

O Lord, who hast now angels and authorities and powers subject unto Thee, grant that they may effectually minister to them that shall be heirs of salvation! Grant that we, by their help and comfort, under thy grace and guidance, may rise again with Thee in newness of life, and ascend in heart and mind to heaven where thou art!

Exhortations to cease from sin.

1 Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin;

2 That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

3 For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries:

4 Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

5 Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

6 For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

7 But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

8 And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity || shall cover the multitude of sins.

9 Use hospitality one to another without grudging.

10 As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

11 If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

|| Or, will.

§ 661. That we must soon render an account.

Christ suffered even unto death. Let us arm ourselves with the thought that we are dead like Him, dead to the allurements of sin. And this is one chief use of our ordinary sufferings. They make us pause in our career; if it be a career of sinfulness. They benumb for a time our sense of worldly pleasures. They give us leisure to reflect on its vanity; and to turn ourselves to the search for better things. In imprisonment, and peril of death, or when smarting with unaffected grief under the loss of well beloved friends, how worthless even to the carnally minded seem "lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries!" How worse than worthless, even hateful, loathsome, do such things as these appear, to those of us who have experienced grief for sin, who mourn for the dishonour done to God, by every wilful or heedless sinner! Armed with the mind that was in Jesus, we bear patiently and cheerfully the weight of our affliction. But whilst our hearts are aching for the folly of our fellow creatures, and the wounds which they inflict upon our Lord, we cannot endure to live the rest of our "time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God." Strange as our conduct must appear to the companions of our former foolishness, we plainly tell them that we abhor their "excess of riot," or their lukewarmness in devotion. And whatever evil they may speak of us, we go on our way rejoicing in hope, and also faithfully warning them to flee from the wrath to come.

They, and we, and all, must one day give account for all that we do here. We must give account as men who have been redeemed by Christ, and who might have borne, if they would, much fruit to his glory. He is "ready to judge the quick and the dead." For to them also who had died ere the apostle's time the Gospel, as he before observed, had been preached. See ch. 3. 19. And this both enabled them to live according to God in the spirit, and made them liable to be judged for what they had done in the flesh. Yes, the Gospel has been thus far preached to all men, by having been preached by Adam, and preached by Noah. For in case of such glad tidings of great joy, God must be considered to have amply done his part in revealing it to a few, seeing that these were straitly bound to make it known to all. How indeed can we believe it in earnest, and not diligently labour to communicate our faith? And how, if we labour not in this work of the Lord, how can we pretend that we believe in Him at all?

But whether we believe or no, whether or not we labour in the propagation of the Gospel, the truth of it is sure, Christ is "ready to judge," "the end of all things is at hand." What an extensive change is this single truth well fitted to work in the whole tenour of our lives! We are within a short distance of eternity. We are entrusted for a short time with our several talents; and we know not how soon we shall be summoned to the reckoning. We are stewards of all the things which we are here apt to call our own. And we are liable at any moment to receive this notice, "give an account of thy stewardship." Luke 16. 2. Who in such a case can bear to think of running riot in excess? Who would not rather be found watching and at prayer? And above all things let us have fervent charity among ourselves. Let us be as desirous to hide the trespasses of our brethren, as we are anxious to have our own forgiven. Let the measure of the blessings we receive of God, be the measure of what we desire to impart to our brethren. Whether it be in entertaining strangers, and relieving the needy, or in proclaiming the Gospel to the ignorant, and enforcing its importance on the careless and the gay, let us in all things seek to give as it has been given unto us, to love as we have ourselves been beloved. Let us in all things aim at this end above all others, that "God may be glorified through Jesus Christ; to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

Comfort under apprehended persecution.

12 Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you :

13 But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

14 If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye ; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you : on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

15 But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters.

16 Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed ; but let him glorify God on this behalf.

17 For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God : and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God ?

18 And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear ?

19 Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

§ 662. Judgment must begin at the house of God.

In proportion to the great advantage of sufferings, if rightly used, is the anxiety here manifested by the apostle, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit of God, the anxiety that we should rightly use them. We cannot indeed very easily imagine how fiery that trial was, how acute those pains, how fearful that persecution, by which the faith of the early Christians was very frequently put to proof. For ourselves, we find it hard even to be thought singular by our friends. We feel it grating to flesh and blood, to give up ever so little of our gain, ever so little of our comforts, ever so little of our earthly affections, for the sake of winning Christ for ever. What would have been our case, what would be now our conduct, if we must either suppress our convictions of the truth, or encounter the most virulent slander, the most cruel torture, loss of goods, imprisonment, banishment, or death ?

Yet even things like these we ought not to count for strange. We ought to be prepared in heart to bear them, if it should please God to let them come. We ought to be familiar with them, as often meditating on what our Lord endured, often longing that we might be privileged to share the burden of his cross. O Lord, we ought to pray sincerely, O Lord, let us be partakers of thy sufferings, that when thy glory shall be revealed we "may be glad also with exceeding joy." O Lord, we ought often thus to offer up our thanks ; O Lord, happy are we in being reproached for thy name. To Thee be all the praise, for "that spirit of glory and of God," which these reproaches thus borne make to rest upon us. To Thee be all the praise, that we are able thus to bear them ; that whilst on the part of others Thou art evil spoken of, on our part Thou art glorified !

But far be from us the delusion of supposing, that whilst we are suffering reproach for the name of Christ, we are the more at liberty to indulge in wilful sin ; that we may make up as it were unto ourselves, for what we lose in the esteem of men, by indulging our evil propensities, in murder or robbery, in hatred or dishonesty, in wronging or intermeddling with one another ! Far be from us that blind conceit, which would ascribe to our Christian profession, such scorn, or hurt, or loss, as is in truth the consequence of practices like these ! No, it must be "as a Christian," it must be for being Christians, for doing good, for believing truth, not for doing evil, not for believing a lie, it must be thus that we suffer, if we would "not be ashamed," if we would "glorify God on this behalf."

Instead of so presuming on having taken the part of God, instead of presuming on any immunity in sin, by reason of our professing to be servants of Christ, let us remember, that now "judgment must begin at the house of God ;" let us remember, that we who name the name of Christ, have the most to answer for, and are the most bounden to depart from iniquity. How hard then is it even for the righteous to be saved ! How hardly shall they that have the riches of God's grace, give a sufficient account of their many talents ; and make good their entrance into the kingdom of heaven ! What then "shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God ?" "Where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear ?"

Lord, let us be on thy side, not only in professing thy religion, but also in doing thy will ! Lord, whilst we are suffering according to the will of God, let us also persevere in well doing ! Lord, when we have done all, let us commit our souls unto our heavenly Father, in full assurance of hope, that He will, as He has promised, count us righteous for thy sake !

Exhortations to the old and to the young.

1 The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:

2 Feed the flock of God || which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

3 Neither as being * lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

4 And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

5 Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

6 Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

7 Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.

8 Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour:

9 Whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren which are in the world.

10 But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

11 To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

12 By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.

13 The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son.

14 Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

|| Or, as much as in you is.

* Or, overruling.

§ 663. Of resisting the devil.

The elders whom St. Peter here exhorts were the presiding ministers in the several churches; selected probably from those who were oldest in the faith, those who had for the longest time been experienced in the grace of God. St. Peter speaks of himself as a fellow elder, that he may the better introduce his exhortation but adds that he was "a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed." May his authority, and his example, give weight to these his words in the estimation of all ministers for ever! May they be moved like him to feed the flock of God, not by desire of worldly gain but by the love which they bear to Christ, not doing the work as a task but as a pleasure, not exercising their rule as if they loved dominion, but turning it to account as examples to the flock. And when the Shepherd of the shepherds shall appear, may they who have preached salvation to others, not fall short of it themselves, but "receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away!"

"Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder." The precepts of the Gospel give usually a twofold security for peace. The elder must rule meekly. The younger must meekly submit. If but one party obey their rule, both derive advantage. How much more when both parties are obedient! Let us then each in our several stations choose subjection in preference to command. Let us think rather of what we owe to those above us, than of what is due to us from those below us. Let us have humility for the clothing of all other graces. Let us humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, in the hope that He will then most largely give us grace when we are most abundantly humble, trusting that He will exalt us in his good time, and casting all our care on Him, because He careth for us.

We have before been told, to "be sober and watch unto prayer," because "the end of all things is at hand." Ch. 4. 7. The Bridegroom will soon be here to take us in with Him to his wedding. But further, we have a spiritual enemy, ever seeking to devour us, with all the eagerness of a lion looking for his prey. It is some comfort to think that this also is no "strange trial," but an affliction to which every one of us must needs be subject, during our sojourn upon earth. To be "stedfast in the faith," is a sure means of successfully resisting. Let us then meet our enemy with this conviction in our hearts, and with this prayer on our lips, that God, to whom we owe every good gift, and who has invited us by Jesus Christ to partake of his eternal glory, will after we have suffered awhile, make us perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle us. Lord, however sure our great enemy may feel of succeeding against our souls, do Thou frustrate all his wiles! Lord, however glorious be our victory over Satan, to Thee be all the glory, all the praise!

St. Peter mentions that he sent this Epistle by Silvanus, whom he knew to be a very faithful brother to those whom he addressed. For he would teach us to take all means in our power, to recommend our testimony and exhortations to one another. He testified that the Gospel, in which they then were believers, is "the true grace of God." For he would have all men know that whatever may have been their faith before, whatever their notions of God, there is no real God except the God of the Scriptures, no saving faith except faith in Christ. He sends them the salutations of the church at Rome, and of St. Mark; he bids them "greet one another with a kiss of charity;" and for his own greeting, he prays for peace to be with all that are in Christ Jesus. For he thus shews us, how above all things he desired that we should love each other, and have peace with God. "Amen." So be it, heavenly Father, let us have peace with Thee, through Christ. "Amen." Let us have love one for another, even as Thou hast love for us!

THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER, 1. 1—9.

God's good gift, and our manifold duties.

1 Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ:

2 Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord,

3 According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us || to glory and virtue:

4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

5 And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge;

6 And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

7 And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.

8 For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. *

|| Or, by.

§ 664. The experiment of practising the Gospel.

St. Peter would have grace and peace multiplied unto us, "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace," is the counsel of Eliphaz, in the book of Job. 22. 21. But alas in how many instances has the mere knowledge of the Gospel been abused to the gendering of strife! How oftentimes through the folly and perversity of man, have been fulfilled the prophetic words of Christ, "I came not to send peace, but a sword!" Matt. 10. 34. And yet He has given us, He is always giving us, if we would but receive his gifts, not only knowledge, but "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." And this He does, "through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." For to know Christ, and Him crucified, is to know that we have a Saviour, to know that for his sake our sins are forgiven, to know that we have a way made for us to be holy, to know that we may be, if we will, happy henceforth for ever. And the having these "exceeding great and precious promises," leads us on to be "partakers of the divine nature," and to escape "the corruption that is in the world through lust." For who can know that heaven is within his reach, and not desire to obtain it? Who can believe that it is promised to himself, and not endeavour to become meet to partake of it? Who would any longer be the slave of his own passions, if he could feel assured that he might really have the mastery? Who would follow the devices of his own corrupt nature, if he had no doubt that he might be made partaker of a nature that is divine?

Now the way thereto is this, that we be not content with assenting to the truth of these gracious tidings, to the certainty of these precious promises, but that we give all diligence to add to our faith virtue, being stedfast in doing that which we believe to be our duty; and to our virtue knowledge, being desirous to know more that we may also do more. To these let us add temperance, or the due restraint of our own appetites; and patience, or the due submission to what is put upon us by others; and godliness, the disposition to serve God in every thing; and brotherly kindness, towards all mankind; and charity, which is to love man out of our love for God. For these are things not only needful in themselves, but largely helpful towards a full knowledge of the Lord. "For if these things be in you and abound," if you grow in these graces, if you are fruitful in these good works, they cause you to be also fruitful in heavenly wisdom, they help you to make progress in the understanding of the Gospel. Whereas if you are lacking these things you are blind, you cannot see beyond the world of sense, you cannot remember what you have once learnt of truth, or what once you have experienced of God's forgiveness.

So applicable is this in religion which has been found to hold good in all other matters that experiment or trial is the safest road to sure knowledge. He that would have a right judgment in things spiritual must live a spiritual life. He that would learn of the doctrine whether it be of God, must do God's will. See John 7. 17. He that would know Jesus Christ and Him crucified, must act according to such knowledge as he has already, must strive, according to his present light, to glorify his Saviour. Where then is the disputer of this world? Put him to this test. Bid him give all diligence to believe and to obey. Let him try what it is to be holy, and he will need no reasoning to convince him that it is the way to be happy. Let him taste, and see, let him touch and handle, the joy that comes of devotion and of love; and he will find that the Lord is gracious, he will own that God's word is truth.

Lord help us both to "see afar off," and to experience the things which are nigh to every one of us; both to have faith in the world which is invisible, and also to exercise, in this world, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity!

St. Peter puts his readers in remembrance.

10 Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall:

11 For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

12 Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

13 Yea I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance;

14 Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as ¹ our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me.

15 Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

16 For we have not followed cunningly devised

fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty.

17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

20 Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

21 For the prophecy came not || in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

|| Or, at any time.

§ 665. The evidence of testimony and of prophecy.

The apostle would not be negligent to put his readers in remembrance of their high calling, and of their manifold duties, though he supposed them to know these things already. So unwelcome are they to our corrupted minds! So apt are we to forget that there is an entrance ministered to us, a way opened for us, to reach unto heaven, the everlasting kingdom of our Lord; a path, in which if we walk according to God's directions, we need "never fall." To day we feel convinced. To morrow we act as if we believed never a word of all that God has told us. This hour we tremble with fear, or we rejoice in the hope of eternity. The next hour, the next moment, we grovel in the enjoyment of the pleasures of the world. Oh that we may be continually reminded by the succession of Christian ordinances, and by the faithful admonition of Christian friends, continually stirred up to give all diligence, to make our "calling and election sure!"

This brotherly admonition St. Peter thought an employment most suitable to the last portion of his life, when he knew that he must shortly put off the tabernacle of the flesh, even as Christ had shewed him. Let us think of this when our own death appears to be approaching. Let us at such a season use double diligence to put our friends in remembrance of life eternal. And let us do all we can whilst yet we live, to raise in all who live around us a concern for their souls, and a desire to glorify their Saviour, so deep and lively and strong, as that it shall abide when we shall have departed. And when we consider that we are dying all our life long, let us never think ourselves too young, too healthful, or too strong, to begin to bear our testimony to the truth, to begin to put our brethren in remembrance of the Gospel.

What a convincing testimony is this of the apostle, that he had been an eyewitness of the majesty of Christ! He was one of those who beheld when our Lord was transfigured. He saw the exceeding great glory which shone round about Jesus in the mount. He heard the voice which said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." In this he could not be deceived. By this he was made fully certain of there being nigh unto us, around us, and about us, a world of glory, a God of might, majesty, and dominion; of whom Christ Jesus is the beloved Son. Let us think often of the precious testimony of the apostle, now that he speaks no longer. We live after his decease. Let us have always in remembrance the things of which he told us. He is where that brightness never ceases, that holy company never vanishes away. Do we feel that it would be good for us to be where he is? Let us be mindful to do what he has told us.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy;" more sure in this sense that it is more lasting. Testimony may in some respects seem enfeebled by the lapse of time. The evidence of the prophecies grows stronger, as revolving years bring them more and more unto fulfilment. At first, though the light shine, the place is dark. This day star, though it be glowing in the heavens, is not seen by us till it arise in our hearts. The prophetic truth is always clear and sure in itself, since it neither comes of man's will, nor depends on man's will for its completion. It is written under the controul of the Holy Spirit of God. And under God's overruling providence it is fulfilled. Our part is to see, in its fulfilment, a proof daily more and more convincing, that the Scriptures are God's word, and that therefore Jesus Christ is our Saviour and our Lord.

False teachers ; their character and end.

1 But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction.

2 And many shall follow their || pernicious ways ; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

3 And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you : whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

4 For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment ;

5 And spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly ;

6 And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly ;

7 And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked :

8 (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds ;)

9 The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished :

10 But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise *government. ¹ Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities.

11 Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation † against them before the Lord.

• || Or, lascivious ways, as some copies read.

* Or, dominion.

† Some read, against themselves.

§ 666. The wicked punished. The godly delivered.

Well may all who profess to teach the Gospel tremble, when they read this terrible account of “false teachers,” of the evil which such do, and of the end which awaits them. Well may they, and all, examine diligently and honestly, by the help of such signs as are here given, whether what they teach, or learn, be according to the truth, or be no more than “feigned words.” One sign of false teachers is that they privily “bring in damnable heresies.” Under colour of preaching the Gospel of God, they introduce the inventions of men, and doctrines of devils, to the perdition of their followers and of themselves ; “even denying the Lord that bought them,” in some instances going so far from the truth, as to deny that He is their Redeemer. Another sign is that “many shall follow their pernicious ways,” so that the numbers and increase of any sect are far from proving that it is the true church. “By reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of,” so that the praise of man is not likely to be found on the same side with the truth of God. “And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you.” Here is another sign of “false teachers,” the “love of money.” Another is mentioned afterwards, that they “walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness.” For what short of true doctrine, right faith, and real grace, can enable them to mortify the flesh, any more than to renounce the world ? Another sign is that they “despise governments,” set at nought all lawful authority ; nay, are so “presumptuous” and “self-willed” that they are “not afraid to speak evil of dignities.” They dare, what angels dare not, to bring a railing accusation against such as are in place of rule. Now if it be by these signs that we may know false teachers, what sect, nay what church, has been without them ?

Far be it then from us to interpret passages such as this only as against those who differ from ourselves ! Rather let us see what warning we may hence derive for our own correction and amendment. The swiftness of the destruction which they bring upon themselves, that their “judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not,” these are words which ought to awaken in every hearer a lively anxiety for his brethren, a most earnest concern for himself. God, we are reminded, “spared not the angels that sinned.” He “spared not the old world,” the world before the flood. He turned “the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes,” “making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly.” Shall not these things alarm the disobedient, awaken the slothful, and stir up to double diligence the zealous and devout ? Shall not these things satisfy us that God is able, and also fully purposed, to overtake the wicked in their wickedness, and to consume them with the breath of his displeasure ?

And yet God has no pleasure in the death of them that die. When He brought in the flood, He saved Noah and his family. When He destroyed Sodom and Gomorrha, He “delivered just Lot.” And whilst He reserves “the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished,” He knows “how to deliver the godly out of temptations.” Praised be his name, for the grace of godliness ! Praised be his name for deliverance from sin ! Praised be his name for the many true prophets, and true teachers, who in the midst of surrounding error, proclaim aloud the glad tidings of pardon for sins past, and grace to sin no more, through Jesus Christ our Lord !

The false teachers further described.

12 But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption.

13 And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day time. Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you;

14 Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children:

15 Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness;

16 But was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet.

17 These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.

|| Gr. an adulteress.

18 For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were † clean escaped from them who live in error.

19 While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

20 For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

21 For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

22 But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

† Or, for a little, or, a while, as some read.

§ 667. That these warnings are for our profit

With what earnestness does the apostle strive to put us on our guard against the false teachers here described! With what force of language, and in what colours of hateful deformity, does he describe them! And such as these had crept into the ministerial office, even within so short a time as the life of one man, since the death of Christ! Mysterious forbearance of the most just God, that He should allow them to exist, nay and also to bear rule in his church! Marvellous consequence of his overruling power, that out of their very wickedness, so early manifested, He should form these profitable warnings for his church for ever!

From the beginning, all Christians have been thus put upon their guard, against such as "speak evil of the things they understand not," against such as indulge in excess of pleasure, so as even to be guilty of intemperance in the daytime, against such as make light of their own barefaced hypocrisy, in the midst of their continual festivities. From the beginning we have all been put upon our guard against teachers addicted to adultery, who beguile unstable souls, whose heart is "exercised with covetous practices," and who are themselves children of perdition. Like Balaam, they are greedy of the rewards of divination, instead of diligent to fulfil the counsel of the Lord. They are as wells where the thirsty look for water and find none, as clouds whence we hope for rain, but to no purpose. By their high professions, they prevail with many, allowing them in their lusts, and thus confirming them anew in the error of their ways; promising liberty, when they mean no more than licence to sin, the most hateful service, the most slavish bondage. And then what a fall is this; what a defeat, what a captivity! To have been once made free, and again enslaved; once made more than conquerors, and again overcome; once enabled to stand upright, and again laid low! To have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to be again entangled therein! Oh how much worse is this latter end than the beginning! How much better had it been for these never to have known at all "the way of righteousness," than to have known it only to fall away from it! How justly may we apply to them those reproachful proverbs, "The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire!"

Thus we are put upon our guard. Thus if any such abominations must needs happen in the community of believers, it was meet that they should happen early, whilst yet there was an apostle living, to denounce them in words guided by inspiration of God. But with all this warning, how often have these offences been repeated! How many instances of this corrupt teaching, and of these gross practices, are still to be met with amongst professors of the Gospel! God defend us from such abuse of his goodness! God save us from such perversion of his truth! God grant that having once escaped, through Christ, out of the bondage of iniquity, we may be no more taken captive therein for ever!

The scoffer confuted.

1 This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance:

2 That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

3 Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts,

4 And saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

5 For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God, the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water:

6 Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished;

7 But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

|| Gr. consisting.

§ 668. The world devoted to destruction.

Even the pure minds of those whose intentions are sincere, and whose hearts are right with God, need to be often stirred up "by way of remembrance." And this was the object of St. Peter in both of his Epistles. And this is one chief use which we ought to make of all parts of Scripture, to refresh, by frequent reading of them, the impression which they made on us at the first; to stamp upon our souls by the oft repeated impulses of these weighty words, an enduring image of our Lord; and so to occupy the time of our sojourn upon earth with the study of things heavenly, that it shall be impossible for us ever to forget what we have once known, and believed, and hoped, and loved. God grant that we may be ever thus mindful, both of the words which were spoken aforetime by the prophets of the Old Testament, and of the commandments which have been delivered to us by the apostles of our Saviour Christ!

We are here warned that in the last days there shall come scoffers. And this makes it doubly necessary for us to be familiar with the truth, never to lose sight of it, never to let it slip out of our remembrance. For if we may judge by the coming of such scoffers, the last days have now arrived, we are now exposed to the very danger, against which the apostle would provide us with protection. For too true it is of the times in which we live that in all ranks of life such scoffers may be met with; men who walk after their own lusts, doing that which is right in their own eyes, as if there were no God who had revealed his will, and who will call them to account for setting it at naught. What, say they, shall we deny ourselves in any thing we have a mind to, out of compliance with the prejudices of the unenlightened? Has the God of whom they tell us kept his promise? Does He, as they pretend, care for what we are employed about? Does He interfere, as they imagine, in what happens upon earth? Have not all things continued in their customary state as long as we can remember, as far back as we can learn with any certainty? And may we not hence conclude that they will continue still? May we not safely live as if there never had been, no where is, nor ever will be, any other power than that which now is manifest, any other course than what now we call the course of nature, any other life than this which now is ours, and which therefore, whilst we have it, we will enjoy to the uttermost?

But against this scoffing the apostle points to one proof, of universal interest, the flood which happened in the days of Noah. Of this all men that ever since have lived must needs hear some tidings, or might do, if they would. For which of all Noah's children, or of his children's children, could fail to speak of it to their children after them? And what nation can now be found, that has any history at all, which has not preserved in its history some knowledge of the flood? And how can they who have sufficient ingenuity, to frame these scoffing questions, help knowing, both from history, and from traces now remaining on the surface of the earth, that this globe which we inhabit has been once overflowed with water, that it once perished by the word and power of the same God, who at the first made it and has since preserved it? Yes, the fountains of the great deep were broken up by his hand, and the windows of heaven were opened; the waters of the deluge were let loose at his command, to swallow up the whole generation of the wicked. And though He restored the wondrous balance, though He again pent in the sea into its place, saying, hitherto shalt thou go and no further, though He established "the heavens and the earth, which are now;" yet it is but for a short time, it is but for another, and more fearful, and more utter destruction; they are but "kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Oh let not us then willingly be ignorant either of God's past judgments or of his approaching visitation! Oh let not us so live as to regard that day with terror, but rather so as to dwell with hope and joy on "the promise of his coming!"

The day of the Lord will come.

8 But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.

9 The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

10 But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

11 Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness,

12 Looking for and || hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?

13 Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

14 Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

15 And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you;

16 As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction.

17 Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness.

18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

|| Or, hastening the coming.

§ 669. How we ought to look for Christ's coming.

The flood which God brought in "upon the world of the ungodly," ch. 2. 5, is one chief argument wherewith to confute the scuffer, who thinks that all things go on, and have gone on,* and will go on for ever, just as they are now. Another weighty consideration is this, "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." God dwells not in time, but in eternity. With Him there is neither before, nor after; but all things are always present. And the few thousand years during which He suffers iniquity to abound, however long they seem to us who measure length by sense, are not one moment unto Him who is infinite, eternal, the Creator of both space and time. Thus "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness." It is not for lack of purpose, or strength, or speed, that He waits ere He comes to judge mankind. No, it is out of his gracious forbearance. He "is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Oh precious interval,* oh inestimable opportunity, oh time never to be recalled; during which we might escape the wrath to come! Most merciful, most patient, most holy, God, oh grant that we may not neglect so great salvation!

"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night;" as suddenly, as unexpectedly, as much to the surprise, confusion, and dismay, of those who ~~keep~~ no watch. And in that day "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." All these things, which from the beginning of the creation seem to abide, except at the flood, in so uniform a course, shall suddenly cease to be, shall perish with great noise and with great heat; the very earth itself, as well as all that man has wrought on it, yea all that God has so wonderfully framed, perishing by fire. What a day of terror will that be unto the wicked! What a day of glory to the righteous! What a manifestation of the presence, power, justice, and goodness of God, will then be forced on every soul of man! And that day may come tomorrow. It may come today. Each day of our lives we ought to be "looking for" it. Each day of our lives we ought to be "hastening unto" it; nay and also hastening it on, by our prayers that Christ's kingdom come, by our zeal and diligence, and labour of love, in preparing the way for Christ's coming. Let us therefore both pray and watch. Let us live in "all holy conversation and godliness," as if we were really looking daily for Christ to come.

Because all are sentenced to death we are too apt to look for death as the sure end of life. We ought to remember how probable it is, that ere we die, whilst now we are in full enjoyment of health and strength, whilst the world and all its works are in their accustomed course, the spark will be kindled, the smothered flames will burst forth all at once, the heavens will be on fire, the earth melt, the Judge appear, the wicked be turned into hell, the saints rejoice in glory. This is God's promise. And according to this promise, we "look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." We are sure that God's word will come to pass. There will be another world. There is another world. Only now it is hidden from our eyes. Then it will be present to our sense. Do we see it now by faith? Do we behold that which is invisible? Are we fully assured of that for which we hope? Let us then "be diligent," let us watch carefully, and work stedfastly, that we may be found of our Lord "in peace, without spot, and blameless." Let us "account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation." Let us consider that it is for us sinners, that we may be saved from perishing everlastingly, it is for this He waits, it is for this He puts up with the perversity of many, it is in order that He may save some. That this is God's purpose in his forbearance towards man had been already signified, as St. Peter here observes, by St. Paul; not only in what he had written to the same persons, meaning probably his Epistle to the Hebrews, see Heb. 2. 3, but "also in all his epistles." In these there "are some things hard to be understood;" the Holy Spirit of God having condescended to make use of our inadequate language, as well as of our imperfect services, in the revelation and ministry of the truth. But far be it from us to wrest these difficulties to our own destruction. Far be it from us not to study these Epistles at all, because there are in them some things difficult! Let us so much the more diligently read and mark them. Let us so much the more firmly cleave to what we know, so much the more stedfastly persist in truth against all the allurements of error. Let us so much the more take pains that we may grow at once in grace and in knowledge, in acquaintance with the deep things of God, and in depth, and warmth, and strength, of devotion, and thankfulness, and love.

"To him be glory both now and for ever." To God all wise, all just, all good, who out of regard to the precious blood of his dear Son, forgives our iniquities, and saves our souls, to Him be ascribed all the praise, unto all eternity. "Amen."

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF JOHN. 1. 1—10.

St. John testifies of his own experience.

1 That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life;

2 (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;)

3 That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

4 And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

5 This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

6 If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth:

7 But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

8 If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

§ 670. Sin forgiven, holiness enjoined.

The disciple "whom Jesus loved," John 13. 23, writes chiefly concerning love, tells us how God has loved us, and describes to us in the language of affection the blessedness of loving Him. Oh that we may learn from his Epistles to walk in love! Oh that we may be helped, by his stirring words, to cast away the spirit of bondage, and to serve God with all the ardour of our hearts! He testifies to us "that which was from the beginning," for it was always thus with God, He has always loved us, and from the beginning He gave his Son for our salvation. And further, St. John testifies that of which he had been an eyewitness, in regard to the Word of life, which also "was from the beginning," and which "Word was God." John 1. 1. He had seen with his own eyes the manifestation of divine life in the person of Jesus Christ, and he delighted to tell of it with his lips. He rejoiced to write it with a pen in a book for ever, that he might by this means shew unto us "that eternal life, which was with the Father," and which had been manifested to himself. He would not, he could not, keep his knowledge, his experience, and his joy, locked up in his own breast. He must needs have us partakers of it. He had attained unto fellowship with the Father and with the Son, and he would have us partake of the same fellowship. He writes on purpose that our joy may be full.

Now let us compare with these feelings, and with this example of St. John, our own practice in the selfsame matter. First, have we any of this joy in believing? Next, are we taking pains to communicate it to our brethren? We might have it, though we are not eyewitnesses. We might have this joy to fulness, though we have not seen with our eyes, nor handled with our hands, "of the Word of life." We might have it; for St. John wrote on purpose that we might, on purpose that our joy might be full. And St. John wrote not in vain. There are some that have this fulness of joy. There are some who rejoice in leading others to rejoice in the Lord. We can hardly feel these things deeply as we ought to do, without studying to make them to be felt. We may suppose it is our diffidence, we may say it is our apprehension lest we should disgrace our profession; we may deceive ourselves with these specious reasons for our silence. But the truth is, we have not the fulness of joy. If we had, we could not conceal it. We could not help its overflowing. We could not help manifesting in our very looks, as well as in our words, that our hearts are filled with the sense of all God's goodness in our redemption through Christ Jesus.

"This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." We thought perhaps in our evil hearts, that St. John was going to tell us of God's goodness, in such sort as to allow us in our sins. We were ready to say, if the tidings are so joyful, we may take our fill of present pleasure. But hold, mistaken sinner, "God is light;" and this is that which is to fill you full of joy. He sees every movement of your affections. He is privy not only to what you do in the dark, but to what you think and feel in silence, without doing at all. And our joy is to come of our having fellowship with Him. This then we cannot have if we walk in darkness. And if we were to do so and to say we have this joy, "we lie and do not the truth." We must "walk in the light, as he is in the light." We must do, and feel, what is fit for God to witness; and then we shall have fellowship with them that have fellowship with Him; then "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

For though it is the most gross misapprehension of the gospel tidings to suppose that they may serve for our security in sinning; yet on the other hand they do contain free pardon for sinners, and they require us both to feel and own that we are sinners, in order for our sins to be forgiven. To "say that we have no sin," would be as far from the truth, as to say that we have fellowship with God, whilst we sin wilfully. To "say that we have not sinned," is to give the lie to what God hath said, in speaking to us all as sinners. But "if we confess our sins," if instead of loving them, and hiding them, we at once acknowledge them and loathe them, "he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins," to blot out all our past iniquity, "and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," to make us pure and holy unto Himself. "Faithful;" for He has said it, and He will do it. "Just," for Christ died to make atonement for our sins. This is to walk in light, when we see how hateful sin is, when it becomes hateful to us as unto God. This is to have fellowship with the Father and with the Son, when we consent unto God's word that it is true, alike in the exposing of our sinfulness, and in the setting forth of his love, alike in condemning us for our transgressions, and in proclaiming our pardon and our peace through Christ.

The old and the new commandment.

1 My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:

2 And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for our's only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

3 And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

4 He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6 He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk even as he walked.

7 Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.

9 He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

10 He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.

11 But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

|| Gr. scandal.

§ 671. That love comes of the true light now shining.

Within the compass of a few words the apostle charges us not to sin, and also tells us that "if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." This is what the natural man cannot understand, cannot see to be consistent, any more than what had just before been stated, that we must never deny that we are sinners, and yet must by no means continue in our sins. For by nature we are persuaded that sin is so much gain, that it is desirable to sin if we safely might. Whereas the truth is that sin is the worst of evil in itself; a thing to be hated though no harm should come of it, to be abhorred because God abhors it. And therefore the more we see of it in ourselves, we confess to it the more sorrowfully; we flee from it the more eagerly. And in like manner we are only so much the more encouraged to renounce it, by the assurance that Christ died to save us from it, and that He pleads with God that we may be forgiven it. "He is the propitiation for our sins." Therefore henceforth we sin not. "And not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Therefore let the whole world repent and amend. Thus different is right reason, from the reasoning of the world. Thus wide apart is the wisdom of God, from the wisdom of man. And thus only by keeping the commandments of the Lord can we know that we know Him aright. All other views of Christ are wrong. All other notions of the Gospel are false. All other pretences to experience in the grace of Christ are lies. Only they who keep his word, only they who do his will, only they who so walk, "even as he walked," these and these alone can know that they know Christ; these and these alone can be assured, without risk of self deceit, that they are in Him, and that the truth is in them. As long therefore as we would fain sin if we might, and especially if we think we may sin more safely because of the atonement made for us by Christ, so long we are in ignorance, so long we know Him not; and so long, if we say we know Him, we are liars.

And this is "no new commandment." It is the word which Christ's disciples have heard from the beginning. It is "that which was from the beginning," ch. 1. 1, even as early, as that God loved us, for so early, from the very first, did He forbid us to transgress. This was the first commandment given to Adam in the garden of Eden. This is that which forms the tenour of the whole Law revealed by Moses, Thou shalt not sin. In this therefore the Gospel and the Law are one. In protesting against sin the apostle writes no new commandment. And yet he had a new commandment to enforce; the commandment of love. He desired to impress upon us, what the Law had not fully revealed, the love of God, and what the Law had not effectually compassed, that we should love God, and one another. This thing is true, both in respect of God, and in respect of man, that to love is to keep God's word. In this there had before been darkness. But "the true light now shineth," and that light is the light of love.

How grievously then are we mistaken, if we say that we are in the light, and yet hate our brethren! How little do we know whither we are going, if we are still capable of being unkind unto each other, if we are not willing to bear with that perversity of temper in each other, which God so patiently puts up with in ourselves! How great will be our fall, when least we look for it, if we go on in this gross darkness, and take it for the light! "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light;" this is the true light. This is the light which shines forth from God in the face of Jesus Christ our Lord. See how Jesus loved us, and gave Himself for us! See how He wept for our sufferings! see how He died for our sins!

Lord teach us to love, as Thou hast loved us! Lord teach us to love Thee, and to love our brethren!

St. John writes to all, that they love not the world.

12 I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15 Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

16 For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

17 And the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

§ 672. To love God is the way not to love the world.

See how earnestly men of all ages, yea and children also, are here addressed, by how many motives they are urged, over and over again, to receive the word of exhortation, the Gospel of Christ. "Little children," observe this, "your sins are forgiven you, for his name's sake." Never forget this. Know this, know the Son, and you know the Father. Consider yourselves to be pardoned, redeemed, saved, for the Son's sake. Grow up in love and holiness accordingly. "Fathers," lay you to heart this twice repeated admonition, "Ye have known him that is from the beginning." Oh think how much you have to answer for, in having knowledge! Oh think how precious is the privilege of knowing, when it is accompanied by doing! "Young men," you also are written to, you also are admonished, "because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." Yes, you are admonished twice over, as having "overcome the wicked one." For if you have once prevailed, this leaves you inexcusable if you thereafter fall away. And therefore St. John so much the more earnestly exhorts you, the more you know, the more you are able to prevail. Oh that young men, and all men, would well consider this, that the best use we can make of strength is to use it in God's service; that the more we have of it, we ought the more thankfully to use it in glorifying our God and Saviour.

This then is the best of seasons for renouncing the world, even this, when we have health and strength to enjoy it. For this is the season in which we can do God most service, and best prove that we really serve Him from the heart. Does it seem too great a sacrifice? Do we imagine that we shall be doing some great thing for God? Behold, when we have done all, we are unprofitable servants. Behold, when we have given up all, it is altogether next to nothing; so soon does the world pass away, and the lusts thereof. We cling to it indeed fondly, and count it for great treasure. We plead earnestly to be allowed to keep at least some one worldly pleasure, some one sensual delight. But in proportion as we thus plead, thus cling, we are really loving the whole world in our hearts, and the love of the Father is not in us. For all these things, without exception, are of one character, come of one service; and that is not of the Father, but of the world. Let us therefore both freely give up all, and also be aware that all is but as a trifle. It is as the toy which a kind parent is withholding from his children for their good, and which none but children reckon worth having. Let us both count the cost, and know that it is small; yea let us pay it cheerfully, with ease. It is not worthy for one moment to be compared with what we gain by doing the will of God, even to abide for ever.

And yet how many of those who pass for faithful Christians find it hard not to love the world! How closely do its pleasures, its business, its riches, its honours, its friendship, and its praise, entwine themselves in the affections of the heart! We agree that it must pass away. But how we hope, that it will abide a little longer! We deny not that it is vanity. And yet how we suffer it to engage our interest, and to vex our spirit! This is because the love of the Father is not in us. There is not room for both in the same heart. God, if He have any, must have all. How can any one of all the things that He has made, stand one moment in competition with Himself, in the soul which has once the faith to see Him as He is? Oh that our Lord and Saviour may shew unto us the Father! Oh that we may see the Father by seeing Christ! Oh that we may see Him as He is, "full of grace and truth," John 1. 14, and so love Him, and so through Him love God, that we may have no heart left to love the pomps and vanities of the world!

Of many antichrists, and of the unction of the Holy One.

18 Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time.

19 They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.

20 But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things.

21 I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth.

22 Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.

23 Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.

|| Or, it.

24 Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.

25 And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life.

26 These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you.

27 But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in ||him.

28 And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

29 If ye know that he is righteous, †ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.

† Or, know ye.

§ 673. How we must avoid an antichristian spirit.

To teach the ignorant is one great use of Christian exhortation, whether it be by speaking or by writing. But we see here that there is another use, of which we are not so apt to think, and this is, to encourage and to confirm those who already know. St. John writes to those of whom he trusted that they had "an unction from the Holy One," the anointing of the Holy Ghost, whereby they might "know all things," all that were needful for salvation. And yet he writes; nay, and he tells them that he writes not because they know not the truth, but because they know it, and because "no lie is of the truth." For this made it the more profitable for him to write to them; for this made them the less likely to wrest his writings to their own destruction. And let us remember that this is the case with holy Scripture in general. It is addressed to those who in some sort know the truth already. Ere we come to God we must believe that He is. See Heb. 11. 6. Ere we can read his word with profit, we must be persuaded that it is his word, and that it is written for our eternal good. With hearts touched by the anointing of the Holy Ghost, we shall then read with most profit, and most pleasure also, when we least seem to need instruction. When we know most, the word of God will best help us to know more; according as it is elsewhere written, "unto every one that hath shall be given." Matt. 25. 29.

And here accordingly God's children are instructed that they are now in the last time, in that period of the world when antichrist should come, and when there were already many antichrists. If so few of Christians are agreed as to what is meant by antichrist, is not this because they have not been taught by the anointing of the Spirit? Else instead of trying to fix the hateful name on those who happen to be most opposed to us, we should rather watch that there be no antichristian spirit amongst ourselves, and beware lest those who are of our own company contrive to seduce us. For these are they who are antichrists, such as go out from communion with true Christians and separate themselves, such as deny "that Jesus is the Christ," such as deny the Father and the Son, deny their real relation to each other, deny their power by disobeying their commandments, deny their goodness by counting their commandments grievous.

Would we then be safe from the name and sin of antichrist? Let us take care, that we have that abide in us, which we have heard from the beginning. Let us "continue in the Son and in the Father." Let us acknowledge the Son, and we shall have the Father also. Let us abide in Christ; not setting up as in his place any merit of our own, or any efficacy in the ministrations of one another; but resting our whole hope and trust in Him as our only Prophet, Priest, and King; believing what He has told us, doing what He has commanded us. And thus, when He shall appear, we shall have confidence, we shall "not be ashamed before him at his coming." For whilst we hold that He is Himself our righteousness, and therefore all holy, all just, all good, we shall derive assurance from such works as through his grace we do, that we are really "born of him."

Lord give us this proof that we have been begotten anew, the leading a new life of righteousness! Lord fulfil in us this promise that God has promised us, "even eternal life!"

God's love manifest in his calling us his sons.

1 Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.

2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

3 And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

4 Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

5 And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin.

6 Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

7 Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

8 He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9 Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

10 In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

11 For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another.

12 Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

|| Or, commandment.

§ 674. The children of God distinguished from those of the devil.

Most glorious title this, to be given to the children of men, "the sons of God!" Most affecting thought this, to God's sons, that the world, the bulk of mankind, knows them not, because it has not known their Lord! That it mistakes their character, misconstrues their motives, because it is yet a stranger to the love of Christ! But whatever the world may think, they are the sons of God notwithstanding. And though what they shall be is not yet manifest, they know thus much of their crown of glory, that it will impart to them a resemblance unto their Saviour. For hereafter they will "see him as he is." And if even faith in his perfections can already change us to the likeness of Himself, see 2 Cor. 3. 18, how much more shall sight when we see Him face to face? And might not this very thought now help us to be changed? Might not the hope that we shall hereafter be like God, make us strive to be like Him now? It might, it must, it does. It does with those who really have this hope. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he," even as God, "is pure."

As is the Father, so must be the sons. The Father's love which He has bestowed upon us exempts us not from the duty of obeying Him, nay rather it binds us the more closely to obey. Sin is still the "transgression of the law," and that of a better law, the Gospel. And God has now been manifest in the flesh, on purpose "to take away our sins." So that for us to sin is to oppose Him in this his work of love. And besides "in him is no sin." So that, "whosoever abideth in him sinneth not," being one with Him in whom he abideth. Whereas, "whosoever sinneth," that is to say, wilfully, is so far from habitually abiding in Him, that he "hath not seen him, neither known him." Let us then take warning, and suffer no man to deceive us in this weighty matter. He, let us remember, "he that doeth righteousness is righteous," even as God is righteous. The righteousness of God is not in word but in deed. Such must be also man's obedience, or it is none at all.

And again, let it be here observed, that this is the very thing which shews the difference between the children of God, and the children of the devil. "For the devil sinneth from the beginning." And it was to destroy the works of the devil that the Son of God was manifested, when He was manifested "to take away our sins." If we do not righteousness, if we love not our brethren, much more if like Cain we hate our brother, and by hatred are guilty also of murder, see Matt. 5. 21, 22, in such a case we are of that wicked one, in such a case it is madness to presume to think that we are numbered with the children of God.

No, if we are born of God, we are become averse to sin. Whilst his seed is in us, and in proportion as it is in us we cannot sin, we cannot sin intentionally, we cannot sin without loathing of ourselves. And this is the message which we have heard from the beginning, "that we should love one another." So that if we are born of God we shall especially do his will in this respect, the love of our fellow creatures. We shall love them because God loves them. We shall love them even when they hate us, because God loved us, when we were at enmity with Him. And yet more we shall love them if their works are righteous, and if they love their brethren; for this will be a token to us that they love our Lord.

That we must love in deed and in truth.

* 13 Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.

14 We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

15 Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

16 Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

17 But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

18 My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.

19 And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him.

20 For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

21 Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God.

22 And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

23 And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

24 And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

† Gr. persuade.

§ 675. The consciousness of abiding in God.

The Christian, whilst his heart glows with affection towards all men, must be prepared to endure the hatred of the world, which is like Cain, who slew his brother, "because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous." Ver. 12. If the worldly were not to hate us, they would no longer be the worldly, for this is the way we know that we abide not in death, that we have passed from death unto life, "because we love the brethren." Whereas to hate is as the sin of murder. And neither they that murder, nor they that hate, have "eternal life abiding in them." At the time of St. John's writing, "the world" meant those who often persecuted Christians, being the whole number of the heathen. How painful it is to think, that with us "the world" must mean baptized Christians, professors of the Gospel; how painful to be aware that of such there are now many, who because their own deeds are evil, hate those whose deeds are righteous! "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge!" Acts 7. 60. Lord, forgive our enemies, persecutors, and slanderers, and turn their hearts!

With words from which these are taken, our Lord prayed, whilst on the cross, for them that crucified Him. Whilst we learn his prayer, let us seek also to follow his example. He proved his love for us by laying down his life. Ought not we to have that affection for each other, which would make us count our lives not dear unto ourselves, if we could spend them for each other's good? Yet how many will not so much as spend their substance! How many will not give alms, except grudgingly and of necessity! How many see their brethren in need, not only without helping them, but also without feeling for them; nay, steeling their hearts purposely against the motions of pity, and yet professing all the while to love them! Far be from us such pretence of charity! Far be from us such words of hypocrisy! Let us prove our words by our deeds; by denying ourselves, that we may give to others.

Hereby we may "know that we are of the truth;" by what we give, by what we do, and by the affection with which we do it. Hereby we may confirm the hope in our own hearts. For we must know in our own hearts, whether we love in word only or in deed. If our love be only in word, our hearts are sure to condemn us; how much more God, who "knoweth all things!" But if it be in deed, they condemn us not. And "then have we confidence toward God." For then our actions, in which we cannot be mistaken, confirm the testimony of our feelings, in which else we might be easily deceived. We might help each other without loving. We might suppose we love, and say we love, without helping. But when we both find we help, and feel we love, then our hearts with good ground condemn us not, nay acquit us, nay approve us; nay, give us "confidence towards God," through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Thus "confidence toward God" is one precious fruit of our loving one another "in deed and in truth." Another is, that our prayers are heard and granted. For this is the way to receive what we ask, that we keep God's commandments, "and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." To believe and to love, these are his commandments. That we dwell in Him, and He in us, this is yet one more fruit of our keeping them. And the sign by which we are assured of this indwelling is this, "the Spirit which he hath given us." The gracious dispositions of which the converted heart is conscious in itself, the holy life which only by God's Spirit helping us we can possibly live, these make us to know that God is in us of a truth. God abides in man! Oh love past man's comprehension! O Thou, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain, what are we, that Thou shouldest dwell in us? Make us, we pray Thee, more conscious of thy presence! Make us, we most earnestly beseech Thee, more meet to dwell with Thee for ever!

Warning against false prophets. That God is love.

1 Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God:

3 And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, wherof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

4 Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

5 They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

6 We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error.

7 Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

8 He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love.

9 In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

10 Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

11 Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

§ 676. As God hath loved us so ought we to love one another.

St. John shews the same anxiety which we have seen manifested in the Epistles of St. Peter and St. Paul, to warn us against the delusions of false teachers. And in his warning he refers to the gifts of the Spirit, with which teachers were then usually endowed, as well as to the influence of evil spirits, which was then sometimes sensibly displayed. Those who were liable to be imposed upon by the difference between the two, were bound to examine, and try which was which. And they might know the spirits that were of God, the teachers whose words and works were of the Holy Spirit, they might know them by this, that they taught Jesus Christ, and Him crucified, "come in the flesh," to die for our sins. Whereas there were some in those days, who doubted whether Jesus were really man, as well as some who denied that He was really God. And these partook of that "spirit of antichrist," of which much is said in Scripture, and which even then already was in the world.

Thus it is a spirit not of God, it is an antichristian spirit, which now leads men to deny of Jesus Christ that He is "come in the flesh," come from where He was before, even with God the Father, come in the likeness of man, even of the seed of the woman. They who now thus teach are "of the world." No wonder that "the world heareth them." No wonder that false doctrine, as to Christ's coming in the flesh is acceptable to the worldly minded. The apostles were of God. What they taught was of God's teaching. And only those who are "of God," only those who are devoutly disposed, will gladly hear them. Happy are they, who are willing as little children to be taught by their heavenly Father! Happy are they who prevail against such as would delude them, not by trusting in their own strength, but by believing that greater is He that is in them, than he that is in the world! This is our best security against false doctrine, that through God's grace we love the truth. This is our only safeguard against false teachers, that we submit ourselves to be taught of God, and to be instructed by those whom God has sent.

But how often has zeal for truth of doctrine been disgraced by animosity, bitterness, and strife! How seasonably does St. John return from what he had to say of false prophets, to Christ's commands that "we should love one another!" Ch. 3. 23. How powerfully does he enforce this duty by telling us that "love is of God," and that only they that love know God, or are born of Him! And above all, how irresistibly does he move us to mutual affection, by revealing to us this truth unknown before, that "God is love!" Oh glorious discovery! Oh comfortable assurance! He who made us, He who proves us, He who will judge the world in righteousness, He "is love." He is Almighty, He is entirely wise, and just, and good; but also He is love. If there be one word which better than any other expresses his whole character, that word is love. If there be any feeling in our hearts which more than any other, serves by faint resemblance to shadow forth what God feels for us, love is that feeling. And in this has his love been manifested, in his sending "his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him." This is love worthy of the name. This is love indeed. Compared with this, our love of Him is no love at all; compared with his sending his Son to make atonement for our sins. This is the love which we ought to imitate in our loving one another. Let us then love, because "God so loved us." Let us love, even as God loved and loves us, freely, largely, constantly.

God's love for us, and ours for Him.

* 12 No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.

13 Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

14 And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

15 Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.

16 And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

17 Herein is † our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world.

18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.

19 We love him, because he first loved us.

20 If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

21 And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

† Gr. love with us.

§ 677. The perfecting of love.

"Herein is love," we have before been assured, "not that we loved God, but that he loved us." Ver. 10. And "we love him," it is here further stated, "because he first loved us." His love is the only love worthy of the name; and ours, such as it is, follows afterwards, because of his. Let us not then imagine that we can love Him first. Let us not try to love Him first, by way of getting Him to love us afterwards. But let us first have a just view of his love for us, fixed firmly in our hearts by faith, as our best way, our only way to love Him. "God is love." This is what God is. And this we must first believe, ere we can love Him as we ought. "The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world." This is what God has done. And this also we must first believe, before we can approach to loving Him as He requires. Thus He loved us from the moment of our birth. Thus He loved us from the foundation of the world. And thus this his love for us is the ground on which alone we effectually love Him.

But how can we prove our love for Him? How can we have proof of it for our own satisfaction? May we not be easily deceived in our feelings towards One, whom no man at any time has seen? To prevent the risk of this self-deceit, the apostle points to the love of one another, as one way to have perfected in us the love of God. Let us love our brother whom we have seen. Let us have sensible proof of our loving him. Let us find our hands free to give to the relief of his necessities, our tongues slow to tell of his faults, and apt to speak his praise; let us feel our hearts incapable of hating him, our tears flowing for his afflictions, our joy kindling at his rejoicing. Let us thus love our brother. And we may be sure that we do love him in real earnest. Let us thus love our brother, for God's sake, because God has so commanded us; and we have then reason to think that we do indeed love God, we then may safely trust that "God dwelleth in us." "Hereby knew we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." For only by the influence of his Spirit in our hearts could we attain to thus loving one another, only by believing and confessing what St. John had seen and testified, that "Jesus is the Son of God," sent by the Father to be "the Saviour of the world." To know and believe this is to know and believe "the love that God hath to us." To know and believe that "God is love," and that his love was manifest in Christ dying for us, to dwell in love out of this our belief that God loves us, this is the way for us to dwell in God, and God in us.

And here let us note one other precious fruit of love, of that love which comes in us from our persuasion that God "first loved us;" "we may have boldness in the day of judgment." For though "God is love," yet there is a "day of judgment." Or rather, there must be one, because God is love, because He loves us too well to suffer sin to go unpunished. But in that day there are some who will have boldness. And these are they, who whilst here they live on earth are likened in point of love to God. "As he is, so are we in this world." This it is that gives us boldness. This is the perfecting of love, for it to be like God's. And the nearer our love is to perfect, we have the less of fear. Where fear is, there is pain. Where love is perfect, there is only joy. Those whom we love perfectly, we cannot fear at all. We could meet without alarm even the worst of men in situations the most perilous, if we could attain to loving them entirely for the sake of Christ. How much rather should we stand with unmingled joy before the presence of our gracious God, were we fully assured in our souls, that for Christ's sake He does entirely love us?

How many witnesses there are to the record God gave of his Son.

1 Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him.

2 By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments.

3 For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.

4 For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

5 Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

6 This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

7 For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one.

8 And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.

9 If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.

11 And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.

§ 678. How sure we ought to feel of the truth as it is in Jesus.

In the growth of the Christian character, each separate part gives and receives assistance by its connexion with the rest. We know that we love God by finding that we love the brethren. See ch. 4. 12, 20. And also "by this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments." Now every believer in Christ Jesus is a child of God. And if we love the parent we must love the child. Do we then love this Parent? Do we keep his commandments? Do we keep them, and feel that they "are not grievous?" This is a new test or proof here suggested, and one of very great use for our information. If we obey God grudgingly and of necessity, if we serve in fear as unto a hard master, if we had rather disobey Him than obey; then his commandments are grievous unto us, then we do not love God. No, we must be assured that all which He commands, is commanded for our good. We must be persuaded of every word which He has spoken, whether it forbid us to enjoy, or require us to suffer, that it still comes of the same love with which He loved us, when He gave his Son to be the Saviour of the world. Then we shall delight to do all his pleasure. Then we shall love God. Then we shall know that we do really love God's children. Then we shall love them as our brethren, for we shall be his children ourselves. Yes, then we overcome the world, and keep God's commandments, when we are born of God. And it is our faith in Jesus that He is the Son of God, this it is that gives us the victory.

Now for the strengthening of our faith in Christ, let us consider that He was manifested "by water," at his baptism, and by "blood," at his death, to be the Son of God come in the flesh; not by his baptism only, but at a dearer rate, by his death, when both water and blood poured out from his side. "And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth." Even as God is love, so also the Holy Ghost is truth. And this true witness testified, both in heaven and in earth. "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost." "And there are three that bear witness in earth;" the Holy Ghost by the written word, and the baptism and death of Christ by the two sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper. And these three last agree in one testimony, as the three first actually "are one." How much greater then than any witness of man is this testimony of God; this witness, "which he hath testified of his Son," this record, "that God hath given to us eternal life," and that "this life is in his Son!" How much more sure may we become of this truth, than of any other, seeing that if we believe on the Son of God we have the witness in ourselves! We have it in the new life which now we lead by faith, whereby we overcome the world. We have it in the ability we now find within ourselves, to keep God's commandments, and to keep them gladly.

Here is another threefold testimony, the witness of God, the witness of man, the witness which we have within ourselves. God speaks from heaven, man repeats on earth, conscience assures us in our own hearts within. All things unite for the satisfaction of the believer; all things agree to help us in believing that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world. Dare we make God a liar? Or do we suppose that the apostles and disciples of our Lord united to devise a cunning fable? Or shall we doubt the change which we feel within ourselves? We cannot, we dare not; we would not if we durst. We thank God for the knowledge of our Saviour. We have joy and peace in believing. We are eager to bear testimony to the same truth ourselves.

Lord, make us faithful witnesses! Lord, prosper Thou our testimony! Lord help us to make it manifest by our words, and by our actions, by our behaviour to each other, and by our reverence for Thee, that Thou hast given us in thy Son eternal life!

That we know the truth.

* 12 He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

13 These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

14 And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us.

15 And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

16 If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it.

17 All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin not unto death.

18 We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not.

19 And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness.

20 And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know him that is true. And we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life.

21 Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen.

|| Or, concerning him.

§ 679. Holy confidence.

How ill does it become professors of the Gospel to be either confident in themselves, or distrustful of the testimony of God! How confidently does St. John here declare the full assurance of hope, which he felt in his own heart, and desired that we should feel in ours! Far be from us all mistrust of the truth! Far be from us all faintness of purpose in avowing it! Let it be heard in our conversation, let it be seen in our lives, that we have not so much as the shadow of a doubt, that "he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." For this is the apostle's object in writing to those who already believe in the name of the Son of God, that they may be confirmed in their faith and in their knowledge, that they may be quite sure that they have in Christ eternal life, that they may be quite confident in believing on his name.

Now this confidence is to be manifested in several important points, which are here distinctly set forth. First in respect of prayer, we must pray in faith, nothing doubting, if we ask according to God's will; nothing doubting, either that God hears us, or that He will for Christ's sake grant our petitions. Who could think, to hear our customary prayers, that we feel any such confidence at all? Who would suppose that we have but to kneel down, and to desire in our hearts, and to ask with our lips, as God would have us; and that thus we might be sure of getting pardon for sin, help to holiness, peace, joy, and eternal life; not only for ourselves, but also for our brethren? There are indeed some sinners for whom our prayers would be offered up in vain. And in asking for the forgiveness of their sins, we should be asking for more than God has promised to bestow. But unable as we must feel, without express revelation, to know which amongst all sinners are in a case so hopeless, we have every encouragement to pray earnestly for all, with entire trust that God will give us our petitions, to the full extent of his gracious promises.

Other particulars of our holy confidence are these. "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not." We feel assured, that through the strength of our heavenly Father, we can resist sin effectually, renounce it heartily, and never henceforth consent to it wilfully. We guard ourselves, by the grace of God, so watchfully, so resolutely, so continually, that "that wicked one," our adversary the devil, cannot prevail against us. Again, "we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness." We have no misgiving as to the wisdom of our choice, as to the reality of our heavenly calling, as to the glory that is prepared for God's children, as to the misery which awaits the wicked world. Again, "we know that the Son of God is come," we have no doubt that God's own Son has been manifest in the flesh, has revealed to us the truth, and has imparted unto us the knowledge of it; and that "we are in him that is true," not holding a false religion, but a true one, not trusting in a false Christ, but in a true one; not serving false gods, but the true God, and living not a life of mere delusion, but one that is eternal.

Thus then let us live, thus let us behave, thus let us converse with one another, as they that will not suffer the idols of the world, its false gods, its false wisdom, its false joys, to be put for one moment in competition with that which we are quite certain is the truth. Hush, let us say to those who speak or act as if it were a question whether the Gospel be the truth, we know that it is true, we cannot allow it to be doubtful, we cannot hear it called in question without fearlessly avowing our conviction that it is the most certain of all certain things. Heaven and earth shall pass away. But Christ's word shall not pass away. Idols perish. But God remains God for ever.

Exhortation to stedfastness in love and in doctrine.

1 The elder unto the elect lady, and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth;

2 For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever:

3 Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

4 I rejoiced greatly, that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

5 And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another.

6 And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

7 For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

8 Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

9 Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.

11 For he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds.

12 Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink: but I trust to come unto you, and speak † face to face, that our joy may be full.

13 The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen.

§ 680. Christian friendship the communion of saints.

This Epistle addressed by St. John to "the elect lady," some eminent female Christian, "and her children," not only contains a profitable portion of Christian doctrine, but also sets before us an instructive pattern of Christian correspondence. How delightful it is for friends thus to "love in the truth!" How sweet to be thus beloved by all them "that have known the truth!" How pure and constant, and lively, that affection, which is for the sake of the truth that "dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever!" This is love whose desires are for "grace, mercy, and peace," in behalf of the beloved object, for such blessings as come "from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love;" real blessings not imaginary, abiding not transitory, desires not selfish, for our own pleasure, but aiming at the eternal happiness of each other.

And like to these are also the joys of true Christian friendship: "I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father!" How much better ground for joy is this, than if the children of our friends were growing in stature, increasing in riches, or gaining in credit with mankind! How much more kind to remind each other of the one commandment of the Lord, than of the manifold engagements of the world! Oh let us never cease from mentioning to each other this duty of Christian love! Oh let us never forget that this is love, that we walk after God's commandments! To be doing the same things, even those which God requires, to be growing in the same graces, even those which God imparts, and to be walking in the same doctrine, even that which we have heard from the beginning, this is the true communion of saints on earth, this is our way to dwell together in heaven.

There we shall part no more. There we shall run no risk by reason of temptation. There we shall be exempt from the many perils which here beset us. Here are deceivers, there none; here gainsayers of Christ, there none. Here is antichrist, here are teachers who assume our Lord's authority, to pervert his Gospel, to destroy the souls which He died to save. How much need then have we here of watchfulness, if it were only that Christ's faithful ministers might not lose, by losing us, their full reward! How carefully must we abide in the doctrine of Christ, if we would have "both the Father and the Son;" the Father being rightly known only by the teaching of the Son! How firmly must we refuse our countenance to such as "bring not this doctrine," nay not so much as receive them hospitably, nor wish them prosperity in the name of the Lord; lest we become partakers of their evil deeds!

These are our present duties. These are our present difficulties. No wonder that we need often each other's help, comfort, and encouragement, both by letter, and by conversation face to face. No wonder that the apostle, and his beloved converts, looked forward to their friendly meetings with the most joyful expectation. But whether they met on earth in this instance is unknown. Whether we shall ever see again in the flesh the face of friends who are at a distance, is uncertain. So much more, if it be possible, let us strive to meet in heaven. Whichever way we are bound here to travel, or wherever constrained to stay, we may then always have the satisfaction of thinking, that we are on our road to a place where we shall be sure to meet, where we shall be always "face to face," and where our joy will indeed be full.

THE THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN. 1—14.

St. John commendeth Gaius and Demetrius; blameth Diotrophes.

1 The elder unto the well beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth.

2 Beloved, I wish above all things, that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

3 For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth.

4 I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth.

5 Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers;

6 Which have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey, after a godly sort, thou shalt do well.

7 Because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles.

8 We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth.

|| Or, truly.

† Or, pray.

9 I wrote unto the church: but Diotrophes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not.

10 Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church.

11 Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.

12 Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth itself: yea, and we also bear record; and ye know that our record is true.

13 I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee:

14 But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

‡ Or, mouth to mouth.

§ 681. That we should follow not the evil but the good.

Here is another Epistle of St. John, which under the form of a private letter, provides edification for the whole church. Here is another instance in which the apostle expresses how he loves "in the truth," how he wishes for others' health and prosperity in reference to their souls, how he rejoices in the spiritual proficiency of his converts, how he desires to guard them against false brethren, and to encourage them in that which is good. Let us hence learn to regulate our affections by the truth, to love all others for this reason, that Christ loved them and gave Himself for them. Let us not fail to rejoice greatly when we hear a good report of those we love, that they are walking in the truth. Let us not refrain, out of false shame, from expressing to others our wish that they may prosper and be in health, even as their souls prosper; meaning that the soul's health is the most important, that for which alone all other health and prosperity is chiefly of value.

No greater joy than this had St. John, none would he more recommend to us. He felt it for his spiritual children, his converts. We must feel it as far as possible for all our Christian brethren. We must be glad when we hear of instances, in which they have proved the excellency of their faith by the abundance of their charity. Thus did Gaius in his hospitable entertainment of Christian brethren, strangers to himself, but dear to him for their work's sake. For these were preachers of the Gospel, who went forth for the glory of Christ's name, taking nothing of the heathen to whom they preached, and therefore the more dependent on the help of Christian brethren. Do we trust that we should have received them like Gaius, gladly and helped them forward on their journey, in such sort as befitted their godly errand? Let us prove, that we have the heart to do so, by now doing what is as nigh to this as we can, by kind attentions to those who minister to ourselves, and by contributing abundantly to the support of those who minister among strangers abroad.

If the Christian conduct of Gaius gave such joy to St. John, how must he have been grieved by the arrogance, ambition, and tyranny of Diotrophes! How must it have pained his heart, to think that he should have to give sentence against the evil deeds, and malicious words, of one who was in the same church with Gaius and himself! But even the wickedness of Diotrophes may be not without its use, if it become effectual for a warning to the church. "Beloved, follow not that which is evil." Let us never love "to have the preeminence." Let us never refuse to receive those who have authority. Let us never add to our own sins, by forbidding the good deeds of those who would fain do good. No, let us follow that which is good. Let us walk with Gaius, and Demetrius, and the children of God, in the way that St. John has taught, in the way that Christ has gone before. Then shall we have the praise of all whose praise is worthy to be had. Truth itself could then speak well of us, if we were truly good. The words of the apostle would rise up in the judgment, not against but for us. And believing his record now, we should find it to be true at the last. Let us rejoice to think that the day is at hand; that we shall shortly see him, and speak face to face. "Peace be to thee," he has once written, in God's name, to every one of us. Oh that he may then be able to repeat the salutation! Oh that we may then receive, and give, the joyful greeting of the saints amongst each other, by that new name to be then given unto each, which no man knoweth, except those who receive it. See Rev. 2. 17.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE. 1—11.

That we must contend for the faith against deceivers.

1 Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called :

2 Mercy unto you, and peace, and love be multiplied.

3 Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you, that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

4 For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

5 I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not.

6 And the angels, which kept not their first estate,

|| Or, principality.

† Gr. other.

1 Zech. 3. 2.

but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day.

7 Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8 Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities.

9 Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, 'The Lord rebuke thee.

10 But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves.

11 Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core.

§ 682. The evils of disunion, false doctrine, and false teachers.

St. Jude prays for mercy, peace, and love, to be multiplied unto the very same persons, whom he exhorts that they "should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." There is then a way of maintaining truth, without stirring up strife. Nay there is a way of contending for the faith without breaking peace, or hindering love. God grant that we may find this path so often missed! God grant that we may be neither misled by error, nor yet arrogant in our defence of truth, neither indifferent to the unity of the faith, nor yet inclined to narrow the common salvation!

We shall scarcely wonder at the repeated warnings contained in the Epistles, against the many forms of false doctrine, and many arts of false teachers, if we consider what great hindrance hence arises to the healing influence of the Gospel amongst mankind. The mere fact that Christians are at variance at all, as to what is the true Christianity, has in all ages of the church proved a stumblingblock to the world. But to this must be added the dishonour done to God, and to his Gospel, by the extravagance of many of the false creeds which have prevailed, the mischief done by the least of falsehood, in any of them, and the gross scandal which has arisen from the unholy lives, and manifestly corrupt motives, of many who have been concerned in devising or upholding them. It is to this last matter that St. Jude here chiefly refers. God forbid that any such as these should ever minister in our own beloved church! God open their eyes, if any such be found, either in the church or out of it, and bring them to contrition and confession, repentance and amendment of life!

"Before of old" they have been described in prophecy, and their condemnation plainly therein set down. See Isa. 8. 15. Ungodly they are, having no love of God in their hearts, but presuming on his love to sin the more. They deny "the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ;" denying in words that He is God, or denying in their lives that He is their Lord, by living in wilful disobedience to his commands. When we are exposed to risk of being corrupted by their false doctrines, let us call to mind how many warnings God's word contains, recording as it were beforehand the sentence of those who sin wilfully, after having enjoyed the knowledge of the truth. Let us remember how the Israelites were destroyed in their unbelief, by the same Lord who delivered them out of Egypt. Let us observe what we are here taught, of the angels who fell away from their state of blessedness, how God is keeping them in misery for the present, unto condemnation in the end. Let us lay to heart the example of them of Sodom and Gomorrha, whose sufferings may give us some faint notion of "eternal fire." Fleshly lusts led them astray. "Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh." And further they "despise dominion," wherein it seems they resemble the fallen angels. "And speak evil of dignities," which is what even an archangel durst not do of Satan. "But these speak evil of those things which they know not," railing at the truth which they have never tried, or at the teachers of the truth whom they have never heard; at the same time corrupting themselves by sinful indulgence in those natural appetites, which they have in common with the brutes. Oh how great is the woe awaiting those who thus transgress, and who mislead others into the like transgressions, like Balaam, for the sake of filthy lucre, or like Core for gratification of their pride! God defend us from all such attempts upon our faith! God deliver us from the like wiles in our own deceitful hearts!

False teachers, and their condemnation further described.

12 These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots;

13 Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

14 And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, 'Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints,

15 To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him.

16 These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage.

17 But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ;

18 How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts.

19 These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit.

20 But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost,

21 Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

22 And of some have compassion, making a difference:

23 And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

24 Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy,

25 To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

§ 683. How we must live to the glory of Christ.

Charity means love. And "feasts of charity" were love feasts, meals eaten in the congregation by all the members together, in token of their mutual affections. What black spots in feasts so fair were these hypocrites whom St. Jude describes, men who dared to intrude into the solemn assembly, merely in order to feast themselves! How like were they to clouds without water, professing as they did to teach the truth, and yet not teaching it! How like to "trees whose fruit withereth," nay rather without any fruit at all, dead in both senses, fit only to be rooted out! "Raging waves of the sea," these also help to shew what such false teachers are, whose lying lips foam out "their own shame." And so likewise do "wandering stars," which after a time are lost to our view; for in like manner there is reserved to these hypocrites "the blackness of darkness for ever."

And not only is their character represented by these lively images, not only has their condemnation been signified beforehand by the things which befel the Israelites in the wilderness, and the fallen angels, and the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Enoch also, as St. Jude assures us, distinctly prophesied of them, when he spake of the Lord's coming, "with ten thousand of his saints." Even as long ago as in the seventh generation from Adam the particulars of that judgment were set forth. All that are ungodly will be then convicted before the Lord and his saints, "of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." How must it then fare with these "murmurers," these "complainers," these who walk "after their own lusts!" How must it then fare with the many who set up their own will and wisdom in opposition to the will and wisdom of the Lord, and find fault with what He does, dispenses, or reveals! How must it fare with any or with all, whose "mouth speaketh great swelling words," in daring contradiction of the words spoken by the Lord, who give to men the honour due unto their Saviour, in order to get present gain unto themselves! "Behold, the Lord cometh." This was true so many thousand years ago. This should have been enough, from that time to this, to put to silence the foolishness of men, and to put an end to their wicked works. "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." May we be counted in that number, and thus rejoice in the tidings of his coming!

The apostles also had often spoken beforehand of these false teachers and false brethren, describing them as "mockers," abounding under the last dispensation, "who should walk after their own ungodly lusts; men "who separate themselves, sensual, not having the Spirit." How amply are their words now fulfilled! How many of professing Christians in all ages have been mockers of one another, nay and some of God! How many have walked after their own lusts! How many have caused divisions, or enlarged or continued them! How many have been sensual! How few spiritual! Let us examine, are we ourselves now living up to the instructions here given us by St. Jude? Are we building up ourselves on our most holy faith; becoming daily a more fitting temple for the indwelling of our God? Are we praying in the Holy Ghost, in that devotion of heart and earnestness of desire which the Holy Ghost inspires? Do we keep ourselves in the love of God, stedfastly fixing our affections upon Him, and noting in Him how greatly He loves us? Are we looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life; watching anxiously for his coming, and fully persuaded that when He comes, we shall enter into the joy of our Lord? And under these convictions do our hearts yearn with compassion over our erring brethren? And even those who are most hardened in iniquity do we try to save, like brands out of the fire; not without fear lest we hurt ourselves by drawing nigh to them, not without a salutary abhorrence of the infection of their sins?

These are things in which we must frequently and closely examine ourselves, to see whether we are right in the faith, and zealous in the service of our Lord. These are things, in which whilst we take pains to keep ourselves, we must remember that He, and He alone, can keep us from falling; yea, can present us "faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Therefore to Him, "the only wise God our Saviour," let us diligently ascribe all "glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen." Yes, let this be the great object of our heart's desire, to glorify Christ, and God in Him. Let it be for this that we desire to save our brethren. Let it be for this, even more than for our own gain, that we desire to save ourselves. Or rather, let us look upon the glory of our Lord as our own greatest gain. For is it not indeed ours? Have we not by inheritance a share in it? Or rather, are not we his? Are not we, our souls and bodies, our service in the flesh, and our reward in heaven, all purchased by his blood, all ordained for his glory?

Grant, heavenly Father, that the study of thy word may raise in us a concern for thy glory! Grant that whatever part of it we begin or end, we may in all ascribe the praise to Thee!

THE REVELATION OF S. JOHN THE DIVINE. 1—3.

The author, and the subject, of this book.

1 The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John:

2 Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

3 Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

§ 684. The duty of studying this book.

God the Father gave this "Revelation" to Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord, in order for Him "to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." Such is the origin of this book. Like every other good gift, it is of God's giving. And it is given unto us through his Son. And the way in which it has been given is this, Christ "sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." This is he who in the Gospel which he wrote "bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw." See 1 John 1. 1, 2. The same apostle who had been appointed to certify to the past, was also privileged to reveal things yet to come. And this he does throughout this book, chiefly by means of figures, similitudes, and types; a kind of language which serves to prevent collusion, and cuts off all occasion of suspecting it, in the fulfilment of the things foretold.

Let us consider then, that each several figure, sign, or symbol, is to be interpreted in the like sense throughout the whole book. Let us exert ourselves to understand their meaning, both in order that we may cherish a more lively expectation of things yet to come; and in order that we may the more clearly discern the proof of the foreknowledge of God, in the words which have already come to pass. The more obscure the figure is in itself, so much the more pains ought the faithful to take that they may understand God's promises, and so much the more heartily to glorify God in their manifest accomplishment. Let us both study what is here written, and hold fast what hence we learn. Let us delight to see in all that is here set forth, "the testimony of Jesus Christ." Let us read and hear, in the full persuasion, that the time when all will be fulfilled is at hand. And may the blessing which is here promised rest upon us! May God help us to understand! May God help us to believe and to obey! May He make us patient in suffering, when it shall be a time to suffer with Christ! And when the hour of triumph shall have come, may He make us to share the glory of the Lord!

St. John addresseth the seven churches in Asia.

4 John to the seven churches which are in Asia : Grace be unto you, and peace, from him¹ which is, and which was, and which is to come ; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne ;

5 And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the ¹first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, ²and washed us from our sins in his own blood,

6 And hath ³made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

7 ⁴Behold, he cometh with clouds ; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him : and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet,

11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last : and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia ; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

§ 685. That we must hear and obey the words of Christ.

This book is addressed by St. John "to the seven churches which are in Asia." Under which name he also signifies all churches every where. For the number seven is used commonly in this book to signify the whole of any thing; even as in this same versc, "the seven Spirits" mean the Holy Spirit of God, in all his fulness and perfection. The blessing here pronounced upon the church is grace, and peace, from God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost; from the Father "which is, and which was, and which is to come," from the Holy Ghost, or "the seven Spirits which are before his throne," "and from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth." Which last expression may allude both to his overruling the kingdoms of this world, as shewn in the fulfilment of this whole prophecy, and also to his being "King of saints," ch. 15. 3, who as saints are themselves for their excellency "the kings of the earth." For so has Christ made us even to be "kings and priests unto God and his Father," having "washed us from our sins in his own blood;" such was his love towards us! "To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen." Thanks be to Him for having loved us! Thanks be to Him for having washed us from our sins! Oh that we may shew forth his praise, not only with our lips, but in our lives! Oh that we may magnify his glory and enlarge his dominion, both by our own devotion, and by our zeal for the devotion of our brethren!

"Behold, he cometh with clouds," in like manner as He ascended into heaven. See Acts 1. 11. "And every eye shall see him." Not one of us shall be able to avoid that sight. Oh that we may not wish to avoid it! Oh that we may not be numbered with them "which pierced him!" Oh that we may be amongst those who shall rejoice, when "all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him!" "Even so. Amen." May we have grace to join in this petition of St. John. May we be glad to think of our Saviour's second coming to judge the world! He is "Alpha and Omega." These are the first and the last letters of the language in which this book was written, here used to signify that our Lord is before all things and after all things; that He is, and was, and is to come; in one word that He is "the Almighty." Thus might even the letters of each book we read remind us, that Christ is from eternity to eternity, and raise our thoughts to Him in some such strain as this: Lord, be Thou the first and last in all my actions, let me in all begin and end with Thee!

The writer of the Revelation here tells us that he is our brother, a companion in tribulation of those who suffer for righteousness' sake, and "in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ;" one who on earth suffered with Christ, and hoped to reign with Him in heaven. He was "in the isle of Patmos," which appears to have been a place of banishment, to which he had been sentenced for his preaching of God's word, and bearing testimony to Jesus Christ. And he was "in the Spirit on the Lord's day." On the Christian Sabbath, in the midst of his devotions, he was quickened to a supernatural discernment of the heavenly objects, which throughout this whole book he describes. Let us attend, that we may have the benefit of the inspiration which he enjoyed. Let us imagine that we could hear suddenly behind us that great voice, loud and clear, as of a trumpet, which said, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." Let us read with as much attention, as we should listen with, if we were to hear it. Let us be thankful that the things spoken have been written in a book for us to read. Let us consider that what thus was sent to the seven churches in Asia, was sent also to ourselves. Let us know that He who sent these warnings and encouragements, by the means of his Apostle, could force them, if he thought fit, at this moment, on our own unwilling ears. Let us remember that we must hear his voice at the last. And let us now obey his words, that when we hear Him really speaking to ourselves, it may be in a tone of gentleness, and with words of joy.

The vision of one like unto the Son of man.

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks;

13 And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14 His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15 And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

16 And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

17 And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; ¹ I am the first and the last:

18 I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19 Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter;

20 The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

§ 686. Of having a lively notion of the presence of Christ.

The sense of seeing, and the sense of hearing, are both made to help in conveying to St. John a due impression of things heavenly, to be by him written down. Both may assist us in conceiving aright, of what God would by his means reveal to us. Could we imagine ourselves to hear the heavenly voice? Let us imagine also that we could see, as we turn round, the heavenly sight, the seven golden candlesticks, and “one like unto the Son of man” in the midst of them. Those candlesticks, let us observe, are the churches. And the stars which “he had in his right hand” are the angels of the churches. It is amongst us that our Lord is present every where. And in his right hand He holds those of us, whom He has appointed to rule over the rest. How much more highly should we honour them, than we commonly do now, if we could see our Lord Himself thus upholding them! How much more highly would they themselves esteem their office, how much more humbly feel their own unworthiness! What am I, they might well think, each within himself, that I should be a star in the right hand of Christ? And what are we, even all the members of his churches might no less profitably reflect, what are we, that Christ should be in the midst of us?

And what, if we now could see Him, as St. John saw Him? “His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow;” as God is also described in the prophet Daniel, to signify that He is “the Ancient of days.” Dan. 7. 9. “His eyes were as a flame of fire;” to shew us by their brightness, that He can discern all things. “And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace,” to represent the fierceness of his judgments, when He shall tread down all enemies under his feet. “And his voice was as the sound of many waters;” so powerful above all other sounds to command the attention of the hearers. Besides the stars in his right hand, the angels of the churches, He held in his mouth a twoedged sword, the word of God, see Heb. 4. 12; these two, the living ministers, and the everlasting Gospel, being the chief ordinances, by means of which He gains his victories, and makes his light to shine. “And his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength;” no other object being bright enough to give us any suitable notion of the majesty of our Lord.

Let us then endeavour to see Him as here described, in clothing like that worn by the Jewish priesthood, to signify that He is our great High Priest. Let us frequently imagine Him to be present, with all this manifestation of great glory. Might not the very thought serve to check our rising passions, to silence our idle words, to suppress our selfish thoughts, and to make us in point of every evil propensity no other than as dead men at his feet? Nay, might not our thoughts, our conception of his presence, amount almost in effect to the same thing as if we saw Him; faith rendering us as certain that He is really present, and that He has his attention really fixed upon ourselves? “Fear not,” is his encouraging address, to every one that believes in Him in earnest. “Fear not,” though I am indeed, as thou heardest me declare, “the first and the last,” I am also “he that liveth, and was dead,” the Word that was made flesh; the Lamb that was slain; “and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen;” most certainly is this true, I live for ever; “and have the keys of hell and of death,” can unlock their doors, and say to them who are therein, Arise. Fear not therefore; but hope, and trust. Fear not; but love. Fear not; but obey. “Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter.” Most carefully did St. John fulfil this commandment. Let us also do diligently all that Christ has commanded to us. Then should we have no cause to fear, though our eyes were to behold his presence. Then will He use for us the keys of hell and of death, not to shut us in, but to let us out for ever.

Lord, let us now live as in thy presence, that we may hereafter enter into thy glory! Let us dwell with Thee in holiness, whilst we yet have time; that we may reign with Thee in joy to all eternity!

The epistle to the church of Ephesus.

1 Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.

7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

§ 687. The promise to them that overcome.

In each of these seven epistles to the seven churches, the whole church is addressed in the person of its angel, or chief minister. So much have they to answer for who are set over the rest! So deeply ought the rest to feel concerned in the warnings and exhortations which are here directed to their ministers. And in each epistle it is written, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." So that it is the Holy Ghost who saith these things, which St. John writes by the direction of One like unto the Son of man. Wherein the Son and the Holy Ghost act as One. And these things, which are said to these churches in particular, are said to all, in all churches, until the end of time, even to as many as have an ear wherewith to hear. They are to be profitable for warning and encouragement, under all the dispensations of trial, which are afterwards in this book foreshewn. May God quicken our hearing, our understanding, our affections, that we may not only hear his words, but mark, learn, and inwardly digest them, that we may not only know his will, but also love to do it; for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord!

Be it observed then that Christ knows our works, He fails not to note the labour, and patience, of those who suffer or exert themselves for his sake. He is well pleased when we cannot bear them that are evil, when we consort with them no more than is our duty for their good. He commends us when we prove all things, so as to reject them which would deceive us by false doctrine. He approves when it is for his name's sake that we bear patiently the afflictions which are in the world, and labour without fainting for the glory which is in heaven. But in the midst of all these praises, what a charge is this, which is here brought against "the angel of the church of Ephesus," to have fallen away from the love he had at the first! What a common case for a Christian, when first awakened, to feel a high degree of affection and devotion, and then to flag in the warmth of love, even though he persist in the course of duty! What a rebuke, and disappointment, and disgrace, to be reminded from whence we are fallen, to be turned back to do the works we did at first, and to feel the feelings which at first we felt, when we ought by this time to have gone on, far, far towards perfection! Nor is to love enough. We must also hate what Christ hates, we must abhor what Christ abhors. We must abhor evil; not wicked men, but wicked works, the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, not themselves. Who these were is not exactly known. But this is certain, that they were workers of wickedness. And this we must remember is our duty, to feel hatred and abhorrence against sin, as well as desire and love towards that which is good. Else will He "who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks," come unto us quickly, and remove our candlestick out of its place. This has happened at Ephesus. The church, which there once flourished, is no more. God grant that it may not happen to us also! God grant that the angels of our church may do all with the same ardour of affection, as when first the Gospel dawned upon the darkness of the land! God grant that the candlestick, which holds the light of truth in the midst of our beloved country, may shine more and more unto the perfect day!

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life; which is in the midst of the paradise of God." What this is we know not. But we may suppose that it is food which nourishes both body and soul; and that it must signify the enjoyment of at least the same happiness, be that what it may, which was at the first provided for man in Eden. Would we know with certainty? Let us strive to overcome. Let us put on the whole armour of God. Let us fight manfully against the flesh, the world, and the devil. Let us be always on the watch against sin. Let us be continually praying unto God that He would for Christ's sake give unto us the victory, by the help of the Holy Ghost. Then we shall enjoy those good things which pass our present understanding, yea, we shall be filled with all the fulness of God. Let us thank Him for what He has already given us. Let us feel assured that He will hereafter give us infinitely more.

Epistles to the churches of Smyrna and of Pergamos.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

10 Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;

13 I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

16 Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

Unto the angel of the church of Smyrna our Lord describes Himself as "the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive." For these were circumstances well suited to encourage the afflicted members of this church, in their "works, and tribulation, and poverty." Amongst them were blasphemers, calling themselves Jews, but in reality belonging to the communion of Satan. And "the devil," by means of these his agents, would be allowed to cast some of them into prison, for their further trial. Which state of tribulation was to last "ten days," that is to say, ten years. For a day seems to be the symbol of a year, both in the Book of Revelation, and in that of the prophet Daniel. But they of Smyrna, though they were "as having nothing," were "yet possessing all things;" they have here that promise given them, which might make them to be "always rejoicing." 2 Cor. 6. 10. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." And He who promised, had Himself been dead, and was then alive. He had Himself been faithful unto death, though He was alive for evermore. Having then his promise thus secure, let us fear none of those things which we may be called upon to suffer whilst on earth. What matters it whether it be for days or years that we are here afflicted, if we shall in the end have to rejoice throughout all eternity? Or if even our lives should be required, and our death be compassed by the enemies of the cross of Christ, how little need it grieve those who are solemnly assured, that they "shall not be hurt of the second death," not be "cast into the lake of fire?" Ch. 20. 14.

To the church of Pergamos, as to the rest, our Lord declares, "I know thy works." He was aware of its dwelling "where Satan's seat is." In a city noted for its profligacy there was a church which held fast the name of Christ; there were Christians who denied not the faith of Christ, even in the days when by professing it, they exposed themselves to the risk of being slain. Happy Antipas, to be called by Christ Himself, "my faithful martyr!" Who would not gladly suffer all the martyr's pain, that might become partaker of the martyr's crown? And yet this church was not without its faults. "He which hath the sharp sword with two edges," threatens to use it against them quickly, unless they had the grace to repent. And their faults were these, that they had amongst them some who held the doctrine of Balaam, tending to sanction idolatry and fornication, and also some who held the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, "which thing," our Lord adds, "I hate." So that He not only hates their evil deeds; ver. 6; He also hates their evil doctrines. And we too must not only loathe iniquity in practice, but also abhor falsehood in doctrine. And of all false doctrines, we must especially hate those, which tend most directly to the dishonour of God, and to corrupting the practice of man! But whilst we hate these doctrines, and cannot bear so much as to keep company with such as hold them, let us still continue to be in charity with all men. Let us do violence to our own feelings of repugnance towards some, if we may by any means do good to any.

And let us hear what awaits them that overcome! "To eat of the hidden manna;" that food of angels which was signified by the manna in the wilderness. "A white stone;" the token of acquittal! And "a new name;" the token of new honours, of new joys, of a new inheritance! A name "which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it;" so utterly is that heavenly state above the comprehension of all others, excepting those who actually enjoy it! Oh that we may receive that new name, that white stone, that hidden manna! Oh that we may love what Christ loves, and hate what Christ hates, and enjoy what He enjoys for ever!

The epistle to the church in Thyatira.

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman ¹ Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that ² I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But that which ye have already hold fast till I come.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

27 ³ And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him the morning star.

29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

² Jer. 11. 20. & 17. 10.

³ Ps. 2. 9.

§ 689. How the burden of Christ is light.

This was no small praise for the church at Thyatira, that their last works were more than the first. May He who knows our works, and service, and faith, and patience, may He in like manner see them always on the increase! Whatever we now do in the way of serving God, may we daily serve Him more and more! However heartily we now believe, however patiently we now endure, may we daily grow in the strength of our convictions, and in the steadfastness of our resolutions, in the clearness with which we see the joy awaiting us in heaven, and in the meekness with which we receive the ills that happen to us on earth!

And yet "the Son of God" has notwithstanding a few things to say against this church. He charges it with suffering a false prophetess to teach and to seduce his servants into sin. So that a church has to answer for it, if it so much as allow false doctrine or wicked practices; such practices as fornication, such false doctrine as this, that it was lawful to eat things known to have been sacrificed to idols. For all such departure from the truth is itself a kind of spiritual adultery; it is unfaithfulness towards Christ on the part of his spouse the church. Most graciously does He in such a case give space for repentance. But unto them which will not repent He declares that He will visit for these things, that He will cast "into a bed," not for pleasure but for pain, lay low, "into great tribulation;" that he will kill "with death," that is to say, utterly destroy; so as that all the churches shall know that He "searcheth the reins and hearts." And He "will give unto every one" according to his works. What can be a more fearful sentence than this last, to them whose works are evil? What sinner would not pause in sin, if he could be made to feel the certainty that Christ knows his works, and will hereafter reward him accordingly?

The Judge however speaks very graciously to the rest. He lays no heavy burden upon them that have not listened to the false prophetess. For them "which have not known," not professed, these deep things, as the deceivers call them, or "depths of Satan" as they really are, to them the yoke of Christ is easy, and his burden light. Let them but hold fast, till He come, what they have, the truth once delivered to the saints. Let them contend earnestly for the faith; and also fight manfully against the world, the flesh, and the devil. Let them keep their Lord's works unto the end. And behold He will share with them his own glorious inheritance, even that which He received of his Father. This it is which makes our utmost burden really light, the weight of glory with which it is compared. To be joint heirs with Christ in his kingdom. To have a portion of his "power over the nations," that power of which we see some small proof in that prevalence of the Gospel over the kingdoms of the earth, which is foreshewn throughout this book, and which will hereafter be made manifest when our Lord Himself shall be seen coming in heaven, with power and great glory. Then will He give "the morning star," even Himself in all his brightness, to them that overcome. See Ch. 22. 16.

Lord, when all the power of all the nations of the earth shall be as nothing in thy presence, when the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up, when they perish, but Thou remainest, may it be our lot to abide with Thee for ever! Lord, remember us when Thou comest into thy kingdom. Remember, Lord, thy servants for good. See Luke 23. 42. Neh. 13. 31.

The epistle to the church in Sardis.

1 And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. ¹ If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

5 He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the ² book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

¹ 1 Thess. 5. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 10.

² ch. 20. 12. Phil. 4. 3.

§ 690. The peril of profession without practice.

See in the angel of the church of Sardis, and in the church itself, the fearful case of profession without practice! See an instance of that formal religion, which is often highly esteemed among men, whilst it is abomination in the sight of God! It is to have a name as though we were alive, when in truth we are dead. It is to be addressed as Christians, when we have no faith in Christ, no sense of his love in dying for our redemption, no delight in doing his will, no hope of sharing his glory. God preserve us from such spiritual death! God grant that we may both glory in the name of Christian, and make it the business of our life to be Christians indeed! God help us to set before our eyes this thought, that Christ knows our works, that He who "hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars," all the ministers, and all the churches, and all the gifts of the Holy Ghost wherewith to quicken them, He knows whether we be indeed alive to righteousness, or dead; whether our works are or are not according to his commands!

But if we would have God help us, we must use the utmost of our diligence to look into these matters for ourselves. We must take pains to know our own works. We must search and examine into our lives, to see whether we live according to God's word. Whereinsoever we find ourselves wrong, there we must be watchful to amend. And whereinsoever we have reason to hope that we are right, therein we must watch that we grow stronger and stronger. Calling to mind what we have received and heard from God, we must hold fast stedfastly whatsoever we find ourselves doing agreeably thereunto; we must repent effectually where we feel that we are transgressing his will. And let us observe, that if our works are not "perfect before God," this is wrong. If there is any one duty omitted, any one thing done less faithfully, less zealously, less affectionately than we ought, this is wrong, this must be repented of, this must be amended. Who then "can tell how oft he offendeth?" Ps. 19. 12. Who has not need to pray with David, "Lord, cleanse thy servant from secret faults?" Who, when he has done all, is not constrained to say to God, I am at best an unprofitable servant? See Luke 17. 10.

If we repent not, we cannot be forgiven. If we amend not, we cannot have repented. If we call not to mind God's word, we are not likely to amend. If we watch not for the coming of Christ, we are sure to be taken by surprise. He will come on us as privily, as unexpectedly, as a thief in the night, when men sleep. We shall no more be aware of his approach than they who slumber up to the moment of the thief's coming. Oh what must then be our feelings of dismay, regret, and shame! Our treasure irrecoverably lost, our life eternal only endless misery, our Lord and Saviour now condemning us as unworthy; and all because we would not watch!

But in the decline of zeal, and love, and watchfulness, which is laid to the charge of Sardis, there were "a few names" which had not "defiled their garments." There were a few Christians whom Christ counted worthy to walk with Him in white. And this we trust has been true in the most corrupt of churches, in communities of Christians, whose name that they lived has been belied by the fact that they were dead. "A few names," and they not blotted "out of the book of life," but hereafter to be confessed by Christ before the Father and before the angels! What can any church now existing hope for more than this? What can we ourselves pretend to, having so many, as we notoriously have, who professing the Gospel of Christ, deny the power thereof? But among few can I be one? This is a question which every one of us may well ask. What ground have I to hope that my name is not blotted out of the book of life? I have been once for all enrolled as a member of Christ's church. Am I now a living member thereof? Do I shew the signs of life? Do I repent and amend, do I watch and pray? Do I love, and hope, and rejoice? Do I count myself unworthy of the least of all God's mercies? Do I strive to become less unworthy? Do I trust that God will receive me, all unworthy as I am, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord?

The epistle to the church of Philadelphia.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth;

8 I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

§ 691. The description of our heavenly inheritance.

To each of the rest of the seven churches, our Lord describes Himself by some of the signs or symbols, which were noted in his first appearance to St. John, in the midst of the seven candlesticks. See ch. 1. 13—16. But to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, He announces Himself as being holy, and true, and as having the key of David, applying to Himself these words of Isaiah: "the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open." Isa. 22. 22. In most of the other churches, his threatenings have been literally fulfilled by their wasting or utter destruction. In this, and in the church of Smyrna, his promises have been no less signally accomplished, by their preservation up to the present moment. No man has been yet able to shut the door opened by the Lord. The Christians of Philadelphia, though their strength has been but little, have not denied the name of Christ. And they exist as a Christian church at this hour, in the very centre of Mahometan oppression, when Ephesus is little better than a heap of ruins, when the few Christians who remain in Pergamos have to send to Smyrna for an officiating minister, when in Thyatira there are no Christians left at all, in Sardis still a few, but neither minister nor church, and when the desolation of Laodicea is complete. Who can doubt that in like manner these prophecies will be accomplished in all Christian churches unto the end of time; in the wasting and destruction of those which are unfaithful, and in the sparing of those, which however small their strength, have done what they could? See Mark 14. 8.

Of these promises to Philadelphia there is some part to be yet further fulfilled. The unbelieving Jews, who already may in many instances have been moved to worship Christ, by the conviction of his having loved his church, shall some day, in larger numbers, and by a more signal triumph, be won to the Christian communion. Philadelphia will most probably be then one amongst the churches, which having kept Christ's injunctions to perseverance, and having been kept by Him from the temptations which try all that dwell upon the earth, shall make its light to shine both to Jew and Gentile, to the praise of the glory of the Gospel of God. Let us then like that church keep the word of Christ, and not deny his name. Let us observe what He told them, that behold, He is coming quickly. Let us hold fast what we have, yielding no one point in our Christian proficiency which we ever once have gained, and suffering no one, either man or devil, through our sloth, ignorance, or wilful disobedience, to take our crown, to deprive us of our heavenly inheritance.

And let us think of what that heavenly inheritance is. Let us note by how many images Christ tries to help us in conceiving how bright is that crown of glory. We shall be made pillars in the temple of God, at once supporting and adorning the courts of our God. And we shall "go no more out." We shall "dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." Ps. 23. 6. And as monuments of God's grace and of our Saviour's triumph, there will be written upon these pillars the name of God, and the name of God's city, "the new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God," and also Christ's own "new name." And what though we cannot now comprehend the whole amount of glory and of joy which here is signified? Though we know not what the new Jerusalem is, or how it shall come down from heaven; we are thankful to be assured that it will come. Though we cannot tell how much of honour is to be conveyed in these new names, we are sure that it is abundantly beyond all we can desire. And God having described the happiness of heaven in the language of worldly felicity, it is for us who have no just ideas of things that are purely spiritual, to be comforted, and encouraged, and gladdened, by these signs and symbols, these images and similitudes. God grant that whatsoever we see glorious upon earth may remind us of things more excellent in heaven; our temples, of his courts above, our finest cities, of his new Jerusalem, our tallest pillars, of the lofty eminence in which He designs to set us, our highest titles, of the new name which He will then delight to give us!

The epistle to the church of the Laodiceans.

14 And unto the angel of the church || of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God;

15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot.

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

17 Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18 I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that, thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

19 ¹ As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

20 Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

21 To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

|| Or, in Laodicea.

¹ Prov. 3. 11. Heb. 12. 5.

In the Laodiceans we see how offensive it is to God to be lukewarm in religion. He in whom all the promises of God "are yea, and in him Amen," 2 Cor. 1. 20, He whose testimony is faithful and true, He who is the Son of God, begotten before all worlds, see Col. 1. 15, He had rather we were either hot or cold, than neither. To be cold is to be utterly destitute of faith. Now they that are such may sometime be converted. To be lukewarm is to know these things and not to do them, to be aware how God has first loved us, and notwithstanding not to love Him. And what further can ever make us love, if this does not? What language can sufficiently express the vile and loathsome aspect in which, if our affections are still unmoved, we must appear unto Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us?

It is commonly the case with the lukewarm, that they are proud in their own supposed sufficiency. They say that they are rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing. They esteem themselves able to provide sufficiently for themselves, in the sight of God, by their own exertions. Hence they are not sensible of how much they owe to God for the redemption of the world. They have no lively sense of want supplied, and therefore no warmth of thankfulness towards Him, who provides all things richly for their salvation. First, we must feel that we are "wretched, and miserable, and poor;" and we shall then be anxious to buy of Christ "gold tried in the fire," that treasure in heaven, which no length of use can impair, and which is rendered so much the more precious to our sense by the affliction we have to endure on earth. First we must be aware that we are "naked," we must feel ashamed, out of our sense of our own sinfulness, to stand in the presence of God; and we shall then resort to Christ for "white raiment," "the righteousness of saints," ch. 19. 8, that we may be clothed, and that the shame of our nakedness may not appear. First, we must be sensible that we are blind, that by nature we cannot discern the things of God, and we shall then press forward unto Him who is ready to sell us "eyesalve," that we may see, the grace of an understanding heart; and who in every case invites us to buy of Him, "without money, and without price." Isa. 55. 1.

They who cannot be won by kind treatment, may sometimes be reclaimed by means of punishment. They who when all things prosper continue lukewarm may have their affections raised to warmth by the furnace of affliction. And therefore the faithful Witness reminds the Laodiceans, "as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten." Lord, when Thou chastenest us, may we take it for a token of thy love, and "be zealous therefore, and repent!" When Thou dost vouchsafe to stand at our door and knock, whether by sickness, or any manner of adversity, may we have grace to hear thy voice, may we make haste to open the door; and do Thou of thy infinite mercy come in as Thou hast promised, to sup with us and we with Thee! By this figure of a social meal, Thou hast signified thy kind communion with thy saints on earth. By a seat on thine own throne, Thou hast set forth the extent of their joint inheritance with Thee in heaven. Oh help us to overcome that we may share thy glory! Oh help us to hear what the Spirit saith both to the angels and to the churches, both to these seven in Asia, and to all churches every where, help us to hear, to understand, and to obey!

Now the sum of what "the Spirit saith" is this: Christ knows the works of all, and will judge accordingly. In affliction it is our duty to be patient; under persecution still to be faithful; in the corruption of a church, not to divide but to repent, and not to suffer them that corrupt. We must hate evil deeds. We must hate false doctrine. We must give none offence in any thing. We must profess the truth, and live up to our profession. We must love heartily, trust devoutly, serve faithfully. If we do these things, we reign with Christ for ever. If we do them not, we perish at his coming.

The vision of the throne.

1 After this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

2 And immediately I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4 And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

5 And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunders and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

6 And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.

† Gr. they have no rest.

7 And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and † they rest not day and night, saying, 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.'

9 And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever,

10 The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

11 'Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.'

1 Is. 6. 3.

2 ch. 5. 12.

§ 693. Worship in heaven.

In this vision we have a lively representation of the worship which is paid to God in heaven, signified to us by what St. John saw and heard, by sights and sounds, which convey to us in a figure such notions of these things as we can at present form. And these figures appear to be in part the same as the pattern shewed to Moses in the Mount, see Exod. ch. 25, by which he was directed to make the tabernacle and all things therein; and in part to be the same as those figures which were revealed to Isaiah, ch. 6, to Ezekiel, ch. 1. 10, and to Daniel, ch. 7. 9. "A door was opened in heaven." St. John seemed to see as through a door into another world. And the voice which he had heard before, "as of a trumpet," ch. 1. 10, now invited him, saying, "Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter." And immediately the apostle was "in the spirit," not beholding the things around him with eyes of flesh, but having the sights which he here describes impressed by revelation directly on his mind. May we have grace to see through faith with the assistance of this vision the things that are invisible, the majesty of God, his mercifulness, his justice, his power, and great glory!

The throne set in heaven, and one that sat on it, seem to signify the presence of God the Father. The likeness to a jasper and a sardine stone, represents the brightness and beauty of his appearance. The rainbow "in sight like unto an emerald," having the colours shining as in precious stones, reminds us of his covenant of mercy. The elders on their seats, or thrones, which appeared "round about the throne," were clothed in white raiment, and "had on their heads crowns of gold." In them therefore we see a symbol of Christ's church, elsewhere called "a royal priesthood." 1 Pet. 2. 9. And in their number there is probably an allusion to the twelve sons of Jacob, together with the twelve apostles of Christ, of whom He said that they should sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. See Matt. 19. 28. The lightnings, and thunders, and voices, out of the throne, proclaim God's power, and tell the wicked of his purpose to bring them to judgment. The "seven lamps of fire, burning before the throne," "are the seven Spirits of God;" by which is meant the Holy Ghost, and his manifold gifts. See ch. 1. 4. The "sea of glass like unto crystal," may perhaps mean the peace which pervades all heaven. For it is the very reverse of the troubled sea with which we are familiar on earth, "whose waters cast up mire and dirt," and which is declared to be an emblem of "the wicked." Isa. 57. 20. And the four living creatures, seem to be the same which were typified by the cherubim over the mercy seat, see Exod. 25. 18, and which were also seen in the visions of Ezekiel. 1. 10.

But however hard it may be to say what these several symbols signify, nothing is more clear, nothing more profitable for us to observe, than the work in which they are engaged. Let our devotion be like theirs, not occasional but continual: "they rest not day and night." Let our worship be paid in all humility: they "cast their crowns before the throne." Let our praises be offered up, not in rivalry with each other, but in harmony, in communion, in love. For so do the living creatures and the elders agree together, to give "glory, and honour, and thanks, to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever." This is the way they do in heaven. Oh that God who alone is worthy of all honour, who alone is "Holy, holy, holy," may give us grace thus to worship Him whilst here we dwell on earth, and may take us when we depart this life, thus to worship Him in heaven for ever! To Him be all the glory of all the things that He has created and preserved!

The vision of the Book and of the Lamb.

1 And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, ¹ the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

It is by means of this book that the things "which shall be hereafter" are revealed to St. John, and through him to us. The book was seen "in the right hand of him that sat on the throne," to signify that He both knows all things that are to be, and also will surely bring them to pass. We must conceive of the book as written on seven separate sheets or skins, rolled up, after the manner of books in ancient times, one within the other; and each separately sealed as it was rolled up, so as to conceal all the writing on both sides. So unsearchable are God's judgments, and his ways past finding out! So full of wisdom within and without are all his manifold purposes! In vain the mighty angel proclaims aloud, "Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?" Throughout all heaven and all earth, there is no one able; no one out of all whom God has created, competent to know his mind, or fit to be his counsellor. See Rom. 11. 34. This is one of the chief convictions to be impressed upon our minds by this affecting vision, our own utter insufficiency to scan the counsels of our Maker. When we hear men arguing about the doctrines of the Gospel, as if they knew better than God, when we are ourselves tempted to murmur at God's dealings, as if we could better tell than He what is most for our good, and for his glory, let us bethink ourselves of this sealed book; and let us remember that this is true of all the doings of the Lord, that no one is worthy to open them, so as to see what is therein.

The apostle "wept much" when he found this to be the case with the sealed volume. He had a real heartfelt desire after heavenly wisdom. He ardently longed to know what it was that was written in this book of God. Let us apply this to the anxiety and interest we feel in the study of spiritual truth. Have we ever wept much over the difficulties we meet with in God's word? Has it cost us a single tear to find some parts of it beyond our comprehension? Has it ever occurred to us to grieve at the thought, of how many of our fellow creatures there are, to whom the whole is at this moment as a sealed book? Oh that we could have the heart to weep for lack of knowledge, to weep much for the misery that is in the world through ignorance, through ignorance of God, and of the redemption which is in Christ Jesus! Oh that it were for sorrows like to these that our tears make haste to flow; and then God would dry them up!

Thus it was that St. John was comforted. "Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof." "Judah is a lion's whelp," were the words of Jacob to his sons, when he told them what should befall them "in the last days." Gen. 49. 1, 9. This was to shew the majesty and sovereignty of this tribe. And still more it was to signify that of this tribe should come the Messiah, according to the flesh. It is by a like figure that the ever blessed Son of God is here called "the Lion of the tribe of Juda." And He is also called the Root of David, because it was from this that David's glory chiefly arose, the having the Messiah for his Son. But though for his might, majesty, and dominion, our Lord might be spoken of as a Lion, it is by the symbol of a Lamb that He is commonly represented, throughout this whole vision and whole book. "In the midst of the throne," or as it is expressed in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens," Heb. 8. 1, close to the four living creatures, and surrounded by the four and twenty elders, "stood a Lamb as it had been slain;" even He "that liveth and was dead;" ch. 1. 18; having seven horns, the sign of perfect strength, and seven eyes, the sign of perfect insight into all things. "Which are," or represent to us, "the seven Spirits of God," the Holy Ghost, who is One with the Son, as well as One with the Father, and who, through the Son's intercession with the Father, see John 14. 16, is "sent forth into all the earth." No one knoweth the Father but the Son. See Matt. 11. 27. And no one searcheth the deep things of God but the Spirit. See 1 Cor. 2. 10. And when no one else in all heaven and earth was worthy, the Lamb "came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne." Happy are they to whomsoever the Son shall shew what is written therein. Happy are they in whom the Spirit shall work the faithfulness, and patience, and love, which are therein recommended!

The worship of the Lamb.

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10 And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; *

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14 And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

¶ Or, incense.

§ 695. How devoutly we ought to worship Christ.

The Lamb has no sooner taken "the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne," ver. 7, than all present fall down and worship Him. This is to shew us what great joy is really felt in heaven, and what ecstasy of thankfulness and love ought to arise in our own hearts whilst we are here below, on contemplating the revelation which God has given us of Himself, and especially of his dealings with his church, through the means of his blessed Son our Lord. And shall we be silent, when all things else unite to praise? Shall we fail to fall down before the Lamb, and offer Him our thanksgivings and our prayers, when they who are most nigh unto the throne of God's majesty, think it no robbery thus to honour the Son, even as they honour the Father? No; let us be aware that these elders, with their harps and golden vials, are representatives of what we ought to be ourselves. They stand for the whole church of God. To their harps we ought to tune our voices, and sing our glad psalms, and hymns of joy. Their vials full of odours, which vials "are the prayers of saints," ought to contain our own among the rest. And the new song they sung on this occasion, is such an one as we ought to sing anew, every hour of our lives, "unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God." Ch. 1. 5, 6.

This song seems to prove beyond dispute, that the four and twenty elders, are symbols of the redeemed of the earth. For this is the reason they assign why the Lamb is worthy to take the book, namely, "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests." And besides this they speak of reigning "on the earth;" which may mean either the manifold advantages which the faithful have over the unbelieving in this life, or some signal manifestation of the sovereignty of Christ which is as yet to come, and in which his people are appointed to share. In any case we may learn hence to praise our Lord, both for all that He has done for us already, and for all that He has promised to do hereafter. He has redeemed us. This is done. We have been bought with a price. We are his. We have been made unto our God "kings and priests." How is it that we care for trifles, when we have a kingdom in heaven prepared for us? How is it that we dare to be in any thing unholy, when we are all bound, in all things, to minister to the glory of God?

Rather let us at once enter as far as possible into the possession purchased for us by our Lord; into the joys of holiness, into the pleasures of loving God and loving man. Let us shew forth in our lives the praise of our Redeemer. Let our conduct, as well as our lips, express to all around us, how anxiously we desire to glorify Christ. This is the work of angels round about God's throne. This is what St. John saw them doing. And the words in which he heard them joining with the living creatures and the elders, declared "the Lamb that was slain," to be worthy of sevenfold praise, worthy "to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing." And not in heaven only were these words of worship uttered. Earth answered; yea, all things in heaven and in earth, and every where, burst forth in one harmonious strain; offering worship "unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

Oh that we may join heartily with them that "said Amen!" Oh that we may fall down with them that then fell down, in devout adoration towards Him "that liveth for ever and ever!" O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, how greatly do we rejoice to offer unto Thee our praises and thanksgivings, instead of the scorn which Thou didst once meet with upon earth, instead of the pain and shame which for our sakes Thou didst endure! How thankful do we feel for all thy love! How earnestly do we desire to be able to express duly all thy goodness!

The four first seals opened.

• 1 And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts saying, Come and see.

2 And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

3 And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

4 And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

5 And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, ¶ A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8 And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

¶ The word chenix signifieth a measure containing one wine quart, and the twelfth part of a quart.

† Or, to him.

§ 696. The uses of prophecy.

The great importance attached to the sealed book leaves no doubt that its contents must relate to no less a subject, than the history of the Christian church; and that it refers to the affairs of the nations of the earth, only as they are connected with the concerns of the kingdom of heaven. The nature of the book already explained, as consisting of several sheets, rolled up one within another, leads us to think, that the events signified under each of the seven seals, must follow one another in order of time; though each period may in some measure partake of the character of those which are before and after it. The four living creatures saying severally "Come and see," as the four first seals were opened, shew us the interest in the thing revealed which is felt, by those in heaven, and which ought to be felt also by us on earth. And whereas, though the book was written on both sides, see ch. 5. 1, there is nothing read when each seal is opened, but seven visions are presented, one on the opening of each seal, to St. John, in heaven; this shews us that the book is no real book, that the horses are not real horses, but that these and the other objects, are used as figures to represent the true events. May He who alone was worthy to open the book, now open our hearts to understand its meaning, and enable us to profit by what He has here shewed unto us of the things concerning his church!

Under the first seal is contained the first signal progress of the Gospel, during the times of the apostles, and for some ages afterwards. The "white horse" implies triumph. The bow is elsewhere used in Scripture for part of the armour of our Lord, to signify his victory over sin and sinners. See Ps. 45. 6. The crown is the token of his having conquered, though He is yet to conquer more. For so we find in the latter part of the Book of Revelation, the same figure of one riding on a white horse, one who is "called Faithful and True," and who also, so great was his success, has this name then written, "King of kings, and Lord of lords." Ch. 19. 11—16. Under the second seal is contained the period when this peaceful conquest was succeeded by controversy carried on amongst Christians, with the utmost pitch of animosity. And the rider on the fire coloured horse shews the spirit which prevailed when Arians and their opponents, and many other conflicting sects, used literally to go to war for their respective tenets. The Mahometan desolation of the church seems also to be here alluded to. The third seal comprises the period of gross ignorance which next followed throughout the Christian church. The black horse signifies spiritual darkness. The balances, the high price of the wheat and barley, and the injunction to be careful of the oil and wine shews the scarcity then prevailing; a scarcity not of this world's food, but a famine "of hearing the words of the Lord." Amos 8. 11. The fourth seal relates to the period next following, when the kingdom of death and hell was upheld by the most savage persecution. And the pale horse, with his rider, are symbols of those prodigies of cruelty, who for the maintenance of their spiritual tyranny, delighted to wield the sword of temporal dominion.

How exactly these images have been fulfilled, is known to those who are acquainted with the history of the times. How clearly their fulfilment makes manifest the wisdom and power of God, this is the lesson which all ought hence to learn. For thus this book is to the Christian, what their series of living prophets was to the Jews. Reaching as it does from the birth of Christ to the end of time, there is no period in which Christians may not find some part fulfilling, some already fulfilled, and some yet to come to pass. Let us therefore listen attentively to the word of the Lord. From the fulfilment of the past let us turn with fresh diligence to the contemplation of the future. Let us consider how differently it would have fared with the Jews, if they had known the time of their visitation. Let us be ever on the watch for ours.

The fifth and sixth seals opened.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her ||untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

14 And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 ¹ And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

17 For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand.

|| Or, green figs.

§ 697. The sign of the Son of man seen in heaven.

Under the four first seals we see the character of the Christian church, in four successive periods, first its primitive prosperity, next its agitation by the strife of controversy, next its darkness in a famine of God's word, and next its wasting under the sword of its own oppressive rulers. When the fifth seal is opened, St. John beholds under the altar "the souls of them that were slain for the word of God." These are they who bare witness unto death, at the time of the Reformation, and afterwards, not severing themselves from the church, but purifying themselves in it, and also labouring to purify the church, according to God's word. These are they, who from that time to the present, have endured for the truth as it is in Jesus, the scorn, and malice, and tyrannous hate, of them that kill the body but cannot kill the soul. It is to the Scriptures that they have uniformly appealed. It is for the word of God that they have been slain. It is to their testimony we owe it, under the blessing of the Lord, that there is no longer so sore famine of that word in the land, that the darkness is in some measure removed, and that "the beasts of the earth," ver. 8, the rulers who were the instruments of spiritual oppression, are withheld from persecuting, to the like extent of cruelty, the saints of God. But they that kill the body, cannot kill the soul. See Matt. 10. 28. And these souls appeal to Him that sitteth on the throne; pleading, out of conformity with his will, for the manifestation of his glory, and the punishment of evil doers. Surely judgment, though delayed for a season, will come to pass in the end; when the number of them that suffer for righteousness' sake shall be fulfilled, and the fury of their oppressors shall be returned sevenfold into their own bosoms.

That period of retribution is ushered in by the opening of the sixth seal, which corresponds to a season yet to come, spoken of in like terms by our blessed Lord whilst yet on earth, in one of his last discourses with his disciples. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven." Matt. 24. 29, 30. And in like manner the same event is alluded to in his words addressed to the daughters of Jerusalem, "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us." Luke 23. 30. The great convulsion of nature, here described, can mean no less than some such visible interference of the arm of God in the world of sense, as shall convince men, beyond possibility of doubt, that the Lord is indeed at hand. The scoffer shall then no longer be inclined to say, "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Pet. 3. 4. The earth, instead of its wonted steadiness, shakes as if for fear. The sun, instead of being the source of light, becomes itself "black as sackcloth of hair;" and the moon red as blood, instead of pale as silver. The stars of heaven, that shew so lofty in the firmament, are seen to fall like untimely fruit. The firmament itself, so wide as it is spread, so immoveably as it seems to be fixed, departs "as a scroll when it is rolled together." Whilst the mountains and islands, and all the most solid parts of the earth which we inhabit, are "moved out of their places." Here the scroll and the fig tree, and the blood and the sackcloth, are figures. And the sun and moon and stars and heaven are realities, and shall be really thus changed in their appearance. No wonder that men of all ranks and conditions, here described under seven different heads, shall be smitten with dismay, when these things take place. No wonder that they who here are the most mighty shall then tremble, they who here are most eminent in station and authority, shall, if they have abused their talent, be then most anxious to hide themselves "from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." For "who shall stand when he appeareth?" Mal. 3. 2. Who shall hope, when the great day of his wrath shall come? They only who now look to Him as their Saviour. They only who now obey Him as their Lord.

The sealing of the twelve tribes.

* 1 And after these things, I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God. And he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

4 And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand, of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

§ 698. The limit of God's mercies.

In our Lord's account of his own coming, as related in the Gospel of St. Matthew, He speaks of sending his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, to gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. See Matt. 24. 31. This is the very thing which is described in this chapter, as taking place before the opening of the seventh seal, after that signal manifestation of Christ's coming, which coincides with the opening of the sixth. In this interval we behold "four angels standing on the four corners of the earth," "to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea," to fulfil the destruction of which such fearful warning has now been given. But we see also another angel, "ascending from the east," the side of light and life, "having the seal of the living God," being commissioned to set apart them that are his. And we hear him crying with a loud voice to the four destroying angels, so that they hold back the four winds of the earth, and stay the fury of the breath of God's displeasure, that it should not yet consume the things which He has made. Here then God's judgments are delayed once more, and wait, not for the fulfilling the number of his martyrs, see ch. 6. 11, but for securing the multitude of his saints. Till Lot was out of it, Sodom could not be destroyed. Ere Jerusalem was levelled to the ground, the disciples of Christ must flee unto the mountains. And before the earth and the sea and the trees can be hurt, before things most exposed to the violence of winds can be given up to their fury, before this world can be brought to utter desolation, the servants of God must be sealed in their foreheads, they must be so marked with the name of God as to be known for his, that they may escape the wrath to come. Then there will be once more a manifest distinction between the church and the world. They that hate Christ in their hearts, as many professors now do, will then be avowed infidels, and they that really love his name will be universally known to be his disciples.

The twelve thousand out of each tribe seem to signify, in the first place, that very many of the Jewish people, so highly favoured by Jehovah, will stand in the judgment day on the right hand of the Judge. And it is not unlikely, that their sealing at this period, may have reference to the very signal conversion of the Jews, which other passages of Scripture incline us to look for, nigh unto the time of our Lord's coming. God's purposes concerning them have been gracious from the first. However greatly they transgress, a remnant is always left. However obstinately they resist his will, a way of reconciliation is always open. However widely they are dispersed, He who scattered will again gather them together. However nigh they seem to being lost in the last convulsions of the world, they will be sealed for security in great numbers, even thousands out of all their tribes.

Amongst these tribes, however, though twelve are mentioned, there is no notice of the tribe of Dan, and the tribe of Ephraim is called by the name of Joseph. This may be because these two, especially the tribe of Dan, were among the foremost in the practice of idolatry. And the tribe of Levi, which had no lot in the land of Canaan, is here reckoned for one among the twelve; to signify that a due proportion of its members will have their share in the heavenly inheritance. If then this sealing of the tribes may also signify the children of the faith of Abraham, the spiritual Israelites, the Christian church, let us hence learn to be very watchful and diligent for ourselves, that we give no reason for our own names to be left out. Twelve tribes only are recounted; and in each only twelve thousand sealed. God's mercies must be limited, though not by number, yet by his justice and by his truth, and by his word. He has graciously revealed to us the way of salvation. If we are found in it, we are safe when others perish. If we fall away from it, we perish when the rest are safe!

The innumerable multitude of saints in heaven.

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

11 And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God,

12 Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

16 They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

§ 699. The happiness of them that shall be saved.

The sealing of the twelve times twelve thousand takes place on earth. See ver. 3. The multitude who are here described as worshipping in heaven are probably the same parties seen after their deliverance from the burden of the flesh. And if so, the tribes of Israel must be taken for a symbol of the whole Christian church; and the persons sealed, for all that constitute the fulness of the Gentiles as well as the converted of the Jews. These St. John beholds afterwards, and, God be praised, they were "a great multitude, which no man could number." God be praised, they were "of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues." They "stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes," to signify their righteousness, see ch. 19. 8, "and palms in their hands," to shew that they were conquerors. And they "cried with a loud voice," and ascribed their salvation unto God which sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb. And the angels who have joy in the repentance of sinners, and the elders, and also the four creatures before mentioned, all "fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God. And in their worship they say "Amen," by way of joining with the saints to attribute their salvation to God and to the Lamb. And they ascribe unto Him the sevenfold praise of "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might."

But we may know more about this multitude, which was "arrayed in white robes." For one of the elders told St. John what they had done, and whence they came. They "came out of great tribulation," out of a world full of sin and misery. Probably some of them in particular had been released from it, at the period when God's judgments were just about to burst upon the inhabitants of the earth. And they had "washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," of that very Lamb whom they then were worshipping. These then, it is evident, are believers in Christ. These it is evident put their trust for salvation in his blood. These look upon Him as the Lord their righteousness. See Jer. 23. 6. These think it not impossible with God, that blood should cleanse from sin. These deem that even for sinners to be counted righteous, and made holy, is not too hard for the Lord. "Therefore are they before the throne of God." Not for works of righteousness which they have done themselves, but because it was in the Lamb's blood that they washed their robes. And yet neither is it without pains of theirs, without much tribulation suffered, much work and labour of love performed, that they stand at last before the throne of God, having by faith washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

But oh how light is our utmost burden of affliction, how trifling our utmost toil, when compared with the wages of eternity, with the glory that shall be revealed in us! To have pleasure, and no need for pain to make it sweet; neither to hunger any more, nor to thirst any more, and yet to be filled with all the fulness of God. To have no scorching of the sun, nor of any other heat to light upon us for harm; but to be led in safety by the Lamb Himself, who is also the true Shepherd, see John 10. 11, and who shall feed us in the midst of "living fountains of waters." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Here how many do we shed in infancy, that age which seems most free from care, most full of joy! Here how many do we shed afterwards for the consequences of our own faults and follies, of our forbidden passions indulged, of our unreasonable hopes disappointed! Here how many more have we need to shed for God's majesty affronted, and his honour wronged, both by ourselves, and by our brethren all around! But there God shall turn our mourning into joy. There our joy shall last for ever.

God grant that it may be ours! God grant that we may share with saints and angels the delight of dwelling in his presence, and the glory of telling forth his praise!

The angel with a golden censer.

1 And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

2 And I saw the seven angels which stood before God : and to them were given seven trumpets.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer : and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.

4 And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God, out of the angel's hand.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth : and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.

6 And the seven angels, which had the seven trumpets, prepared themselves to sound.

¶ Or, add it to the prayers.

§ 700. The acceptance of prayer.

When the seventh seal is opened the inmost sheet of the whole book is now loose and unrolled. This therefore refers to events the last in order, of all that are foretold in the sealed book. And the greater part of it is occupied with God's judgments, inflicted on mankind, for their many and grievous transgressions of his will. The severity of these judgments, the awe which they are fitted to awaken in our minds, and the affectionate concern in our behalf, which they raise in them that dwell in heaven, seem to be signified by the solemn silence which took place "about the space of half an hour." Well does it become us also to be silent before God, when we think of his wrath hanging over the world we live in. When we see the seven angels stand before Him, and the seven trumpets given into their hands, and when we know that the sounding of each trumpet shall be followed by tribulation, and anguish, and woe ; well does it become us to pause, and to reflect, to be thoughtful, and serious, and still.

But though, when we are occupied with matters like these, all idle words, all vain conversation, seem peculiarly out of place, there is a language which even then we do well to utter, there are words which even then are better than silence ; they are the words of prayer ; it is the language of devotion. While the seven angels were preparing themselves to sound, behold, "another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer ; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne." This angel was as a servant in attendance on our great High Priest, who officiates in our behalf for ever ; and who supplies, out of the abundance of his own worthiness, that incense which can alone make our imperfect prayers fit to be offered on the altar which is in heaven. "And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." Thus the prayers of the saints are made acceptable in the sight of God the Father, through the mediation of his Son our Lord. And the ministering spirits, who do his pleasure, can scarce have an employment more full of interest to themselves, than to wait on Christ in his office of our Priest, when He is engaged, out of his good will towards us, in forwarding our petitions unto the throne of grace. Most earnestly, we may suppose, many will begin to pray, when the time of the seventh seal shall have arrived. But why then do we not pray most earnestly also now ? We are sure that the things written will come to pass. We have no doubt that the woes will be fulfilled. We agree to it that the saints will be sealed, and that the Son of man will be seen coming in the heaven with power and great glory. And how is it that we are now able to continue cold and careless, in spite of all these stirring motives ? It is want of faith which makes us wanting in devotion. And want of faith will still hinder the prayers of many, even when the Son of man shall come. See Luke 18. 8.

And therefore, in this vision, "the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth." The same live coals, which serve in heaven to burn incense acceptable unto God, are poured out in indignation on this lower world, here to consume the adversaries, here to forebode judgment against pretended friends. There are Christians now which never pray. And there will be such Christians then. And it is against these, which name the name of Christ, but depart not from iniquity, see 2 Tim. 2. 19, and follow not after holiness ; see Heb. 12. 14 ; it is against these that He most plainly bears his testimony, and most loudly denounces woe. Oh that we may now hear with reverence of the voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake ; and so not fear when they shall really come to pass ! Oh that we may now pray with faith and constancy, and offer up our prayers through the mediation of our Lord ; and so not fail to have them granted !

The first four trumpets.

7 The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

8 And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood;

9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

10 And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters:

11 And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

12 And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

13 And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

§ 701. God manifest in his works.

Upon the plan of interpretation here adopted, these trumpets relate to judgments which are yet to come on the inhabitants of the earth; being manifestly enclosed within the seventh seal, which according to the received notion of the shape of the sealed book, could not possibly be opened till the first six were done with. And further it appears probable, that the sun, and moon, and stars, and earth, and sea, and rivers, and other objects here made mention of, are not to be understood as figures, but are used for the things themselves. For "waters," when used figuratively, mean, as we are told afterwards in this book, "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." Ch. 17. 15. Whereas here we read that "many men died of the waters;" which seems therefore to mean not people but water. And again, the "great star" is said to be "burning as it were a lamp;" where the lamp being the figure, the star probably means a real one.

These things being premised, it appears that after the sealing of the saints, that signal interference of God's power in this world of his creating, which begins at the opening of the sixth seal, will go on unto the end of the seventh. The clouds will no longer "drop fatness," Ps. 65. 12, on the thirsty soil, but will burst in showers of "hail and fire," substances like unto great hailstones and live coals, "mingled with blood," perhaps the blood of the many fowls of the air and beasts of the field, who will perish in these deadly storms. And a large portion of all the verdure, whether of grass or trees, will be burnt from off the face of the earth. Another fearful and destructive visitation will be in the form of a burning mountain cast into the sea; whereby its waters will be in great measure turned into blood, the creatures which are therein will die, and the ships also on its surface will be destroyed. Another will be the falling of a great star from heaven, brilliant in light, but poisonous in its influence; and therefore called Wormwood, by way of signifying that it will make bitter the rivers and the springs, even so as to cause the death of those that drink of them. The fourth judgment, and that a very terrible one, to be inflicted on the children of men, is the darkening of the sun, and moon, and stars, so that neither day nor night should have more than a certain portion of their customary light. And these are things of which men will have due warning, by what is described at the opening of the seal next before this seventh. What was then seen to happen suddenly, may as suddenly cease. The judgments, of which notice was then given, may be suspended during the sealing of God's faithful servants. But the things which are here described seem as if they were to become a sort of second nature, to last during the woes that happen in the trumpets following; a season of dismay and gloom, during which the earth and its guilty "inhabitants" wait, like a convicted criminal in his cheerless dungeon, not looking for deliverance, but dreading death.

"But all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings." Exod. 10. 23. Such was their exemption from the plagues of Egypt! Such will be the consolations of God's faithful servants, when this fearful state of things takes place in the midst of the city spiritually called Egypt. See Ch. 11. 9. Of these things we may now form some faint conception, not only by reference to what befel the Egyptians, but by considering the impression made upon our minds by such storms as now we witness, or by earthquakes, and volcanoes, comets, and eclipses, such as are according to the present laws of the material world. If these, though we may be able to account for their appearances, are apt to terrify the hearts of the unfaithful, how much more will these great prodigies in heaven and in earth! Science, which now helps to make the careless at their ease, as it helps also to raise the devotion of the faithful, as it accounts for God's wonders by discovering his laws, will then serve only the more to confound the one in their sins, and to encourage the others in their hope and trust, by making them know that his laws are interfered with by Himself. And men will no longer be able to be ignorant whether they will or not, that all these things were made by the word of the Lord, and that according to his word they must come speedily and utterly to an end! See 2 Pet. 3. 5—7.

The fifth angel sounds.

1 And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

3 And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power.

4 And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.

5 And to them it was given that they should not kill them; but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment, was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.

6 And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name || Apollyon.

12 One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

|| That is to say, A destroyer.

§ 702. The plague of strange animals.

Before the sounding of the fifth trumpet, an angel was heard to fly through the midst of heaven, proclaiming woe to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the three remaining trumpets. This leads us to expect that something yet more terrible is now to be denounced. Accordingly, when the fifth angel sounds, St. John sees a star fall from heaven unto the earth, even Satan, whom our Lord saw fall like lightning from heaven. See Luke 10. 18. "And to him was given the key of the bottomless pit. And he opened the bottomless pit." By which figure we understand that he is allowed to let loose, as from the storehouse of evil, some new form of affliction upon the children of men. This appears first in the shape of noisome smoke. "And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth." A swarm of venomous reptiles, of power like that of scorpions, to last about the same length of time, "five months," and in their shape and properties unlike any that have ever before been heard of, proceed to inflict torment on all, except God's sealed saints. These we may suppose to signify, that God will really then raise up against mankind some new and most excruciating torment, by means of a new animal creation. The four first trumpets relate to sufferings to be inflicted by fearful changes in the world which is inanimate. This fifth is a sore plague by means of living creatures. The sixth, as we shall see presently, relates to woe dispensed by that which is more cruel to mankind, than storm or tempest, serpent or wild beast, even by means of man himself.

That these locusts are a figure, or symbol, is made probable by means of many of the particulars here mentioned. Their having shapes "like unto horses prepared unto battle," their having on their heads "as it were crowns like gold," something like to crowns, made of something like to gold, their having faces "as the faces of men," and "hair as the hair of women," teeth as "of lions," "breastplates as it were breastplates of iron," wings sounding like the horses of war chariots, tails like unto scorpions, and stings in their tails; all these images united seem plainly to point out some such instruments of wrath, as have never yet been seen on earth. And what can be more reasonable, than that He who has used these several things separately, as means of aggravating by their violence, deceitfulness or venom, the misery which is in the world through sin, should unite their qualities as the world draws towards a close, to form one terrific scourge for sinners. And what can be more just, than that a part of the creation, which has suffered so sensibly by man's transgression, and which ever since has been so cruelly used by man, should thus rise up as it were in judgment against its oppressors, and make them long for death in vain?

"The locusts have no king," said Solomon in the book of Proverbs, 30. 27. But these have a king over them, and his name in our tongue is the Destroyer. That is to say, they are under the direction of the fallen angel, whose delight is in our fall and endless destruction. So great is the agony arising from their sting; that in those days men shall seek death, and shall not find it. Self destruction, the last resource of the rebel against his Maker, shall by some marvellous means be made impossible. But what will seem most strange of all, these locusts, who are to alight not on grass and trees but men, will be restrained from hurting those amongst mankind, who have "the seal of God in their foreheads." So broad will be the line of distinction in that day between the world, and Christians indeed! So hardened will the wicked still remain, that even this distinction will not bring them to repentance. See ver. 20. 21. Oh that God, if it should be our lot to be alive when these sad trumpets sound, may have caused his seal to be put upon our foreheads! Oh that He may now make our brethren to repent!

The sixth angel sounds.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God,

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

16 And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

21 Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

¹ Ps. 115. 4. Re. 135. 15.

Well might David decide, when he had to choose between famine, pestilence, and war, "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord; for his mercies are great: and let me not fall into the hand of man." 2 Sam. 24. 14. Of all the sufferings to which we are liable in the flesh, there are none so grievous as those which we inflict upon each other. And of all the horrors which violence, fraud, lust, and cruelty united, can inflict, there are none more terrible than those which follow in the train of war. And since warfare, besides the other sins it has to answer for, has been one chief means of oppressing God's faithful servants, therefore the voice which commands to loose this scourge upon the earth, is heard to issue from the golden altar, under which St. John had seen the souls of those, who "were slain for the word of God." Ch. 6. 9. The four angels who ministered in this judgment, had been prepared for a settled hour, and day, and month, and year, "for to slay the third part of men." And "the number of the army of the horsemen" is also fixed beforehand, to be "two hundred thousand thousand!" So exactly can God order the times and seasons; and constrain, for the execution of his judgments, the unruly wills of sinful men! So fitly will He employ against the enemies of the truth, that very arm of flesh, and those very weapons of worldly warfare, in which they have been used to put their trust, and by which they have delighted to persecute his saints!

But in this armament, besides the ordinary horrors of war, there will be new armour, new horses, new implements of destruction, more powerful than ever yet were seen on earth, both to terrify the senses of the beholders, and also to take away their lives. And in the formation of the horses, and in the array of their riders, so fearful, so strange, so supernatural, it will be manifest that this destroying army is one of the judgments of Almighty God. And yet men will refuse to own this truth, or refuse to act on this conviction. With the whole world thus in array against unbelief, the unbeliever will persist in sin. They that are not killed by these several plagues, will neither repent of their idolatries, of the dishonour done to God by their false religions, nor of their murders, sorceries, fornications, thefts, of their transgression of his will by their wicked practices.

This seems the greatest marvel we have yet heard of. These are the most horrible of all horrors, the most woeful of all woes; man impenitent, sinners obstinate, idols cherished, lusts fulfilled, in the very face of God's avenging angels, when his judgments are made manifest throughout heaven and earth. And that this should be the case with all "which were not killed!" That none of all those men should repent! Truly the world will then be ready for destruction! The vines of the earth will then be ripe for the winepress of the wrath of God! See ch. 14. 19. Somewhat of this obstinacy, much of this impenitence, we now often see with awe. But hitherto there are also many, God be praised, many who repent and amend their lives. And as long as one such may be gained, as long as one more sinner may be saved from hell, one more saint sealed for heaven, we doubt not that God will still graciously put up with the iniquity which so fearfully abounds. Oh that many may make haste whilst there yet is time! Oh that God may shortly accomplish the number of his elect, and hasten his kingdom! Oh that we, with all those who have departed in the true faith of God's holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in his everlasting glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

Another mighty angel with a little book open.

1 And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roar-eth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

5 And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And swore by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer:

7 But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

8 And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, 'Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

¹ Ezek. 2. 8. 3. 3.

The little book, of which we read in this chapter, is in some sort a counterpart of the sealed book, of which all seven seals have now been opened. But this little book appears open from the first. That is to say, it does not describe in regular order, one after the other, the chief events foretold, but it gives several distinct views of detached parts and periods, answering to greater or less portions of the whole seven seals. And this is the method of other prophecies, especially in the book of Daniel; where the four great empires, most nearly connected with God's church, are first described under the symbol of an image, and then under that of four beasts; other parts of the same history being afterwards foreshewn by other visions, much in the manner of these which follow in this book. And this manifold chain of prophecy, we may observe, affords great additional weight of evidence to God's wisdom and power in his word; it being so many times more hard to conceive that any one except God Himself, and He all mighty and all wise, should have described beforehand what would happen in the world, by several separate sets of images, each destitute of all resemblance to the other, and yet all exactly fulfilled by the events.

This second book is seen in the hand of "a mighty angel," whose appearance is so like to what is assigned to our Lord, see ch. 1. 13—15, that we must suppose him to represent his divine majesty; and we might even have taken him for our Lord Himself, but that he is expressly called "another" angel. "He set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth." This shews that the revelation, in which he ministers, concerned mankind in all quarters of the world. The loudness of his crying summons all to listen. The seven thunders uttering their voices, and the commandment to seal up the things which they uttered, teach us, that notwithstanding so much has been revealed, there are some secret things which we are not allowed to know. But if they are sealed, we may conclude that the seals will at length be opened. And we may be assured, for our comfort, that whatsoever God hides from us for the present, He will make known to us in due season to our greater joy. The solemn oath taken by this angel announces, in the most impressive manner, that the mystery which he has to reveal, would be completed at the same time as that of the sealed book, and that this would be at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, after which will be the end of time. Succession of events, such as we now experience, will then for ever cease. All things will be always present. Or rather there will be a state of things which cannot be expressed by present, past, or future. For of eternity we know only that it will not be time.

St. John is ordered to go and take this little book, by the same voice from heaven, which addressed him both before the epistles to the seven churches in Asia, and also before the opening of the sealed book. See ch. 1. 10, and 4. 1. This helps to shew that we have here a new train of prophecies. And further he is told that he must "prophesy again." And his taking the book, and eating it up, his finding it sweet to taste, but bitter to digest, this is after the manner of what is told us of Ezekiel. Ch. 3. And these things shew us, with what anxiety the prophets searched into what the Spirit within them did testify, of the sufferings and glory of Christ; see 1 Pet. 1. 11; even as one of them said, "as for me, Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart." Dan. 7. 28. May we grudge no pain which God's word may cost us, either to understand or to obey! And whether we find it bitter in convincing us of sin, or sweet in telling us of pardon, may we keep the matter in our hearts!

The two witnesses prophesy, and are slain.

1 And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.

2 But the court, which is without the temple, † leave out, and measure it not: for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

3 And || I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

4 These are the ¹ two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

5 And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

6 These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them into blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

7 And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

9 And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth.

† Gr. cast out.

|| Or, I will give unto my two witnesses that they may prophesy.

§ 705. The prosperity of the wicked for a season.

This chapter seems to represent the Christian church in the act of witnessing to Christ, from the beginning of the Gospel, to the end of time. First the apostle is employed to "measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein." But he is to leave out the court which is without the temple. He is to make a distinction between real Christians and nominal. He is to consider the first as living stones in God's temple. And the others, though they may set foot in the holy city, are not to be counted as citizens thereof. For some ages there was but little of such intrusion. Persecution from without rendered it a matter of danger, not of credit, to profess to be a Christian. But after a time the case was altered. The rulers of the earth professed faith in Christ. And henceforth, Gentiles, the worldly minded, as opposed to the spiritual Israel, were not easily to be distinguished from Israelites indeed.

The witnesses now prophesy in sackcloth. Usually when the church has had most worldly prosperity, it has also had most to mourn for in the sight of God. And this state of things lasts "a thousand two hundred and threescore days," which is the same as the "forty and two months;" during which the holy city is subject to the intrusion of the Gentiles. And as it seems clear, from the interpretation of a fulfilled prophecy of Daniel, that each day is the symbol of a year, we must consider that this state of things is appointed to last for at least twelve hundred and sixty years. See Dan. 9. 24. During all this period a community of faithful men is bearing witness to the truth unto an unbelieving world. Or rather they are two communities, for they are two witnesses, and the witnesses are not only "olive trees," to supply oil, the sign of grace and the means of light, they are also "candlesticks," and therefore they are churches. See ch. 1. 20. Now we know that there have long been two chief branches of the church of God, the eastern and the western. And we consider, that notwithstanding their grievous corruptions, they have preserved the two chief ordinances of Christian conviction, the ministry, or testimony of living men, and the word, or testimony of written revelation. And we trust that there have been in both of them, throughout nearly their whole existence, men of God, devoted to do his will, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. These spiritual communities, however grievously depressed, we take for the two witnesses in sackcloth. They wear sackcloth, because instead of the kingdoms of this world becoming the kingdoms of Christ, it had come to pass, as the result of that the alliance, the kingdom of Christ was supplanted by a worldly dominion. They are represented as having power to devour the adversaries, because God has indeed all along taken vengeance on their enemies, visiting those who have corrupted and oppressed his churches, by plague and famine and all manner of disasters.

For a time however He suffered Satan to destroy them, and their bodies to lie as it were dead. True religion seemed for a season to be banished from the earth. They who pleaded for doing away with abuses of the church, were silenced, suppressed, or slain. And they who supposed that gain was godliness, who used religion for the mask of covetousness, pride, and strife, made merry with one another on their supposed success. This was the case, just before the time of our Reformation. Even burial was then refused to the dead bodies of Reformers. And it is also still the case wherever the wicked prosper; they triumph in iniquity. Wherever there is licentiousness, or cruelty, there is Sodom, wherever cruel persecution there is Egypt; where our Lord is crucified afresh, there is Calvary. Never may we provoke God's judgments, by evil entreating those who bear witness to his Son! Never may we close our ears against their testimony! never count them our enemies for telling us the truth! See Gal. 4. 16.

The witnesses revive. The seventh angel sounds.

11 And after three days and an half the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

13 And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain † of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

15 And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his

Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.

16 And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God,

17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

18 And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which || destroy the earth.

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

† Gr. names of men.

|| Or, corrupt.

In applying prophecy to the history of the church, we must never forget how great a difference there is between what seems great in our eyes, and what is so in reality. And especially we must remember that our own church, and nation, and quarter of the globe, are each of them only one amongst many. Hence if we take the Reformation in the western church to be the revival of one witness after manifest death, we must wait for some like revival in the eastern church, ere we can consider this whole account to be fulfilled. And this it appears will happen ere the time of the end. For here the history of the two witnesses is brought down to the same period at which we left off in the sealed book, at the sixth trumpet in the seventh seal. And the connexion of the two histories is shewn by the remark, "The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly." This may be the time when all the saints, alive or dead, shall be caught up to meet Christ in the air. See 1 Thess. 4. 17. For these are the words which will then be heard from heaven, by the witnesses, "Come up hither." Great is the fear which falls upon the worldly minded in the church, when they see the witnesses revive, when the faithful servants of God again appeal to the word and to the testimony. Great is the dismay which at the present hour works secretly in many an unbelieving heart, at the sight of holiness perfected in the fear of the Lord. What will be felt when heaven opens, and the saints go up to glory? What will be felt when the earth trembles, when the dwellings that are on the earth are shaken to the ground, and thousands of their inhabitants perish in the ruins? How will their hearts sink within them! How will they give glory to God, though it be only out of terror, not for love!

And then the seventh angel sounds. The mystery of God is then brought to a close, even that which is the subject of this prophecy. The time of wrath is come for the punishment of iniquity, the time of grace for the rewarding of the saints. The temple of God is opened in heaven. And on the one hand there is seen the ark of his covenant, the pledge and token of his mercy; on the other there are the symbols of visitation for sin, "lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail." And thus the proclamation runs, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Rulers shall no longer oppress and corrupt the church which they profess to protect. Aliens shall no more intrude into the holy city, and there pass for true worshippers of God. But all things that offend being rooted out, the angry being dealt with angrily, and they that destroy the earth being destroyed, God will take unto Himself his great power, Christ will reign on his own throne in righteousness.

Who therefore would not now prepare for judgment, that he may escape the wrath to come? Who would not now seek earnestly to be a member of Christ's kingdom, in order to reign then with Him for ever? Oh let us not be deceived by the world. Let us not be deluded by the prosperity of the wicked. Let us not be corrupted by favour pretended unto the church, on the part of those who are at enmity with our Lord. It is their pleasure to be hindering Christ's kingdom. It is his glory to be overruling them for good. And in the end it will be his triumph, at once to lay low them that oppose themselves, and to exalt them that are conformed, not to the world, but to his will. May this be now our endeavour, to be transformed to the likeness of our Lord! May this be then our exceeding great reward, to be made like Him at his appearing!

The vision of the woman and the dragon.

1 And there appeared a great || wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:

2 And she being with child cried, travailling in birth, and pained to be delivered.

3 And there appeared another † wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

5 And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

§ 707. The sense of safety under God's protection.

This chapter contains a second vision relating to the church, seen by St. John after his eating the open book. He beholds "a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." This is the church as seen in heaven; for it is there, and not on earth that it is clothed with light, and crowned with the brightness of the firmament. But as St. Paul described himself to be travailling in birth until Christ was formed in the Galatians, ch. 4. 19, so here the church is said to be in pain "to be delivered." And in this we must think of the Jewish church as well as of the Christian, or rather we must conceive them both as one. Or it may be that in this vision especial reference is made to the church Jewish, and to that branch of the church Christian in which Jerusalem is situated, and to which most of the Jewish converts and their descendants, have belonged. For the sun and moon and stars can hardly fail to be an allusion to Joseph's dream; wherein, under these figures were represented the twelve patriarchs, and their father and mother. So that the woman has the whole family for her attendants. She is God's church under the Gospel, comprehending God's church under the Law.

In these her pains, which are here mentioned, let us see a token of God's anger manifest against sin, and an admonition of the anxiety we ought to feel for the spiritual birth of children unto God. To mourn with them that mourn, and to help them that are in trouble, is the Christian rule. But it is the practice of the enemy of souls to watch in our distress for occasion to inflict new sufferings, and to go about in our calamity seeking whom he may devour. And this is the other wonder that appeared in heaven; a representation of "that old serpent, called the devil," ver. 9, in the form of "a great red dragon, having seven heads, and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads." These heads and crowns seem to signify, that all the kingdoms of the world, and all the glory of them, are by Satan claimed arrogantly for his own. See Matt. 4. 8, 9. These ten horns represent strength used for mischief. And further it appears probable that here is an allusion to that great empire, which was the last of the four foretold by Daniel; in which there were at the first seven crowned kings, and whose capital was seated on seven hills, whose ten last pagan emperors have been thought by some to be the ten horns here mentioned, whilst others have applied them to the ten kingdoms, into which the empire of Rome was finally divided. Certain it is that the whole force of the Roman masters of the world, was exerted, under Satan's rule, to suppress the progeny of the Christian church. Certain it is that her children, notwithstanding all the power of her enemy, were enabled, through the might of her spouse, their Lord, to set at defiance his attempts at their suppression.

To rule all nations "with a rod of iron," ch. 19. 15, is the same thing that is said elsewhere of Christ Himself. See Ps. 2. 9. Here as formerly in this book, ch. 2. 26, 27, it signifies the success of his saints, against the world, the flesh, and the devil. "And her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne." This shews us wherewith our safety, as against Satan, must consist; namely, in our being cherished in the arms of God, and defended by his fatherly protection. "And the woman fled into the wilderness." For thus it fares with the true church, whether assailed by persecution, or by corruption, from the hatred or from the friendship of the world; she prefers to dwell remote from pomps and vanities; "where she hath a place prepared of God." Happy are they who, under the pressure of temptation, can always resort with confidence to the arms of their Father which is in heaven. In the solitary places they are not alone. To them the wilderness blossoms as a rose. See Isa. 35. 1. However long be their appointed time, however manifold their tribulations, however severe their strife with sin, they can wait with patience for their end, for they are sure that the end is joy. For the present they are where God would have them be. Therefore they feel it good to be here. For the future they hope to be where God is Himself. Oh, how much better is it to be there!

The woman nourished in the wilderness.

7 And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

11 And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony: and they loved not their lives unto the death.

12 Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.

14 And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

15 And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

§ 708. That Satan is always warring against our souls.

The warfare of the church on earth is represented by this war in heaven. For it was in the midst of the vision of the woman in the wilderness, that St. John witnessed the battle between Michael and the dragon. Here then we have a sign or symbol of the vehement anxiety felt on one part by good angels for our welfare, and on the other by evil angels for our destruction. They are represented as fighting together, by way of shewing us the opposition that there always is between good and evil, and the warmth of affection with which we ought to cleave to the one, and to abhor the other. But in heaven there is in reality no such thing as strife. The casting out of Satan and his angels, "into the earth," shews us that this is the actual field of contention, and that it is concerning us that the strife takes place. Woe is unto us by reason of our adversary! Ere the fall of man he had been shut out from the abodes of the Most High. At our redemption he was cast down still lower; for the children of men were then plucked out of his grasp. And yet he has a short time allowed him to work evil on the earth, for our greater good, and for God's greater glory in his defeat. Therefore let us not be terrified by his wrath. Let us not be disheartened by the apprehension of his power. Let us listen rather to the loud voice which proclaims in heaven, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ." It is the voice of the redeemed. They are the saints, that sleep in Jesus, rejoicing in their beds. See Ps. 149. 5. They are glorying in the deliverance of their brethren, in the silencing of their accuser, in the victory that has been won by the blood of the Lamb, in the testimony which his servants have borne by their word, and which his martyrs have sealed by their death.

But whilst the note of triumph and of joy already sounds in heaven, the dragon is still persecuting the church on earth. And the vision reverts to the woman flying into the wilderness, there to be nourished, and protected "from the face of the serpent," "a time, and times, and half a time," or a year, and two years, and half a year; which is the same as "a thousand two hundred and threescore days." Ver. 6. And these days are years. And this period is of the same length as that mentioned in the vision of the two witnesses. Ch. 11. 3. And if this woman answer to one of the two witnesses, this is probably the time during which the eastern division of the church is to exist in a state of great depression, but still preserved, still nourished, and hereafter greatly to revive. The water cast out of the serpent's mouth, may be the flood of corruption, with which the worldly rulers of that part of the empire, have tried to seduce those, whom their previous persecution failed to destroy. The earth swallowing up the flood, may be the multitude who shew favour to the church, and yet fall victims to the poison of the dragon, whilst the true children of Sion, whether favoured or oppressed, are still faithful to their King. Let us remember that the dragon is wroth with the woman, even unto the end. Let us consider him to be now at war with ourselves. With all, in all churches, who "keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ," he never can nor will be at peace. Never therefore let us be at peace with him! Never let us listen to his deceitful words, saying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." Jer. 6. 14. Never let us cease to watch against his wiles! Never let us fail to resist his force! Never let us trust to our own strength for victory! Never let us doubt that through Christ we shall overcome!

The vision of the beast with seven heads and ten horns.

1 And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the || name of blasphemy.

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.

3 And I saw one of his heads as it were † wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast.

4 And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?

great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him * to continue forty and two months.

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

7 And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

§ 709. The difference between real and apparent prosperity in the church.

In this beast which St. John saw "rise up out of the sea," we have another representation of the Roman empire, that chiefest of all the kingdoms of the earth, which has also been most intimately connected with the history of the Christian church. The horns here wear the crowns, to shew that they mean kingdoms. And upon the heads "is the name of blasphemy," signifying the many offensive decrees which would issue from the city on seven hills, against the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The leopard, the lion, and the bear, unto all which this beast is likened, are used in Daniel for symbols of the three empires preceding that of Rome, in which the power of all three was centered. See Dan. 7. 7. And accordingly the dragon is said to have given to this last "his power, and his seat, and great authority." The wounding of one of his heads as it were to death, has been thought, with great probability, to signify the conversion of the Roman emperor to the profession of Christianity, an event which seemed to give preeminence to the Gospel in the world. And then the healing of the wound consisted in that corrupting influence which Satan contrived to exercise over the church, through the means of its being connected with the empire. So that henceforth mankind so much the more wondered after the beast, so much the more worshipped the dragon; Satan being thus "transformed into an angel of light." 2 Cor. 11. 14.

During "forty and two months," or twelve hundred and sixty days, or years, up to the Reformation, it was not uncommon for the emperors and their courts to dictate false doctrine to the church. And men, whose lives in private were the very reverse of what Christ requires, took upon them to lord it over his heritage, to settle controversies by the authority of the state; often upholding falsehood against the truth, in matters closely connected with the honour of our Lord. Thus was the mouth of the Roman empire, though Christian in profession, guilty of no less than blasphemy against God. Whilst its armies at the same time were employed to support its edicts, making war with the saints, and overcoming them. Yea, men thought that they were doing service acceptable unto God, when they were shedding the blood of his martyrs. And all the "kindreds, and tongues, and nations," united, and will hereafter perhaps again unite, as with one voice, to magnify and glorify the dominion of man, to the disparagement of the sovereignty of Christ.

See herein how different is real prosperity in the church, from that which men are apt to esteem prosperous! The whole civilized world united in one empire, the rulers of that empire professing themselves Christians, undertaking to support Christianity, maintaining it, according to their view of it, by all the influence of all their force, and wealth, and station, and authority; this we might at first sight take for Christ triumphant, this we might suppose to be the establishment of his kingdom on the earth. But no, "if any man have an ear, let him hear;" let us consider this matter with attention. If these very rulers are evil livers, if their whole court is given up to luxury, if their creed is false, if their practice is licentious, if the pomps and vanities of the world are upheld in universal estimation, as of more worth than the joys of heaven; this is not the kingdom of Christ, this is the worshipping of the dragon under the authority of the beast. And they which support this system by imprisonment and the sword, will be brought to endless captivity and death. It is amongst those whose conversation is in heaven that Christ really reigns on earth. His subjects are they whom the others set at nought, upon whose patience and faith the others trespass, and whose names are "written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Let us hope that we are enrolled in that heavenly company. Let us watch, lest through our negligence our names be blotted out. See ch. 3. 5. And whilst we thankfully use, in furtherance of the Gospel, the help of such as are both great and good; let us steadily resist the corrupting influence, of such as speak for Christ, but work for Satan.

The vision of the beast with two horns.

11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

13 And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men,

14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

15 And he had power to give † life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

16 And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, † to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads:

17 And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

18 Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

† Gr. breath.

† Gr. to give.

§ 710. The abominations of the popedom.

In the former beast we have seen a symbol of the power of the Roman empire, and of the kingdoms into which it was divided, employed in persecuting and corrupting the members of the church of Christ. This other beast, with two horns, represents the tyranny of that other Roman power, part temporal part spiritual, which arose, and practised, and prospered, under the name of Pope. His horns are like those of a lamb, to signify the affectation of humility, which has ever accompanied the most arrogant of his actions. His speech "as of a dragon," shews his craftiness and deceitfulness. "He exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him." For to no less than this do the pretensions of the Pope extend, the universal sovereignty of all the nations of the earth. And he employs his power in upholding the same pomps and vanities, the same preference of earth to heaven; thus making men "to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed."

Another character of the Popish usurpation is the false pretence to working miracles; "which he had power to do in the sight of the beast," in which these deceivers were able to impose upon "them that dwell on the earth," and on the strength of which they upheld their plan of image worship, here called making "an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live." For the ancient gods of the Roman empire were idols. And it was the policy of the Romish church to adopt images, not only as helps to devotion, but as links to connect the old religion with the new, baits to induce the heathen to become Christians. Thus they have given life unto the image of the beast, which had else under the Gospel been dead. They have given authority to a system of idolatry. And they have caused it to come to pass, that whoever would not worship images should be put to death. And they have set on all "the mark of the beast;" they require all to profess conformity to every one of their false doctrines, under pain of being forbidden to buy or sell, to deal or to be dealt with, to help or to be helped. And in order to make it yet further manifest that this is the corrupt tyranny of the Latin church, we have the number of the beast set down, "Six hundred threescore and six." And this number, in the Greek language, is properly expressed by the letters which form the word Latynos, Latin.

Nor need we marvel that the ecclesiastical tyranny of Rome is pointed out to our abhorrence, by so many characters so minutely described. The whole history of mankind presents no instance worthy of comparison, for the abominations which have been practised, nay boastfully professed, under the colour of the Gospel. No parallel can be found for the arrogance, the covetousness, the cruelty, the impurity, the wilful suppression of truth, the obstinate resistance to enquiry and reform, and above all, the outrageous blasphemy, which are recorded of these pretended successors of St. Peter, and self styled viceregents of Christ. How refreshing it is in the midst of such abundance of iniquity, to hear that there were some who would not receive the mark of the beast! How glad we are to know that there were many witnesses to the truth, during the long dominion of falsehood; many who rather than keep sinful silence, not only submitted cheerfully to be shut out from all the comforts of life, but also spared not to encounter the most excruciating death. Let us hope that many more than we can possibly know of, have had the heart thus to love their Lord. Let us trust that of the numbers who still cleave to this false system, there are many whose faith and hope and charity survive its withering influence. Let us be thankful that we have ourselves been exempted from its power. Let us watch that we never secretly partake of its spirit, nor uncharitably revile its misguided friends.

Blessed be thy name, O Lord, that our church has shaken off the usurpations of the Pope, and held fast the faith once delivered to the saints! Oh grant that we may walk worthy of the truth which we profess, and of the liberty which through thy mercy we enjoy!

The vision of a Lamb standing on the mount Sion.

1 And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps:

3 And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

4 These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These † were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb.

5 And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

6 And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

7 Saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

8 And there followed another angel, saying, ² Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11 And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

§ 711. God's judgments against the worshippers of the beast.

We regard the three preceding chapters as containing three distinct views of the Christian church, its testimony, its sufferings, and its corruption, brought down towards the period when its warfare is accomplished. The present chapter represents it as seen after the opening of the sixth seal, and shews to us the same twelve times twelve thousand saints, standing with the Lamb on the mount Sion, "having his Father's name written in their foreheads." How decided is their Christian character, that it may be thus known and read of all men! How joyful is that voice from heaven, how sweet those harps, how full of melody that song which no man but these-scaled saints could learn to sing! These are guiltless of that spiritual adultery; which consists in forsaking Christ for mammon, in worshipping the beast instead of God. These are such as obey in all things the commandment of their Saviour, "Follow me." John 1. 43. A kind of firstfruits they are of God's creatures, see James 1. 18; "firstfruits unto God, and to the Lamb." Like Nathanael, they are Israelites indeed, in whom is found no guile. See John 1. 47. Like Zacharias and Elizabeth, they walk in all the commandments of God blameless. See Luke 1. 5, 6. How cheering it is to know that such as these there are, and have been, and will be unto the end! How encouraging in our conflict with the dragon, to be assured that there are so many who so entirely overcome!

But besides the scaled thousands of the children of Israel, themselves perhaps also symbols of the Gentile Christians, we read in the same passage of a palm bearing multitude, "of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues." Ch. 7. 9. And accordingly we here see an angel "fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." And the purport of his preaching is this, that they must fear God, and give Him glory, because of his approaching judgment; "and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Which four objects are the very same which are severally smitten, at the sounding of the four first trumpets; to which period, following next after the sealing of the saints, these verses most probably correspond. Another angel then proclaims the fall of Babylon, which is another name for Rome; the Babylonish empire being the head of the image in Daniel, of which the Roman formed the feet and toes. See Dan. 2. 41. And thereupon a third angel gives fearful warning of the sentence awaiting those, who shall thenceforth worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark; a sentence so terrible, that we tremble to think it possible that our brethren should in any case be exposed to it.

How deeply then does it concern every one of us, to know the kingdom of the beast from the kingdom of Christ! How much need have we to bear constantly in mind that the everlasting Gospel enjoins us to fear God, or that we must else tremble at his judgments! With what jealousy must we watch for his honour, that we give to no one else the worship due to Him! With what agony must we apprehend his displeasure, for ourselves if we are not sure that we are faithful, and for our brethren if we have reason to fear that they receive the mark of the beast! Oh that God may in his mercy make effectual to the amendment of many these fearful words of warning! Oh that the Lamb of God; which taketh away the sins of the world, may win many by the revelation of his love!

The vision of the harvest, and the winepress.

12 Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord ^{||}from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.

14 And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, [†]Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe.

^{||} Or, from henceforth saith the Spirit, Yea.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God.

20 And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

[†] Joel 3. 13.

[†] Or, dried.

§ 712. The joy of the faithful, the misery of the wicked.

The fruit of "the patience of the saints," of them "that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus," was manifested in their glorious appearance on mount Sion with the Lamb, as contrasted with the agony of the worshippers of the beast. It is here further declared by a voice from heaven, the very same probably of which mention has before been made, that "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth," from the time when this was written. At the moment of their departure their gain is great. They "rest from their labours." This alone is no small advantage, considering how many and how oppressive are the cares, the trials, the fears, the doubts, and difficulties of this present life. And further, "their works do follow them." Justified as they are by the blood of Jesus, solely through faith in Him, they must notwithstanding be judged by their works. And it is their gain and glory that their works have been according to God's will. God grant that we may die in the Lord; testifying to the truth as it is in Jesus, whether we are suffering for it, or not! God grant that the works, which then must follow us, may be such as shall not make us to be ashamed, when we stand before our Redeemer's throne!

That this judgment is nigh at hand, we are all aware. That it is brought nearer by each instance of holiness in the saints, and by every case of iniquity in the wicked, may be inferred from the two visions of the harvest and the winepress. For in both cases we see that the growth having once begun, nothing can hinder the ripening from taking place. Whether it be the wheat which is to be gathered up for Christ's garner, or the grapes which are to be trodden out in the winepress of his wrath, the sickle is sure to be thrust in at last. The harvest of the earth is the gathering in of the wheat. And as "the tares are the children of the wicked one," see Matt. 13. 38, so the wheat must be the children of God. And accordingly He that gathers in the harvest is like unto the Son of man, seated on a white cloud, having on his head a golden crown. For He it is who has purchased and redeemed us. And who so fit as He to gather us safe in the last day under his care? May the valleys in that day stand so thick with corn, as to laugh and sing for joy! See Ps. 65. 14. May the harvest of the earth be abundant, to the glory of the heavenly Husbandman!

But at that time there must be fulfilled this other vision of the winepress. And both visions relate to one and the same period, one which seems to correspond to the three last trumpets sounding. And as the first is the gathering in the fulness of the saints, of whom the firstfruits have before been described; ver. 4; so the other is the cutting down the multitude of the wicked, who after the sore judgments already threatened, yet repent not of their evil works. See ch. 9. 21. One of the angels in this vision "came out from the altar" of "the temple which is in heaven." And his cry may be considered as pronouncing the sentence, which was put off for a time at the opening of the fifth seal. See ch. 6. 9. He "had power over fire;" it being the end of such as are here spoken of to be burned. But chiefly is their sentence of wrath described, by the casting clusters of the vine into a winepress. In countries which yield grapes and wine, this image would most forcibly express the sharp vengeance which is to overtake the wicked, and the irresistible force by which they will then be destroyed. While the blood which flows over so great a space, and to so great a depth, shews how large are the numbers to be slain; by the horsemen who will then be let loose. Thus the wicked miserably perish, whilst the righteous enjoy rest and glory everlasting.

God grant that when Christ treads the winepress of his wrath, we may be safe in the garner of his love! God grant that the sharp sickle may reap us unto glory, instead of cutting us off unto perdition!

The seven angels with vials. The song of the redeemed.

1 And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

2 And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.

3 And they sing¹ the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; ²just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.

4³ Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

6 And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

7 And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

¹ Exod. 15. 1.² Psalm 145. 17.³ Jer. 10. 7.§ 713. Assurance of mercy our support under the revelations of judgment.

At the opening of the seventh seal seven trumpets are sounded by seven angels; each foreboding some signal judgment from God upon the children of men. Ch. 8. The visions seen by St. John, after eating the little book, have brought us down to the same period in the events of time. And accordingly seven angels are now to pour out "seven golden vials," open cups, or bowls, "full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever." And in these vials we shall find an exact correspondence with the trumpets, one by one, in order; such as proves that under the different symbols the very same judgments are foreshewn, only with fresh particulars pointed out to our attention, for the more full description of the events. Herein then we may be prepared to meet with the most terrible revelation of the most severe sufferings, which can be inflicted on the body and soul of man. Herein we shall see accomplished the words spoken by Moses, so long ago to the church in the wilderness, "And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me; then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury, and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins." Lev. 26. 27, 28.

But how graciously throughout all this revelation does God temper the threatenings of his wrath with the assurances of his mercy! How seasonably for our comfort, and support, is there first shewn to St. John, once more, ere the vials are poured out, the vision of the saints rejoicing in the glory of the Lord! Let us by faith behold them standing on that bright pavement, of which "glass mingled with fire" gives some faint conception. Let us listen to the melody of their harps, "the harps of God." Let us try whilst yet on earth to join heartily in the song they sing, and to feel, as we give utterance to their words, how great and marvellous are God's works, how just and true the ways of Christ, how greatly the Lord ought to be had in reverence, and his name how in all things to be glorified, how only He is holy, how surely all nations shall at length be forced by his manifest judgments, though they will not by his covenanted mercies, to come and worship before Him.

These thoughts of the church triumphant, its songs of reverence and praise, are most fitting to sustain our spirits, when under the sense of our own aggravated sins, we tremble at the revelation of the righteous judgments of God. When the angels are coming out of the temple, in clothing of the Jewish priests, as the ministers of God; when the vials full of wrath are put into their hands; when the temple is so "filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power," that no man was able to enter into it, signifying that during the pouring out of the vials few if any should be brought to repentance; let us still keep our eyes fixed upon "them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name;" and let us feel assured that up to this hour opportunity is given unto us by God, to be reckoned as belonging to their company. Behold now is the day of salvation! Behold now the temple is open, and we have access unto God through Christ! Now let us begin to serve Him faithfully; and behold we need never cease to be his saints! Now let us begin to sing his praise devoutly. And behold we need not be silenced any more to all eternity! The vials of God's wrath no longer fill our hearts with terror, when we feel persuaded that we are ourselves the vessels of his mercy. Instead of dismay at the thought of nature overruled, we acknowledge that God's working is great and marvellous, in destroying as well as in creating. And instead of the agony of alarm in behalf of them that suffer, or the disposition to repine at their sufferings, we are able in all to give God the glory; we desire in all to say devoutly to our Lord, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."

The five first vials poured out on the kingdom of the beast.

1 And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

2 And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

3 And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.

6 For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were ||scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

11 And blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

|| Or, burned.

§ 714. The impenitence of the sufferers. The rejoicing of the saints.

The correspondence between the vials and the trumpets, and the identity of the plagues signified severally by each, will appear from considering that under either symbol the first fell upon the earth, the second on the sea, the third on the fountains and rivers of waters, the fourth upon the sun, and the fifth consisted in tormenting pain. And in like manner we shall see presently that the sixth vial and the sixth trumpet both make mention of the river Euphrates, and that the seventh of each refers to the end of all things. See ch. 8. 9. and 11. Here then let us again reflect, how surely He who created every thing, designs to use the great and glorious objects all around, for instruments of wrath, against those who will not now turn them to his glory, and to the praise of their Saviour's name. The earth that now yields its wholesome fruits, for the nourishment of our health and strength, shall then be made productive of a noisome and grievous sore. The sea, now so fresh, so clear, so glorious to behold, shall become as the blood of one dead, to the destruction of all that live therein. The rivers and fountains of waters, those springs of universal use for food and cleanliness, these also shall become blood. The sun, whose light and warmth are now so needful for our help and comfort, shall then scorch with deadly fire.* And from the darkness, or in other words from the smoke, see ch. 9. 2, 3, shall arise that which fills with pains and sores, and makes men gnaw their tongues for pain.

In all which it is to be observed, that they only are to suffer, who have "the mark of the beast," and worship his image. They who have the blood to drink are they who shed the blood of saints and prophets. These are the men whom the sun will scorch with heat. And it is in the kingdom of the beast that "they gnawed their tongues for pain;" that kingdom then probably prevailing more largely than ever in the world. And further observe these judgments bring none of them to repentance; or at least it is not mentioned after any one of the vials. Whilst it is recorded after the fourth that the men "blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory." And again after the fifth it is set down, that they "blasphemed the God of heaven, because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds." This is the most awful thought of all. This cuts off all that hope of advantage to the sufferers, which best helps to reconcile us to the sight of suffering. Surely they will repent, and amend! Surely it will turn to their profit, and help them forward in the right way that leads unto everlasting life! But no; where these bowls of wrath are emptied, there is not a heart that can be softened by the outpouring of affliction. The afflicted only blaspheme the more. Never may we thus kick against the pricks! See Acts 9. 5. Never may we be thus given over to a reprobate mind! See Rom. 1. 28.

And here also let us once more observe, that in these fearful judgments of God, his obedient servants not merely acquiesce and minister, but also give glory to his name. The angel of the waters is heard to express aloud his sense of the fitness of that plague, which he was made the means of inflicting. And when he considered how the worshippers of the beast had "shed the blood of saints and prophets, he proclaims how worthy they are of having blood to drink, and how righteous the Lord is who thus had judged. This is a frame of mind most difficult to attain; but one which makes us most like unto God's best of servants, nay which makes us most like unto Himself. He can at once be just and merciful. He can at once punish and yet love. And so might we approach most nigh unto his character, if on contemplating these visitations of his wrath, we were able without the least of pride in ourselves, or of unconcern towards our perishing fellow-creatures, to say, "Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus."

The sixth and seventh vials are poured out.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

14 For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

15 ¹ Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

16 And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done.

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

19 And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance ² before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.

20 And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

² Jer. 25. 15.

§ 715. They that suffer, still will not repent.

The sixth vial relates to a plague of warfare. And it evidently refers to some power to be raised up in the eastern parts of the world, which shall come from thence for the desolation of the kingdom of the beast. Now this kingdom we should remember extends throughout the whole of that which we call the civilized world. The Roman empire, and the kingdoms into which it has been divided, have continued for many ages to be foremost in arts and sciences, and in skill and power, and above all, in the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ. It is the power of this empire, and of these kingdoms, that Satan has so long and so successfully employed, in corrupting or oppressing the true church of Christ. And against all those who are parties to such oppression or corruption, especially when their lukewarm profession of the faith has been turned by the preceding plagues into daring blasphemy, it is against these that the kings from the east will come up, to chastise them with all the horrors of war.

In that day their own kings shall be deluded by some specious but false encouragement. And not their kings only, but those "of the whole world;" as if the powers of all nations, in all the quarters of the globe, should be then leagued against the Lord and against his anointed. It was by a lying spirit in the mouth of his prophets, that Ahab was led on to his destruction. See 1 Kings 22. 23. It will be by pretended miracles, set up in opposition to such as then really will be wrought by God, pretended by "the dragon," and "the beast," and "the false prophet," that other beast which made an image to the first, see ch. 11. 13—15, it will be by these means that the enemies of God will be gathered together for their final defeat, at the place here signified by the name of Armageddon. How much need then have God's faithful servants to watch always, trying the spirits whether they be of God; lest if they sleep sinfully, their garments be taken from them, which used to be the punishment of sentinels found sleeping at their post, and the shame of their nakedness be exposed! See ch. 3. 18.

The sounding of the seventh trumpet is followed by "great voices in heaven," these voices celebrating the glorious reign of Christ, the judgment of the wicked, and the reward of the saints. "And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and great hail." Ch. 11. 15. 19. Here we are further told how "the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air," which is supposed to allude to what is elsewhere said of Satan, that he is "the prince of the power of the air." Eph. 2. 2. And also there was such an earthquake, so mighty, and so great, "as was not since men were upon the earth." The great city, the great Babylon, the symbol of great Rome, "was divided into three parts." And the other "cities of the nations fell." And if the great city did not at once fall utterly, this was only because it was devoted by God to more signal punishment, "the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath." The islands and the mountains disappeared. A great hail, so great as to be manifestly a miracle, fell upon men out of heaven. And, oh most horrible of all, "men blasphemed God because of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great." And this at the end of all the seven plagues! Well might that great voice say, "It is done!" Henceforth men shall be no more thus chastened. For even they which heard that voice would not repent. And have not we been told "the time is short?" 1 Cor. 7. 29. Have we not heard of our Lord, saying, "It is finished?" John 19. 30. What can move us to repentance, if we are deaf to Christ speaking from the cross? What can awaken us to a sense of eternity, if we still trifle away each moment as it comes, when we know not what an hour will bring forth? See Prov. 27. 1.

The woman sitting on the scarlet coloured beast.

1 And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters:

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

3 So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

4 And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication:

5 And upon her forehead was a name written,

|| Gr. gilded.

MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

7 And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

† Or, fornications.

§ 716. The infatuation of the Romish church.

This conference with the angel, and the vision of "the judgment of the great whore," which extends through the two following chapters, are designed to explain and to enlarge the things set forth in some of the preceding visions. It is in the wilderness that St. John sees this wicked woman; as if to signify that she professes to be a church, and would fain be taken for the true church, which was before seen as a woman in the wilderness. See ch. 12. "How is the faithful city become an harlot!" Isa. 1. 21. How does the church that was once so pure at Rome corrupt all the nations of Christendom, and make drunk with the wine of her fornication the inhabitants of the earth! For that this woman is the church of Rome in its state of most gross corruption, is evident from what is here said of the seven-headed beast that carries her, from the character ascribed to her, and from its being added afterwards, "the seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth," and, "the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Ver. 9. 18.

The scarlet coloured beast is the same which was seen before, "having seven heads and ten horns," ch. 13. 1, now "full of names of blasphemy," and deep dyed in the colour of the "great red dragon." Ch. 12. 3. It is the whole power and authority of civil government, throughout the regions which used to form the Roman empire, exercised in subservience to an usurping church, instead of labouring to promote the real kingdom of Christ. The woman is the church in its apostacy; far gone from its first love, decked out with the pomps and vanities of the world, holding forth false doctrines and indulgence for evil deeds, as a cup of intoxication for her paramours. On her forehead is written a mystical name, "Babylon the great," signifying Rome; "the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," signifying the parentage of all manner of iniquity. And she who intoxicates others is also drunken herself. She is drunken with "the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." So abundantly have they been slain by her orders! So gross is the infatuation into which she has fallen, by resorting to bloodshed for the suppression of the truth!

This was a sight at which St. John "wondered with great admiration" or astonishment. And the angel proceeds to offer some further explanations. But ere we study his account, let us pause to observe how much there really is to wonder at, how much to fill us with awe, and horror, and indignation, for the affronted majesty of our Lord, in the pretensions and practices of the apostate church of Rome. A bishop claims the right to dispose of kingdoms; and seats himself on the altar of God. A whole order of bishops, priests, and deacons, declare that they can turn bread into the very substance of God, and constrain men to bow the knee to this their creature. They uphold image worship. They profess to forgive sins. They preach at once the merit of good works, and indulgences for sin. They use an unknown tongue for public prayer, forbid to marry, and command to abstain from meats. And they rivet these and other like chains of darkness, on the consciences of mankind, by withholding the word of God from the people. Add to this, they support their usurpation by the imprisonment, torture, and death, of all that dare to question their supposed infallibility. Instead of persuading, they compel. Instead of appealing to reason and affection, the method sanctioned by the Spirit of God, they apply the dungeon, the rack, or the fire. And shall not we also wonder with St. John, that such a monster has been permitted to have power in the earth, under the semblance of the church of Christ?

The angel explains the symbols.

9 And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

14 These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: ' for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

15 And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

18 And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

¹ 1 Tim. 6. 15. ch. 19. 16.

This explanation of the preceding symbols, still leaves much to exercise "the mind that hath wisdom;" and we may still say of what is written in this book, "none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." Dan. 12. 10. The wicked shall not understand, though they have worldly wisdom. And the good, in order to understand, must be also wise; they must be diligent in studying the Revelation, and the history by which it is fulfilled. May we have help from God to understand aright the meaning of his prophecies, and to practise the great lessons they contain! Convinced of his wisdom, justice, mercy, and truth, seeing in the events of history the proofs of his providence, and being assured by what He has done already that He will fulfil all his promise, may we rejoice in tribulation, wait with patience, hope with confidence, and work with love!

The seven heads of the beast are "seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth." And the woman "is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." These heads then are the seven hills on which the city of Rome is founded. And as mountains imply height and strength, and seven is a symbol of completeness, they may probably mean further, the universal empire to which Rome attained. "And there are seven kings," of which also it is to be understood that the seven heads are a sign. Now kings seem to stand in Daniel for governments. See Dan. 7. 17. 24. And these seven may therefore be seven forms of government, successively prevailing in Rome; five of which had fallen in the time of St. John, one was flourishing, namely, the imperial, and one was yet to come. This one to come, the seventh, was to "continue a short space." And afterwards would arise the beast which "was, and is not," ver. 8, being the eighth head or government, springing from the seven, and going into perdition. The imperial worldly government, though seemingly destroyed by the wounding of its head, see ch. 13. 3, yet lasted for many centuries. It was superseded by an usurpation of short continuance. And hereafter will arise a new empire having all the hateful characters of the beast; when at length the reign of Satan in the kingdoms of the earth will be overthrown, and they will become the kingdoms of Christ. The ten horns, ten kings to arise after the time of St. John, receiving power for "one hour," or the same time with the beast, and having "one" or the same mind with one another, are the kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided; which in times past have all united, and will again, to make war with the Lamb by persecuting his saints. The waters are the multitude of people, subject to the influence of the corrupt Romish church. And the time shall come when the ten kingdoms, instead of abetting the lewd woman in her iniquities, shall unite in bringing to pass God's will, by stripping her of her treasures, and depriving her of her followers. This they will do by giving their kingdoms to the beast. So that it will be the wrath of man, the cruel policy of worldly statesmen, overruled by God's power to fulfil his will.

These latter events have not yet come to pass. But when we consider to what a degree the Romish system has debased the Gospel, and to what an extent the corrupting influence of the state, in the patronage of the church, has produced throughout all Christendom the habit of profession without practice, of pretending to believe without believing, we can see how short a step there would be for very many of mankind, from secret unbelief to professed infidelity. And we can hence easily imagine a revolution in society, which will turn the hollow friends of the Lamb into his avowed enemies, and the deceitful patrons of the church into its bitter persecutors. If such open infidelity should ever prevail in the kingdoms of the earth, it would soon thrust home its persecuting horns into the defenceless superstition of Rome, from which it derived its own growth and strength. The beast will cast off the woman from her seat and trample her under foot. But in vain will he try his strength against the Lamb. "He is Lord of lords, and King of kings." He, and they that are with Him, they that are "called, and chosen, and faithful," shall conquer, and triumph, and reign for ever.

The fall of Babylon proclaimed.

1 And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, 'Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

5 For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double.

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

§ 718. God's people invited to come out from the corruption of Rome.

This chapter, as well as the one before and that which follows, contains a review and exposition of things previously foreshewn, especially of what is to happen during the pouring out of the seven vials or plagues yet to be fulfilled. Here in particular we have an awful warning of the fall of Babylon. "Another angel" comes down from heaven, "having great power;" and having also so great glory or brightness, that the earth is lighted up by it. He cries "mightily with a strong voice," "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen." His account of its becoming the habitation of devils, foul spirits, unclean and hateful birds, refers to the common notions of a large city in ruins, such as the real Babylon long has been, and such as Rome, which it here signifies, is to be hereafter. And the reason is because she has been the means of corrupting the nations of the earth, seducing them from the true faith of Christ, to embrace her impure and debased form of Christianity; and also that she has revelled in the profits of this her godless trade, so as to enrich the merchants of the earth "through the abundance of her delicacies." How different is this view of the decline and fall of an empire, a city, or a church, from that which prevails among some who call themselves philosophers! How well may we apply here the rule which has been laid down by Solomon, "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people!" Prov. 14. 34.

But before that great fall takes place, Christ's people are exhorted to escape. From the beginning of her abominable practices, up to the hour when "her sins have reached unto heaven," these words are addressed to every one that has ears to hear, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." It is a relief to hear that even in that devoted city there are some of God's people to come out. And instead of reviling them that still stay in, it would be well to examine frequently our own faith and practice; lest they partake of that corruption, which having flowed for ages from this one centre, throughout the greater part of the Christian community, is not to be shut out from our hearts, without great difficulty, and constant watchfulness. This it is which gives to Rome and her abominations so prominent a place in this book, almost to the exclusion of that other great apostasy which has taken place in the eastern church. Her influence has been far more extensive for evil, as it might have been for good. Her sorceries have bewitched the nations of most weight in the old world, and had once almost engrossed the whole continent of that which to us was new. And above all, by the wine of her fornications she still tries, and in part prevails, to poison those most healthy and fruitful churches of God, which by a salutary self reform, and by adherence to Christ's word and ordained ministry, have come most nigh unto the primitive pattern.

In the judgments to be inflicted on this false church at the end, the true people of God are here exhorted to take part. This will be no more than becomes their character, when they share with Christ his kingdom, ruling the nations with a rod of iron. See ch. 2. 27. Then will they reward unto his enemies double for all their evil deeds; and join to give them torment and sorrow, in proportion to their pride, and luxury, and presumption. Then will this pretended queen find herself indeed a widow, bereft of all help of man, and overtaken by Him to whom "vengeance belongeth." Heb. 10. 30. If it be true that we are to take part in the execution of that sentence, let us beware lest in our hearts we now question its justice. It is no charity to speak peace to the wicked. It is no goodness to give countenance to sin. It is not liberality to man, but rebellion against God, to doubt that all his dealings, whether of mercy or of wrath, are wise, and righteous, and good.

O God, who didst hearken to the prayer of Abraham, and promised to spare the city "for ten's sake," Gen. 18. 32, now hear us whilst we plead for the pardon of our brethren; and also grant, that when the hour of thy judgment shall arrive, we may neither murmur nor repine, but like Abraham, may return unto our place!

The lamentation over Babylon.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning.

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

11 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more:

12 The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all || thyne wood; and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner yessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble,

13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and † slaves, and souls of men.

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

15 The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing,

16 And saying, Alas, alas that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

17 For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off,

18 And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!

19 And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea, by reason of her castliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

† Or, bodies.

§ 719. The end of serving Mammon.

In this lamentation over Babylon and her fall we have a faithful picture of the covetousness and luxury which prevails throughout spiritual Babylon, and of the end which awaits these many worshippers of mammon. What is the treasure recommended to us in Scripture? That which is in heaven. See Matt. 6. 20. What is the use of this world's wealth there taught? To make to ourselves friends who will receive us into everlasting habitations. See Luke 16. 9. And what might we have looked for as the fruit of these precepts, after the operation of eighteen centuries? Surely no less than a distaste for luxury, a conviction that it is more blessed to give than to receive, an anxiety to find poor to whom to give, and such a prevalence of industry, and sobriety, such watchfulness against waste, such abhorrence of excess, that there would have been scarcely any poor to be relieved.

But what now is the real character of Christendom? An almost universal love of money; a desire to possess it for its own sake, or for the sake of the good things which it will purchase, thinly veiled under the pretence of a desire to do good with it; an ostentatious display of finery in dress, and furniture, and equipage; a profuse and selfish expenditure in the preparation of our meals, and a fastidious refinement of society in the manner of eating them. The enjoyment of these good things to any great extent is engrossed by a few, but coveted no less eagerly by the many. And the same vanity and gross sensuality, the same dishonesty, Sabbath breaking, and slavish drudgery to mammon, are manifest in all ranks of society. Few labour with their hands that they may have to give to them that need, see Eph. 4. 28; and fewer still can be found to go out unto all nations, in order to teach and preach the Gospel. See Matt. 28. 19. But there is no limit to the toil undertaken, or to the ingenuity and enterprise displayed, in trading for the increase of riches, or in ministering to the luxury of the rich. Even slaves are bought and sold, nay and bred, and kidnapped, where it may be done safely and gainfully. Even souls are sacrificed, without compunction, where profit can be made by sin promoted.

And this is the state of things in Christian countries. Yea, it is carried to the utmost height in that very city which pretends to be mother church of all, in the palace of that very Pope who calls himself the Vicar of Christ. And it is chiefly by means of popish influence long ascendant, that this state of things so universally prevails. No wonder that Babylon must fall! No wonder that the suldeness of her desolation, and the smoke of her burning, should raise throughout the nations which have shared her pleasures, an universal cry of woe! Oh ye that live deliciously with her, come out of her, whilst yet ye may; for behold, in one hour her judgment comes! Ye merchants, which are made rich by her, renounce your unhalloved gains; for behold, "in one hour so great riches is come to nought!" Ye shipmasters and mariners, who go forth upon her errands, carrying out to distant lands, not the tidings of salvation, but her many novel arts of sensuality, her many new implements of war; behold the end of all your voyages, "in one hour is she made desolate!" And alas, alas, thou great city, thou mighty city, see the vanity of the friendship of the world! See thy friends how far off they stand, more afraid of thy torment, than concerned for thy fall; lamenting, not for thy distress and desolation, but because they can no longer share thy pleasures, no longer be made rich by thy trade! Such is the hollowness of worldly friendship. Such is the vanity of worldly wealth. Such is the end which awaits the servants and worshippers of mammon. God forbid that we should thus cease from serving Him! God grant we may serve Him, and Him only, in all things, at all costs, henceforth for ever!

The rejoicing over Babylon.

20 Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.

22 And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be,

shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

23 And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

§ 720. That we must give account of our stewardship.

The servants of God and those of mammon are in nothing more opposed than in their sorrows and their joys. For instance, "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Luke 15. 10. But this is a matter of grief to the worldly minded. They have lost one of their company, one of their party, one who helped to keep them in countenance in their sins. And Satan, whom they serve, has lost one of his subjects, one whom he designed to make his own for ever. In like manner, whilst the worldly minded selfishly lament over the fall of "that great city Babylon," there goes forth this summons to the servants of the Lord, "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her." Let us try to feel the joy that angels feel, and for the things which make angels joyful. Let us study what has been written by prophets and apostles, that we may learn from them to mourn for sin, and to rejoice in the glory of the Lord. Let us shed tears of heartfelt sorrow over the abundance of the iniquity which surrounds us, as well as over our own manifold offences. Let us have our mourning turned into joy, by the assurances of God's redeeming love, and of Christ's final triumph over all his enemies.

The proclamation to rejoice is addressed to heaven as well as earth. And accordingly a mighty angel takes up "a stone like a great millstone," and casts it "into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." This is an action significant of the angel's triumph, and of the violent destruction of Babylon. And both these things are further set forth in the angel's words which follow, describing all that used to go on constantly in the city, and declaring that shall henceforth no more take place. The sounds of music shall no more be heard. No workman any more shall work, nor millstone grind, nor candle shine; nor bride or bridegroom any more rejoice. So great shall be the ruin, so entire the desolation of that city, whose merchants have been hitherto the great men of the earth; and that, because by her sorceries all nations were deceived.

Let us examine then, have any of these sorceries still influence with us? Let us examine, do we suffer our affection to be engrossed by any of these transitory pleasures or employments? Here we see how soon they come to nought. Here we may learn, not indeed to neglect our business on earth, or to refuse the enjoyments which God here gives us, but thankfully to use them as his gifts, watchfully to remember that we are but stewards for a time, and diligently to prepare for the hour when it shall be said to us, "Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward." Luke 16. 2. Let us think of this, when next we hear the voice of harpers, musicians, pipers, trumpeters, when next we see a bridegroom and a bride: these sounds however sweet must cease, these joys however excellent must come to nought, and we also who partake of them must depart. God be praised for the pleasures which He gives us here! God grant that we may so use them, or refuse them, in due season, as to partake of pleasures for evermore. Or if it be by skilful workmanship that our taste is gratified, and our comforts are enlarged, if the mill fail not, when we want it, to prepare our food, nor the candle to give us light in the night season; for these things let us also give thanks to God, these things let us use to God's glory, these things let us be ready to resign when He requires, and when we are laid where no such skill can any more avail us, in a place of darkness and in the grave.

At the fall of Babylon there will be found in her not only "the blood of prophets, and of saints," but also "of all that were slain upon the earth." She has to answer not only for the putting to death God's servants purposely, but for the wanton destruction of human life, in the many wars which her false system allows and promotes. Let us be aware that when our time shall come, we also must give account for many things more than we have done ourselves, even for that which we have promoted or allowed wilfully in others. Let us watch therefore that we partake not in other men's sins, and especially in this sin of bloodshed. Let us labour for peace. Let us abominate war. Let us shrink from all the work of warfare. For let us remember how surely the day is coming when "the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Isa. 26. 21.

Alleluia at the judgment of Babylon, and the marriage of the Lamb.

1 And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2 For true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

3 And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

4 And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him both small and great.

6 And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

8 And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

9 And he saith unto me, Write, ¹ Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God.

10 And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, ² See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

§ 721. That we must be made ready for closer union with Christ.

When we are told of Alleluia sung in heaven, over the judgment of the apostate church of Rome, it is important to bear in mind how large has been the extent of evil, promoted by that lewd woman in the world: how gross the dishonour done to God, and to his Gospel, how great the wrong to Christ, and to his saints. Reviewing then the history of the whole church, by which we always mean both ministers and people, let us consider through what a long extent of time, and over what a large proportion of professing Christians, the Romish church, in its harlot state, has exercised either open sway or secret influence. Let us observe what a foul blot it has spread over nearly the whole page of the Gospel; how it has corrupted nearly all the doctrines and ordinances of Christ, and made them at once hurtful to believers, and vile in the sight of infidels. Let us mark how it has sanctioned covetousness, and pride, and profligacy, by the force of example in its high places. Nor let us forget to what a degree it still holds us back from primitive Christianity, by that fearful reaction in men's minds; which, because the ministry was unduly exalted, and the Word arbitrarily suppressed, because uniformity was supported by persecution, and submission enforced by strength, now leads them to make light of the ministerial authority, and to trifle with the Holy Scriptures, to glory in divisions, and to make a merit of insubordination. And shall we not, on grounds like these, rejoice to see her smoke rise up for ever? When the elders, and the four living creatures, and the "much people in heaven," are all worshipping God on this great occasion, when they call on all his servants both small and great to praise the Lord; shall not we say, "Amen; Alleluia?" And shall we not also be glad, and rejoice, and give honour to God, because "the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready?"

This is an event which is to take place at about the same period with the fall of the mother of harlots. And this marriage is a figurative description of the intimate union of purpose and affection, which will then be perfected between the saints and Christ. So enraptured was St. John at these joyful tidings, that he fell down to pay worship to the messenger. But the angel forbids him; reminding him that he was but his fellow servant, a servant of God, together with the apostle and with his brethren the prophets. For they had the testimony of Jesus, and it was their office to make it known unto the world; as it was the office of the ministering angel to help in making it known to St. John. Whilst we watch that we give no worship except to God, let us endeavour to be thankful both for the words of his prophets, and for the ministry of his angels. And let us lay to heart what is here written by their means, for our instruction, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." "These," let us observe, "are the true sayings of God." In this blessedness we may rely that it is sure, we may trust that it is unchangeable. Though we know not exactly what here it means, we may not doubt that it is a joy more excellent than any words on earth can signify, a happiness which is but faintly expressed by the most happy of all occasions here, a marriage. The wife is said to make "herself ready." But on the other hand it is "granted" to her, or given, "that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white." Thus it is given unto the saints to be made righteous; and at the same time it is expected that they work out their own salvation. May it be our study to make ourselves ready for the marriage of the Lamb! May God graciously impart to us a wedding garment! May He clothe us "with the garments of salvation;" and cover us "with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels!" Isa. 61. 10.

The great slaughter inflicted by the word of God.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew but he himself.

13 ¹ And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of God.

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15 And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

16 And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, ¹ KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God;

18 That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

19 And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

20 And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

21 And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

§ 722. The infatuation of unbelievers.

The great slaughter of the wicked, which has been already foreshewn under the sixth trumpet and sixth vial, is here further set forth at length. The rider on the white horse is "called Faithful and True," names often given to our blessed Lord; who seems now about to fulfil the prophetic words of David, "Gird thee with thy sword upon thy thigh, O thou most mighty: according to thy worship and renown." Ps. 45. 4. "And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood," according to this his own saying in Isaiah, "their blood shall be sprinkled on my garments, and I will stain all my raiment." Is. 63. 3. And lest we should still have any doubt of who He is, we are told that besides his name, "that no man knew," He is also called "The Word of God." Nay further there is one other name of his here set down, "King of kings, and Lord of lords!" It is therefore the Son of God Himself who thus goes forth to battle, followed by his saints, also on white horses, in token of their certain victory. But lest we should forget that all these are symbols, lest we should think that Jesus and the heavenly armies are really about to fight with men on earth, it is to be noted that their only armour is fine linen clean and white, that is to say, "the righteousness of saints;" ver. 8; and that it is out of the mouth of Christ that the sharp sword goeth, with which He is to smite the nations. Whence it seems to be probable that his victory will consist in the prevalence of the Gospel over error and imposture; and that the slaughter of them that oppose will be brought to pass by means of men wicked like themselves. For thus it is that in time past, God has been used to rule the nations with a rod of iron. Thus it is that He has hitherto overruled the evil passions of sinful men to work out his own righteous purposes. Still they are God's purposes. Still it is with a rod of iron that Christ will rule. Symbols are signs of realities, and these realities more great and glorious than the signs. Though "the winepress" be a figure, there is such a thing as "the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God." And it is here plainly signified, that Christ, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world, will also consume sinners in his displeasure.

But by whatever means this particular judgment may be executed, there can be little doubt that a very great slaughter is here foretold. No language can more forcibly describe the entire rout, and confusion, and destruction of the armies, which will then be gathered together against the Lord. The whole power of all the kingdoms that have been grafted on the Roman empire, all the arts of the corrupt church with which they are so closely leagued, "the beast," and "the false prophet," unite all their forces; under a delusive expectation of establishing their reign. But behold their host is vanquished, and they themselves are taken. The fowls of the air are glutted with the carcasses of their followers. And they themselves are "cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." Does it seem scarcely possible that men should be so infatuated as to think of thus fighting against God, in the midst of the manifestation of his judgments? Let us turn to the case of the Jews worshipping a molten calf, whilst yet encamped at the foot of mount Sinai. See Ex. 32. 1—4. Let us look to ourselves, and consider whether our own oft-repeated sins are not committed against light and knowledge. And let us learn that it is not lack of evidence from God, but lack of faith in man, which is sufficient to account for sin. Let us understand how true it is, that if we hear not Moses and the prophets, neither should we be persuaded though one were to rise from the dead. See Luke 16. 31.

Satan is bound, and saints reign with Christ a thousand years.

1 And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years;

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

§ 723. The millennium; what it is, and what we may learn from it.

After the seventh trumpet has sounded, after the seventh vial has been poured out, after the other different views of detached parts of this whole history have all been brought down to the last period, we are here told very remarkable things which are to happen during a thousand years, commonly known by the name of the millennium. That this implies a supremacy of the Gospel and its principles, in the administration of affairs on earth, is far from impossible; That it also signifies real spiritual prosperity in the church is highly probable. That from these two circumstances there would follow such an abundance of happiness to man, and glory to God, as this world never yet has yielded, seems certain.

Let this then be our view of the millennium. For "a thousand years," perhaps the seventh thousand after six thousand past away since the fall, Satan is bound by a great chain in the bottomless pit. For "a thousand years" he is shut up, and sealed; so that he can no more deceive the nations, no more set the kingdoms of the earth in array against the cause of Christ, no more, in the world which is within, set the flesh in successful opposition to the spirit. For "a thousand years" the spirit of the martyrs who have hitherto borne faithful testimony to Christ, under the oppression of the unbelieving world will revive in generations yet unborn; who shall exercise the sovereignty of the earth according to the rules of Christ in the Gospel. For "a thousand years" the generation of the wicked shall not revive, or at least shall bear so small a proportion to the righteous, as to be entirely subject to their controul. For "a thousand years" they that have part in this first resurrection, are as priests of God and of Christ, in conjunction with whom they reign; and though still subject, in due course to die in the flesh, they are delivered from the power of "the second death."

No mention is here made of Christ Himself reigning in the body on this earth. His saints will enjoy his presence then, much in the same manner as they enjoy it now. Only there will be very many more of them to enjoy it. The great army of unbelievers having been slaughtered, the faithful will possess the abundance of the earth. The great enemy of souls being confined, the Gospel will have free course, and will be glorified. The Holy Spirit, no longer so perversely resisted, will be poured out upon all flesh in abundance. See Joel 2. 28. All shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest. See Jer. 31. 34. All shall serve God, not as now grudgingly and of necessity, but freely, joyfully, and thankfully. Unity will at length prevail over divisions in religion, and in the affairs of earth there will be peace instead of war, truth for falsehood, honesty for fraud; industry, sobriety, and frugality, for idleness, intemperance, and waste.

How delightful is the thought of such a time as this on earth, when the corruption of our nature will be healed by the medicine of the Physician of souls, that healing, now so little valued, then so universally received! when the sufferings to which sin has made us heirs, will be mitigated by the general diffusion of real knowledge and true charity! when all the good creatures of God will be used with thankfulness and communicated with alacrity! when the waste places of the earth will be cultivated, and filled with worshippers not of images or idols, but of our Father which is in heaven! In such a period possibly more souls will be saved, than have been lost since Adam's sin; God will be more loved, Christ more glorified, than has been seen since the foundation of the world. But, let us remember, even they that shall be thus "blessed and holy," cannot have a better covenant, surer promises, a more sufficient sacrifice, or more merciful High Priest, than we ourselves are privileged to enjoy. Let us be faithful, in the midst of infidelity. Let us be holy, whilst iniquity abounds. Let us bear witness to Jesus, though it were to cost our lives; let us refuse to worship either beast or image whilst yet they have supremacy on the earth; and whatsoever may be our interest in the first resurrection, in the second we shall be sure to rise to life everlasting.

Satan cast into the lake of fire. The last judgment.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, ¹Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another ²book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and ^{||}hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

² Ch. 3. 5.

^{||} Or, the grave.

§ 724. The interval between death and judgment.

We have considered the first resurrection to be a symbol, like the resurrection of the witnesses, see ch. 11. 11, a symbol of a miraculous revival in true religion. The second resurrection is that which will take place, when all that have ever lived shall stand before God to be judged according to their works. And the second death, another symbolical expression, will be inflicted on those who are cast into the lake of fire. But previous to these latter events, Satan is to be "loosed out of his prison." He is once more to go at large amongst the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, called Gog and Magog, as being enemies of God's people. See Ezek. 38. 2. These may possibly be descendants of those nations from the East, who are to slay the great army of the beast and the prophet. Ch. 16. 12, 19, 20. And so great is Satan's influence for evil, that he will be able to deceive a large multitude, and to gather them together in the vain attempt to war against the kingdoms of Christ. But though Christ's people shall not "learn war any more," Is. 2. 4, their camp and beloved city shall be preserved unhurt from the arrows of the impious besiegers. Fire will come down from God out of heaven, and devour the adversaries. "And the devil that deceived them" will be cast into the same "lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." Thus will end all influence of evil. Thus will they that fight against Christ be sure to come to nought. "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord: but let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might." Judges 5. 31.

And now is seen the throne of final judgment. And before the face of Him that sat on it, "the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." So glorious is his presence; so powerful his word; so sure his promise that there shall be new heavens and a new earth, wherein righteousness will abide for ever. See 2 Pet. 3. 13. But first, "the dead, small and great, stand before God." They must enter into that presence, from which earth and heaven shrink. "And the books were opened." They must give an account of their stewardship. "And another book was opened, which is the book of life;" full of the names of such as shall be saved. See ch. 3. 5. "And they were judged every man according to his works;" according to the works "done in his body," 2 Cor. 5. 10, according to the life he has lived on earth. And in this judgment every child of Adam must appear, the sea as well as the land giving up "the dead which were in it;" and both the bodies which had died, and the souls which were in the place of departed spirits, here called hell, being now called forth to stand before the judgment seat of Christ. And thenceforth there is no more such separation of soul and body, for "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." And therein also were cast all, who after judgment held, were not found meet to be "partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." Col. 1. 12. And let it not be objected, that if so very much is yet to take place, before the judgment day of Christ, the righteous, who now die in the Lord, have a long time to wait for the consummation of their bliss. Let us consider how long our forefathers have already waited, the martyrs, the apostles, the prophets, the patriarchs. Let us observe how the "souls of them that were slain for the word of God," though bidden to wait for judgment some time longer, were seen "under the altar" in heaven. Ch. 6. 9. 11. Let us remember in how many passages throughout this book, the departed saints, though their glory may be yet imperfect, are represented as being with the Lord. And let us not forget how probable it is, that to them, when they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, a thousand years may be, as with the Lord, "but one day." 2 Pet. 3. 8. And thus we shall still be able to feel a lively conviction that the time is short, that the Lord is at hand, and "that the Judge standeth before the door." James 5. 9.

The new heaven and new earth.

1 And ¹I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

2 And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

4 ²And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, ³Behold I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write⁴ for these words are true and faithful.

6 And he said unto me, It is done. ⁵I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. ⁶I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

7 He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

8 But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

§ 725. The promises and terrors of the Lord.

In all that is written concerning things yet to come on earth, we must be aware that there is less of certainty in the interpretation of the Scripture figures, than in regard to things which have already come to pass. How much more, when we read of “a new heaven and a new earth,” must we humbly confess our inability to decide, among the views which have been taken of these passages, by the wisest and the best of our fellow Christians! And yet all Scripture is written for our edification. And of this book in particular it is said, “Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein.” See ch. 1. 3. 22. 7. And to deem that any one part of it is altogether unprofitable, seems likely to expose us to what is said of those who “take away from the words of the book of this prophecy.” Ch. 22. 19. Let us then endeavour, by the study of these affecting images, to raise our thoughts from earth to heaven, and to kindle the warmth of our desires, towards the things which God has prepared for them that love Him. See 1 Cor. 2. 9.

Heaven and earth shall pass away, see Matt. 24. 35, heaven and earth, and the sea also. Whatever be our eternal felicity, it will not consist in the same pleasures as those which are afforded by the world wherein now we live. Our state and condition may however be represented, in some faint degree, both by the figure of a holy city, “new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven,” and by that of “a bride adorned for her husband.” Now of the old Jerusalem, we know that it was “built as a city that is at unity in itself.” Ps. 122. 3. This then we may be assured will be the case in heaven, we shall be all of one heart and of one mind. And of a bride we know that it is the foremost wish of her heart to please her husband. This therefore will form a part of our heavenly happiness, the pleasure of pleasing Christ. “Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men,” this is another figure, and conveys to us the notion of an intimate communion between men and their Maker; as if God were to dwell with them and they with Him; they being still his people, and He their God. “And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.” For in truth there will be no crying, no sorrow, no pain, no death. “For the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new.” Thus we are again reminded, in the midst of these figures, that they are figures only, that our eternal life will be altogether different from that which we lead on earth, altogether more excellent, altogether new.

It is the Judge Himself, whose voice is heard assuring us, that “these words are true and faithful.” It is Jesus, who for the full confirmation of our faith, proclaims, “It is done.” For it is He who has before described Himself, as “Alpha and Omega;” ch. 1. 8; and who in other passages, see Isa. 55. 1, John 4. 10, 14, and 7. 37, has promised to give to them that are athirst, “the fountain of the water of life freely.” Yes; the pleasures at God’s right hand flow for evermore. See Ps. 16. 12. And the figure by which their abundance and continual increase is described, is a fountain, or spring, or river. Whilst his wrath is measured out in vials or bowls, which however large, at last are emptied; or is expressed by a lake which though it be sometimes dried up, is not commonly or greatly increased. So exact is the fitness of each figurative word used throughout this book! So many more than we are able to set forth are the senses and uses they contain! The fountain we have in constant request. Let it constantly remind us of the water of life, its abundance, and how freely it is given, how ample is our heavenly inheritance, wherein God will receive us as his sons. The lake we do not so often meet with. Nor have we need to dwell so often upon the terrors of the Lord, as upon the assurances of his love. But sometimes we must call to mind that these terrors are. Sometimes it will be for our benefit to be put in remembrance, how surely the transgressors, either in point of faith or in practice, will be condemned to the second death.

The holy city new Jerusalem.

9 And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.

10 And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,

11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal;

12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel:

13 On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

15 And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

16 And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

§ 726. The excellency of things heavenly.

It was "one of the seven angels which had the seven vials," that shewed St. John the judgment of Babylon. It is also one of the seven who now points out to his attention "the bride, the Lamb's wife," or, in other words, "the holy Jerusalem," both figures meaning the community of the saints. See ver. 2. Under the latter of these two figures, their state of heavenly happiness is here described at considerable length. All things which in our present world give us the notion of strength, and beauty, and grandeur, are here collected, to set forth the perfection of this city. And yet many things seem to be purposely so expressed, as to shew us that no real walls and gates are meant, but "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. 5. 1. God grant that we may be helped by these awakening images to set our affection on things above! God help us to see that the very best of things below are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us! See Rom. 8. 18.

On the twelve gates of the city are written the names "of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." This turns our thoughts to God's elder covenant; and it reminds us, that as the two covenants had but one object, so the two classes of Christians, the Jewish and the Gentile, are but one people. For these gates of the city stand open to all the quarters of the earth, to admit all of every nation that believe. "And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." And thus St. Paul also describes the Christian church as "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone;" Eph. 2. 20; that is to say, built upon the doctrine which they taught, and by the ministers whom they ordained. The length and breadth and height of the city are next mentioned, "according to the measure of a man," which was the measurement used by "the angel." And their measure is such as to prove the great extent of the church in heaven, and that there is nothing therein wanting to perfection. The materials of the wall and of the city were at once beautiful and strong and lasting; the purity and solidity of gold being united to the transparency of glass, perhaps to shew us that what is here most frail becomes in heaven altogether incorruptible. And whilst the street is made of this golden glass, each gate is of a single pearl, and each foundation is garnished with a distinct precious stone; these jewels which we here so greatly prize serving to teach us the inestimable value of that inheritance, which we are so apt to set at nought.

And in heaven, let us observe, the most opposite of qualities, as here we count them, are reconciled and combined in one. What is most bright and clear is at the same time weighty. What is most precious is also most plentiful. Here, on the contrary, what is really excellent is usually also scarce; and were it abundant, we should be apt to count it vile. So much does our estimate of value depend upon the sense of exclusive possession! Oh that we may henceforth prize most highly not that which may most distinguish ourselves, but that which may most benefit our brethren! Oh that we may seek most earnestly, not that which most ministers to our own honour, but that which most redounds to the glory of God!

The new Jerusalem further described.

22 And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 ¹ And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 ² And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

25 ³ And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

³ Isa. 60. 11.

§ 727. The respect due to real greatness.

That there was no temple seen in the new Jerusalem is a circumstance which most plainly shews it to be a type of heavenly glory. For where, except in heaven, will it be fitting for the church to have no house of prayer? where, except in the midst of that manifest presence of God, which is itself the holy of holies? See Heb. 9. 24. There indeed the whole city is one house of prayer, and all they say is one continued song of praise. "For the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." As it is in God that we now "live, and move, and have our being," Acts 17. 28, so it is in Him, and in his ever blessed Son, that we shall, then perfect praise for ever. And as we shall need no place to be set apart for worship when God is "all in all," 1 Cor. 15. 28, so neither shall we want the sun to shine by day, nor the moon to give light by night; "for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." At present, with all the help of the light we have, it is but darkly that we see, only for a short distance, and only for short seasons, with long intervals of night and dimness. The exercise of our senses needs frequent interruption for repose. And our understanding, however wonderfully formed, however spiritually enlightened, can know only "in part." "But then, face to face." 1 Cor. 13. 12. Then, our knowledge, like our sight, will be perfect. Then, there will be no seasons either of night or of ignorance, no intervals of doubting, no suspense of faith, but only light and love for ever.

After hearing of this city that it is lighted by the glory of God and of the Lamb, it may seem but a small matter that the kings of the earth "bring the glory and honour of the nations into it." But such is God's grace and favour towards the children of men, He represents Himself as being glorified by our unworthy services, by our undeserved salvation. And whatever there is on earth that is great and excellent, whatever there is of power, might, majesty, and dominion, it has no other real value in the end, except as it may be brought in unto the city of the Lord. In that city, the gates "shall not be shut at all by day;" that is to say, they shall be for ever open; "for there shall be no night there." No security shall be needful against enemies, when the last enemy shall have been destroyed. No barrier shall be set up against strangers; for all the dwellers in that land are of one family, and it is the pleasure of the Lord that his house should be filled. See Luke 14. 23. How encouraging is the information here conveyed, that there shall be "nations of them which are saved!" that there shall be so large a multitude in that city, privileged to "walk in the light of it!" And how glad we ought to feel on being told, that "the kings of the earth" too shall be there! that many of those who now discharge these most burdensome of this world's duties, the ministers of God unto the rest for good, see Rom. 13. 4, however much they may be envied by the proud, hated by the turbulent, and slandered by the vile, if they can but give an account of their stewardship acceptable unto the King of kings, will there reign with Him for ever!

Far be from us that unchristian spirit which would lead us to "despise dominion," and to "speak evil of dignities!" Jude 8. Far be from us that narrowness of heart and mind, which, because it cannot reach to greatness, affects to despise the great! Only let us never forget, that none are really great who are not also really good; and that the greatest of all greatness upon earth is to do most for the glory of God. They who have done nothing for God's glory, much more they who do much to his dishonour, have no part in that inheritance. However high their rank, however powerful their kingdom upon earth, if they be such as defile others, workers of abomination, utterers of falsehood, they cannot enter, though the gates be open; for they are not "written in the Lamb's book of life." Whilst therefore we honour rank on earth, let us carry on our thoughts to the thrones which are in heaven, to the Sovereign from whom there is no appeal, and with whom there is no respect of persons.

Lord, may our names be found written in thy book! may we be allowed to enter in, and share thy glory! may we so use the light which Thou now givest us, so worship in the temples where Thou now art present, as to be made meet to dwell in that heavenly city, where Thou art both the temple and the light, both the Lamb and also the King!

The river and the tree of life. The witness of John.

•1 And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:

4 And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads.

5 ¹ And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord

God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

6 And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

7 Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

8 And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.

9 Then saith he unto me, ² See thou do it not: for I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

§ 728. That we must watch against idolatry.

"A pure river of water" is one of the most pleasing images presented to the mind in this view of the heavenly city. The river in the new Jerusalem consists "of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." And in like manner the tree which there flourishes, "on either side of the river," is "the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." And yet the nations which are there, need no such healing as we are here continually in want of. For "there shall be no more curse." And therefore there will be no sickness, no disease, no death, no hunger, and no thirst; no want, and yet abundant supply; no change, and yet perpetual variety. That river always flows. That tree is always bearing fruit. That fruit is always fresh. And they that taste thereof are always satisfied. Such are the pleasures which are at God's right hand. Such is the joy of being servants of God and of the Lamb. They have his throne in the midst of them. They see Him face to face. They have his name upon their foreheads. They dwell in the light of his countenance for ever. They serve, and yet they reign. They "reign for ever and ever." They fulfil God's will, and it is his will that they share his kingdom. They do all his pleasure. And it is his pleasure to make them partakers of his joy. Oh that we may be his servants now, and be then admitted to his throne! Oh that we may now abhor the deeds of darkness, and then dwell in light for ever!

"These sayings are faithful and true." This seems to be spoken by the angel, last mentioned as communicating with St. John. And he adds that it is the Lord God of the holy prophets, the same Jehovah Elohim who "spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets," Heb. 1. 1, which sent him, to shew unto his servants, through St. John, "the things which must shortly be done." This is the very same account with which this book begins. See ch. 1. 1. And in like manner the notice that our Lord comes quickly, and the blessing pronounced on those who keep the sayings of this book, are a repetition of what is written at the beginning of it. See ch. 1. 3. Let us renew our thankfulness to our Lord, for vouchsafing to give us this light of prophecy, this standing witness of God's providence, these salutary warnings, these precious promises, these rules for our conduct, these instructions for our faith. Let us repeat our endeavours to keep what here is written, to hold fast by the convictions which we have hence derived. And let us over and over again lay to heart our Lord's assurance, that He comes quickly; until we learn not to dread his appearing, but to look for, and hasten forward, as far as lies in our power, the coming of the day of God. See 2 Pet. 3. 12.

"And I John saw these things, and heard them." This is the testimony of the apostle, to complete the chain of evidence, reaching through him and the angel from God unto his church. And by way of confirming his statement, he repeats a circumstance which happened at the close of the vision, and which had happened once before in the midst of it. It was an error of his own; and yet he twice records it. Twice he tells us how near he was to worshipping the angel; that he may twice certify us how deeply he was affected by the vision, and twice impress on us this lesson, "worship God," and Him only. Far then be from us all approaches to idolatry! Far be from us all such homage paid to saints or angels, as would be robbing God of the honour due only to Himself. By whatsoever means, and by whatsoever of his ministers, He vouchsafes to make known his will, to Him be all the glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

Promises and threatenings repeated.

10 And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand.

11 He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

12 And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

13 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

14 Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

15 For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

16 I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.

17 And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, 'If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book.

19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

20 He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus.

§ 729. Prayer for the enjoyment of our Lord's promises.

At the close of the prophecies of Daniel, the prophet is directed to seal the book, until "the time of the end," when "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12. 4. 9. But St. John, whose prophecies are in close connexion with those of Daniel, is bidden not to seal his prophecies, because "the time is at hand." That which before was hidden is now revealed. Oh that whilst the knowledge of evil grows apace, the knowledge of the truth may be increased! Far be it from the ignorant and the wicked to remain unmoved in their iniquity, provoking God, by persevering in their unrighteousness and filthiness, to give them up to a reprobate mind! Far be it from the righteous and the holy, not to continue steadfast in the service of Christ; seeing how soon He comes, and his reward with Him, "to give to every man according as his work shall be!"

He repeats it that He is "Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." See ch. 1. 11. Let us repeat our resolution, that whatsoever we have to do, shall be begun, continued, and ended in Him. He renews his assurance of the blessedness which awaits them that do his commandments, reminding us of their right to the tree of life, and of their free access to the heavenly Jerusalem. Let us again and again resolve, and strive, and pray, that we may both know his will, and love to do it, both keep his commandments, and not count them grievous. He renews his warning, that there must be some shut out from the brightness of his presence in his holy city. Let us again and again enliven our abhorrence of sin. Let us watch continually and strive manfully, against such sins as are here mentioned, the presumption of dogs, the devilish arts of sorcerers, fornication, murder, idolatry, and both the uttering a lie, and the taking pleasure in falsehood.

"I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." Lord, keep us always in the bosom of thy church, make us always glad to receive thy testimony! "I am the root and the offspring of David." Make us sensible, we pray Thee, that though Thou art David's Son, it was yet meet that he should call Thee, Lord! See Ps. 110. 1. "And the bright and morning star." Make us reflect, whenever we see that light in heaven, how it is Thou that bringest the day into our souls! "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come." Let us listen when the Spirit speaks. Let us join with the bride in saying what the Spirit says. Thanks be to Thee, that we hear thy word! Let it lead us to long for thy presence. Let it make us thirst for the river of the water of life. Thanks be to Thee, that Thou hast invited us to take it freely.

And do Thou, merciful Saviour, who hast manifested thy concern for sinners, not less by thy timely warnings, than by thy precious promises, grant unto us, who have now heard "the words of the prophecy of this book," that we may never venture, either in thought, or word, or deed, to add unto, or take away from, that which Thou hast revealed. Never let us have to bear the dreadful plagues, which in this book are threatened. Never let us lose our part of the joy and glory, which in this book are surely promised. But "come," Thou faithful and true witness, "come," as Thou hast promised, "quickly." Come, ere we are overpowered by our enemy: come, ere we are betrayed by ourselves. "Amen," even as Thou hast promised; amen, even as we have prayed; amen, even before again we fall, before ever we once more transgress thy will, or walk unworthy of thy love; "even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The blessing at the end.

21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

§ 730. Prayer for the grace of Christ.

How edifying is ~~this~~ prayer of the apostle, in behalf of every one who should hear or read what he had written, that the grace of Jesus Christ may be with all! How well does it instruct us that without this grace we hear and read in vain! This book itself, yea this whole volume, is the gift of God through Christ. And in his hands is the disposal of our hearts and minds, and the stewardship of that light from above, whereby alone we can understand his sayings, or long to partake of his glory. Yes, but for the grace of Christ, the things of God are foolishness unto us. Holiness is hateful in our eyes, and heaven itself unwelcome to our thoughts, except our blessed Lord first move us, by his Spirit, to discern his revelation spiritually. See 1 Cor. 2. 14. Let it then be our prayer that this grace be with us. Let it be our earnest supplication unto the Father, that He will be pleased to give us the gift of the Holy Ghost, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

O Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who by thy Son hast revealed unto us, in this book, some things which have already been fulfilled, and some which are yet for to come, enlighten our minds to apply what Thou hast taught us, to our great and endless comfort. In the past let us see the proof of thy marvellous foreknowledge. In the future let us look to see it made further manifest. For the present, let us abhor those corruptions of thy truth, those abuses so wide spread over thy church, which Thou hast here pointed out to our abhorrence. And let us maintain that purity and stedfastness of faith, that singleness of devotion, that warmth of love, which Thou hast here held up to our regard. Help us by thy grace, for otherwise we perish, help us to escape the wrath to come. Help us, for thy dear Son's sake, for we deserve no good thing ourselves, help us to obtain the glory that shall be revealed. Help us to overcome, to continue faithful unto death. And give us, at our departure from this transitory world, the gracious gift of life eternal, to the honour and glory of thy Son our Lord; to whom, with Thee, and the Holy Ghost, be all praise in all the churches, henceforth, for ever and ever. "Amen."

POSTSCRIPT.

In concluding this Commentary on the New Testament, the writer may perhaps do some service to those who are engaged in the same studies, by here stating the opinions he has formed, as to the character and value of kindred works, which he has chiefly found occasion to consult, and for which he desires at the same time to express his thankfulness to the Giver of all good gifts.

The Homilies of Chrysostom are rich in matter, and most impressive in style. They abound in illustrations and applications, which for the most part do not appear to have yet found their way into the stream of English Theology.

Poole's Synopsis and Bloomfield's Synopsis contain valuable collections of the most approved comments, from abroad as well as from our own country, up to the date of their respective publications. Bloomfield's Greek Testament with English notes, is as eminently distinguished by correctness of judgment, as his former work is for depth of research. Of all the commentators referred to by Poole, Calvin and Grotius best deserve a distinct perusal.

Baxter's work on the New Testament, like most of his practical divinity, is plain, forcible, and improving. Henry has a great deal to say on every passage, and says it effectively. For fervour of devotion, as well as for fertility of invention, he is greatly to be valued. But his applications are often forced, his notions sometimes mean, and his language not only plain but homely. Hammond gives us the result of laborious study. Burkitt, though scarcely more than a compiler, has produced a book better fitted for family reading, in point of style and method, than any of its predecessors.

Patrick, Whitby, and Lowth, have been only occasionally consulted.

The chief excellency of Scott lies in his enforcing faithfully those doctrines of the Gospel, which had been for some time previously neglected. It may be thought, however, that he has a little tinged them with the spirit of party; and that he insists on them somewhat more frequently, than the texts bear him out, and therefore in a different proportion to that which is assigned to them in the word of God. He is also apt to write as if he knew more than Scripture tells us concerning God's decrees.

Doddridge has been usually overrated. And he wrote under circumstances which must have greatly tempted him to overrate himself. But he has done good service for many years; and he has many striking thoughts, though somewhat affectedly expressed.

Macknight on the Epistles abounds in repetition of matter, which is seldom original, though oftentimes curious and instructive.

It is to be regretted that the Family Bible edited by Mant and D'Oyley so often notices sceptical objections, which but for this publication would be never known to very many of its readers. It contains much to inform the mind; but not so much, in proportion, to enlighten the conscience, or to warm the heart.

Boys' Exposition deserves more success than it appears to have obtained. For perspicuity of expression, and power of application it will often bear comparison with the best. It is however rather a series of short sermons on detached texts, than a continuous commentary.

Quesnel has more of the spirit of Chrysostom than almost any of the moderns. And there is an English translation, in which the Romish errors are blotted out.

In some parts of this work, additional assistance has been derived from books of Scripture. And on the Book of Revelation in particular, such not always found, in the treatises of Woodhouse, Newton, Bowdler, Gaur, and many others. They are mentioned in the order in which they were.

The learned works of Hartwell Horne on the Scripture generally, of G. Townsend on their Arrangement, and of E. Greswell on the Harmony and Parables, have afforded continual assistance.

The Bishop of Chester's Exposition is probably well known and highly valued by most of the readers of this book; being in like manner adapted to the purpose of family reading.

Besides the aid derived from these and other publications, the writer has to acknowledge how particularly he is indebted to the private assistance of a friend, who not long since was also a fellowlabourer in this parish; whose faithfulness and skill have largely helped throughout the work, not only in correcting the errors of the press, but in amending the defects of the matter printed. But as he has never published, and therefore cannot be generally consulted, he may be indulged in the suppression of his name. For he is one who in all he does, desires earnestly to join in this words with which the work is now concluded: To God be all the glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.
